Are You On The Wire?

SHE was the Association President of the Woman's Missionary Societies and was hurrying to a meeting. She picked up the December number of Missions to read on the street car. A little boy moved over to make room for her and then braced himself against her knee. For a few minutes he looked at the picture.

"What are they doing?" he inquired pointing to a little group of Chinese children.

"They are waiting for a teacher. When the teacher comes she is going to tell them about Jesus. Do you know about Jesus?" asked the Association President.

"Sure!" was the reply in a tone of offended dignity.

"Who told you?" asked the Association President.

"My mother did—a long while ago" in a tone of superior wisdom.

"These little boys' mothers can't tell them about Jesus because they never heard of him themselves."

"Some mothers!" was the only comment. Just then the street car stopped and the mother of the little boy motioned for him to alight with her. He started to go, then turned back to the Association President.

"Say," he said, "you better go and telephone to those mothers right away."

The Continuation Campaign is telephoning the news of Jesus from Baptist mothers to the mothers who have never heard. Are You On The Wire?

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Albert W. Beaven, pastor of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., has been selected by the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention as the preacher of the annual sermon at the meeting of the convention in Seattle. The sermon is preached on Sunday morning, July 9.

Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Church, Chicago, has been chosen as successor to J. Campbell Morgan to give the Bible lectures at next summer's assembly Bible school at Winona. The school opens July 17 and closes August 27, generally having an attendance of about 1,000. Dr. Ross has been giving many Bible addresses during recent months, in state conventions, churches and conferences.

Dr. H. F. Stillwell, superintendent of evangelism of the Home Mission Society, was one of the chief speakers at an interdenominational conference of Brooklyn ministers held on Jan. 23, at the Central Y. M. C. A. in that city. Dr. Stillwell addressed the large assemblage on the subject of "Pastoral Evangelism."

The World's Sunday School Convention meets at Kansas City, June 21-27. All possible delegates are urged to register at once. An appeal is being made that pastors in increasing numbers be sent to this inspiring and informing gathering.

"About a century and a half ago, while sojourning in Geneva, Voltaire wrote that at a given date in the near future the Bible would have become obsolete and could be found, if at all, only as a curiosity. A few years since, while in Geneva, I looked up the room in which he wrote that statement, and found it stacked to the ceiling with Bibles, and the house being used as an Annex to the British and Foreign Bible Society."—Exchange.

Cash collections on the 75 Million Campaign of Southern Baptists had reached the mark of $30,160,843 when the various states of the Southern Baptist Convention closed their books for the past state conventional year, according to a report presented to the Campaign Conservation Commission at its session in Nashville, by Dr. L. R. Scarborough, chairman. While this figure does not represent the total sum due at this time by several million dollars, when it is considered that this amount has been collected in the first two years since the drive for subscriptions was made and much of that time has been marked by the serious and wide-spread economic depression the denominational leaders regard it as a very satisfactory showing.

The executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America recently passed resolutions in appreciation of the many and varied services rendered through many years by Dr. Albert G. Lawson and especially of his work as chairman of the administrative committee. This action is taken especially in view of Dr. Lawson's eightieth birthday which comes on June 5.

A national congress of all religious denominations to discuss how American churches can further the cause of international cooperation will be held in Cleveland, May 16-18, under the auspices of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches. Among

A Means of Grace

Prof. Wm. James in his studies in psychology tells us that as a matter of discipline every person ought each day by an act of the will to do some unpleasant and disagreeable task. It means a growth in grace. We are anxious to have our subscribers grow in the right direction. Look at your date label and if your subscription is not paid in advance by an act of the will take your pen right now and send us a check. You will grow in your own estimation and ours.

Hear Heavy-Weights Sunday

C. G. Lister of Berkeley, Cal., wrote last week expressing his satisfaction with the outcome of the referendum. He says: "I agree with a recent item appearing in the paper asking for more church news. It would be much more welcome than so much preaching and heavy stuff. We get all we want of that from the pulpit on Sunday. Let's make the paper bright and newsy-gossipy if you please."

Cultivate Your Tastes

There is usually a wide difference between what we need and what we want, especially in denominational journalism. Editors and secretaries of course know just what you need and give you each week generous doses. If you do not thoroughly masticate and digest all that we serve it is a sure sign that you have a perverted appetite. We simply cannot be mistaken in the number of calories we dish up. However, the editors have consented (we have not heard from the secretaries) to give you some few things you want carefully seasoned with what you need. It is a dangerous experiment. It would be safer for you without protest to accept our bill of fare. Mother tried a similar experiment when she mixed the castor oil with milk. We lost our appetite for both the oil and the milk. It remains as a sad memory. We will none the less give you the opportunity to cultivate your tastes. Better learn to want what you need.

It Can Be Done

"Somebody said that it couldn't be done
But he with a chuckle replied
That maybe it couldn't, but he wouldn't be one Who'd say so till he'd tried.

"So he buckled right to with the trace of a grin
On his face. If he worried, he hid it.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done, and he did it."

EDGAR GUEST.

Somebody said it couldn't be done. Another said if it couldn't he would know why. The attitude of a person in a large measure determines his success or failure in any undertaking. Scores of churches have lists of subscribers to THE BAPTIST and Missions equal to at least 10 per cent of their reported memberships. Some have these journals in every family. It can be done in your church to the good of all concerned. If it can't you should know the reason why. Have you really "tackled" the task?

DR. W. P. BEHAN

Who, on Feb. 1, began his work as head of the Biblical Department in Ottawa University, Kansas.

Over one hundred representatives of the Northern California Baptist Convention field gathered in the First Church in Oakland, Jan. 13, to greet Dr. John Y. Aitchison and assure him of the cooperation of Northern California in the New World Movement. An hour of prayer preceded the conference during the course of which the representatives enthusiastically pledged themselves to full cooperation in the New World Movement campaign.

Rev. Albert C. Blackman, of Muskogee, Okla., died at the home of his son, Myron, in Kansas City, Mo., January 1, aged 76. Dr. Blackman was born in New York, but removed with his parents to Iowa in childhood. Was educated at the Cedar Valley Seminary, Osage, Iowa, and the University of Iowa. Was baptized when a lad and ordained to the ministry in the early seventies. Served as pastor of the Baptist churches at Marinette, Wis., Menominee, Wis., Sioux City, Iowa, Madison, S. D., Ames, Iowa, and Akron, Iowa. Was financial agent for Sac City Institute, Iowa, conducting a most successful financial campaign. His last active work was that of field agent for Bacone College, Okla. Dr. Blackman was married to Miss Mary L. Mitchell in January, 1872, and to this union were born four children. His second marriage was to Miss Elsie L. Ripley who survives him. Dr. Blackman's ministry was always sympathetic and helpful, and multitudes were helped by his earnest preaching and his Christly character. Funeral services were conducted by President B. D. Weeks, of Bacone College, following which the body was cremated.

During the past few months fourteen have been baptized at the Chinese Mission, Locke, Cal. Among these new members is a young man who in his former days was a gambler and persecutor of Christians. It is reported that he is a great help in the church.

Baptist Theological Union Generously Waives Claims on Hundred Million Fund

The following letter, over the signatures of Robert L. Scott, President of the Board of Trustees of the Baptist Theological Union, and of Harry Pratt Judson, President of the University of Chicago, was sent on Jan. 30 to Dr. John Y. Aitchison, General Director of the Board of Promotion:

"Inasmuch as it has been suggested by friends interested in the success of the New World Movement, including members of the Board of Promotion, that, in view of the difficulty in raising the entire sum of One Hundred Million Dollars for the use of the denomination, that various educational institutions, including the Baptist Theological Union, readjust their requests for sums apportioned and that such institutions waive further payment on the basis of such requests; and, further, that, inasmuch as the present needs of the denomination in various ways are very great and can less easily be met than the needs of the Baptist Theological Union for its Divinity School; and also, inasmuch as the Theological Union regards the general needs of the denomination as of far more importance than any particular needs; therefore, the Board of Trustees of the Theological Union, out of regard for these larger interests of our denomination, desires to go further than merely to meet these suggestions, to that end hereby withdraws its request to participate in the One Hundred Million Dollar Fund, excepting only so far as sums have been specifically designated for particular purposes, which, of course, it is not in its power to withdraw. The Board of Trustees has unanimously and very heartily adopted this action.

"It is the purpose of the Board of Trustees of the Baptist Theological Union in carrying out its purpose of withdrawing its request for participation in the one hundred million dollar fund to turn over to the treasury of the Board of Promotion all the funds already paid into the Union from the treasury of said Board of Promotion excepting only those which must be applied to designated purposes. May we add that it is the earnest desire of those entrusted with the administration of the Baptist Theological Union and also of the trustees of the University of Chicago, whose funds so largely enable the Union to carry on its work, that the Board of Promotion may have entire success in meeting the great needs of the denomination."

The Columbia Conference Suggests a New Confession

"IT began in the Columbia Conference," we imagine some future historian saying; "Out of a small, informal gathering assembled solely for free, frank and fraternal conference have come influences which have tended to unify both the purposes and plans of the two great Baptist conventions in the United States." This prophesy may or may not be true but the fact will remain that the Columbia Conference was a very definite step toward a better understanding between our Baptist brethren of the North and of the South.

There were less than two score persons present at the conference. They came from widely separated sections. They were all just plain Baptists. They represented no institutions, no organizations. They were at home editors, educators, secretaries, pastors and business men, but at Columbia they were all on the same plane—they were all "Doctors," even Henry Bond. The unexpressed slogan of the gathering was, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." At the first session the chairman made it clear that the body had all the rights, privileges and prerogatives of any Baptist gathering anywhere. It could do just what it pleased so long as it did not legislate for any other Baptist.

The sessions were all informal. A steering committee was appointed to choose the topics and name the persons who were to lead the discussions. Everybody participated. The subjects were for the most part practical, not academic. Upon a clear understanding of these questions and a definite program based upon them will depend in no small measure the future prosperity of our common Baptist cause.

Of all the topics discussed perhaps that touching the matter of a confession of faith was the most stimulating. Dr. Mullins and Mrs. Montgomery led in the consideration of the proper purpose of a Baptist confession of faith. It was found that those present were in approximate and substantial agreement on the doctrine and polity as set out in the Fraternal Address of Southern Baptists. In a resolution offered by F. W. Freeman the conference put itself on record as believing "that a statement of Baptist doctrine and polity, setting forth briefly the fundamentals of our faith and peculiar beliefs and observances which characterize and distinguish us, is both timely and desirable and will make for clarity of understanding among the different groups of Baptists and will serve to promote unity of thought and proper fraternal relations between the groups of Baptists everywhere, and especially as between the constituency of the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions, and also serve to place ourselves properly before other Christian bodies as to the doctrines and polity we hold."

The step taken to bring about the desirable result was a request that the presidents of the two conventions bring the resolution to the attention of the two bodies at their next annual meeting and that a committee of eighteen, nine from each convention, be appointed which, with the president of the two conventions, "shall be charged with the duty of preparing a statement of faith and polity briefly embodying the basic and fundamental principles and beliefs of Baptists."

Such a statement, as was pointed out by some who are officially connected with the Fundamentalist movement among Northern Baptists, might not differ in any essential respect from the Des Moines Confession. It would, however, these men believe, as emanating in an orderly way from the two great conventions of American Baptists, be free from the objection urged against the Des Moines statement because of the manner of preparation and the method of adoption of the latter. It would, moreover, accomplish the same end sought by the Des Moines Confession. No one questions the right of any group of Baptists to formulate a statement and to urge its adoption, but it will be easier to secure hearty unanimity in the Northern Baptist Convention for a statement which is nation-wide and which does not start with a handicap.

The conference also gave much time to a discussion of the educational situation. You will find in this issue most interesting suggestions for its improvement.

The Supreme Joy

DURING a walk with one of his disciples, Francis of Assisi raised the question as to what constituted the supreme joy of life. Was it to be found in a life of peace, in enduring hardships, in bearing shame gladly for the Master's sake, in showing an undisturbed kindness, whatever sort of accusation might be brought? The disciple did not find the answer easy and Francis responded for him. What that reply was does not matter here; the curious can look it up for themselves.

It is of importance, however, to us that the same question is raised a number of times in the articles which appear in this number of THE BAPTIST. And the answer is the same in each case. The great joy of the disciple is found in so representing him whom he serves that other men and women may be led into open and joyous discipleship. Personal evangelism is the road which leads to the supreme joy of the Christian life. The beatific vision comes in connection with that service by which one wins other men and women to his Lord. The testimony to this is so clear and so general that any Christian who wants to find the blessedness of life is bound to consider it.

Strangely enough, laymen have at times been inclined to give their ministers a monopoly of this privilege. Evangelism has been seen as the task of a group and not of the whole body. But it was not so in the beginning and is not so now in any well-regulated church. Where spiritual life is strong, there Andrews are finding their own brother, Simon, and there from lip to lip goes the story of redeeming love. Undoubtedly there will always be occasion for mass evangelism, but the present emphasis upon personal and church evangelism is a return to an early and approved practice.

The Lord calls every one of his ministers to be an evangelist. By the same token, he calls every man and woman who bears his name and has entered his church to be an evangelist. Some have answered the call; some have not. The story of the weeks until Easter will indicate the relative size of these groups.

Motives That Elect a Pope

PROTESTANTS will do well to study the motives which are commonly believed to enter into the election of a new pope. By title, this man is the vicar of Jesus Christ and ruler of the church universal. But his religious character, it seems, enters but slightly into the question of his eligibility. To be sure, one or two men noted for their personal piety have been under consideration. But the main currents by which events have been determined may be summed up under the head of policy and politics. One party has been standing for the continuation of the policy of separateness from Italy and from temporal matters; another party has wished a drawing together of the papal government and that of Italy and the doing away of the farce of the "prisoner of the Vatican." One group has been pro-German, as indeed Benedict was at the time of his election, while another group has been opposite. There has been careful study of political and national tendencies in order that it might be determined which course would best advance the earthly glory of the papacy. Not religion but world politics has been stressed, as well as personal ambition. One should study it all and then consider how Jesus Christ rejected the kingdoms of the world and their glory and turned to a way of service and sacrifice.

The humor of the election also should not be lost. The infallible pope took during the war the one impossible position for an infallible religious teacher, namely, that of neutrality in the presence of vast immoralities. And now there gathers again a body of fallible men who, with a keen eye to world politics, pretend to elect an infallible ruler. The Living Church touches with keen insight the situation when it says:

"We now see again the anomaly of a complete lapse of infallibility, which will presently be restored by men who avowedly do not themselves possess the gift. A majority vote of fallible men will create infallibility. A body with its head severed will grow a new head overnight. And once more the complete disproof of the whole papal system, which is invariably made manifest whenever a Pope dies, leaving behind him no power equal to himself to provide a successor with powers that are held not to be possessed by the electors, stands conspicuously forth before the world. As for the true Head of the Body of Christ, it is in heaven and cannot see corruption."

A Protestant Confessional

PEOPLE want something more than preaching," says Charles M. Sheldon, in the January Atlantic Monthly. "They want comfort and courage and the courage that does not come to them when it is handed out wholesale. The confessional of the Roman Church is a recognition of a human craving so deep and eternal, that it is a bewildering thing to see how it has been ignored by the Protestant church. . . . If the churches of America opened a Confessional that would minister to the primary needs of peoples' souls . . . the church would begin a chapter in its life that would do away with the questions, how can we reach the masses? what shall we do with the second service? why don't people go to church and all the rest of the wail that goes up concerning the churches' weakness. . . . I wonder why I have put so much emphasis on the Pulpit, and so little on the People in my parish. God forgive me if I have thought more of my sermons than I have thought of my souls."

Preachers who have not already done so should read this story of the Open Door which every Sunday afternoon swung open to troubled people and opened again to let out people who in confession had found relief and often hope. No confidences are betrayed, but the story is so entirely human and the treatment of each case so concrete that the possibilities of this kind of work must appear to the dullest. Probably it will be said that much depends upon the preacher, that not every man is fitted for this ministry. That may well be true, but there are thousands of men the country over who could do signal service of this character and who may find here their suggestion.

No one can forgive sin save God alone. But a man who is responsive to the Spirit of God can point out the way of forgiveness and may often so place himself under the burden with the sinner or sufferer that the latter shall find for himself the way out. There is something in the word of Jesus to his disciples that whose sins they remit shall be remitted which we cannot lightly pass over.

There are two centers about which the preacher's task gathers. The one is God: unless he knows God, he is powerless and useless. The other is man: the more fully and intimately he knows man, the better he can bring to men the message of God's grace. The preacher is dealing with infinitely varied human material. He soon learns that all people cannot be reached from the pulpit or in pastoral calls. With a sense of powerlessness he feels at times that people are concealing their real problems from him. Often they are afraid of intruding their own troubles upon one whom they feel is bearing the burdens of many. May it not be that if a definite time and place is set aside where just such people can come, there may open a ministry which shall be singularly rewarding both to the minister and to those who come to see him. So Dr. Sheldon has found it. Confession meets one of the great needs of the human soul. There ought to be a place in the ministry of every live church where men and women may pour out their hearts and be sure of a sympathetic hearing and a Christlike ministry.

BRYCE, FRIEND OF AMERICA

James Bryce, who died suddenly on Jan. 22, at the age of 83, has for many years made a study of American institutions and promoted in many ways a better Anglo-American understanding with the result that among all classes of people in the United States he is properly regarded as a true friend of America. His book on "The American Commonwealth" is so accurate that it has been a text-book in American schools and colleges for more than a generation. His last service to this country was as English ambassador from 1907 to 1912, during which time he handled the general arbitration treaty of 1908 between the United States and Great Britain and was also prominently associated in the settlement of disputes involving this country and Canada, one being the famous waterways treaty.

HOW DID THIS HAPPEN?

For nineteen years Boies Penrose represented Pennsylvania in the United States Senate. His career was consistent throughout. He was one of the old-time bosses, representing not the people but himself and a narrow range of private interests. To succeed him there has been appointed for the unexpired term George Wharton Pepper, of Philadelphia. Mr. Pepper is as favorably known as Mr. Penrose was unfavorably thought of. He is an able lawyer, a man of scholarly attainments, active in religious and philanthropic affairs, a good citizen. He stands for what is best in American life. How did it ever happen that he was appointed? This we do not presume to answer except to remark that there are evidently in the life of Pennsylvania elements which are not willing that in politics the state shall be content while corrupt.

NO KICKS FROM BABSON FOR MINISTERS' SONS

Roger W. Babson, eminent business statistician, advertised not long ago for the names of sons of ministers to whom free scholarships might be given in the Babson Institute. He has noted that such boys make good and he wants to line up a lot of them with himself. In a recent book he speaks of the same matter.

"The fact is," he says, "that so many successful men are sons of ministers is very interesting to the statistician. This is especially significant when one considers that there are fewer ministers than any other class of workers. There are many reasons why ministers' sons turn out well. Probably the primary reason is that such boys inherit certain visionary qualities from the father and certain qualities of thrift and industry from the mother. Furthermore, such boys are brought up in a religious atmosphere which develops these and other fundamentals of success." He goes on to say that there are yet other reasons for the success of these children, such as that they have been brought up in straightened circumstances, yet tastes have been created in them for the finer things of life, and they have associated with the best children in the community, and also they usually go to college. An occasional black sheep in these flocks is only the exception that makes the general rule stand out more sharply.

We would suggest that men who are anxious that their children shall be worthy men and women and at the same time occupy places of large responsibility in the world consider the claims of the ministry on themselves. Here is a case where the training of the child begins with the father.

THE GOOD OLD TIMES

Lyman Abbott does not believe in the "good old times"; to him the best time in all the world is now and the finest opportunity which men and women have ever had in life is in the present. Recently he described to the girls at Wellesley College the progress of the country during the last seventy years and assured them that conditions in the social, industrial, religious and educational fields are better than they have ever been. That's the kind of optimism we like. Moreover it is true to the facts. Were it not for the veil cast over events by a failing memory, men would never look to the past for the golden age. The best is yet to be. The men and women who are to do the world's constructive work along all lines for the next generation have the finest platform on which to work which has ever been erected.

IS THE LARGE CHURCH THE MOST EFFICIENT?

In a recent number of the California Christian Advocate, there was published a list of 200 Methodist Episcopal churches with a membership of more than 1,100. The largest was East Calvary, Philadelphia, with 3,420 and the fifth was the First Church, Los Angeles, with 2,500 members. In connection with the figures, the Advocate says: "We would like some one to make a study of Methodist statistics, in an endeavor to discover the churches, or the size of the churches, which manifest the greatest efficiency in securing new members, in paying current expenses and in contributing to the benevolences, in proportion to their membership."

A study like that among Baptist churches would be interesting. Probably some material is already in hand. If a tree is known by its fruits, so are churches. Our suspicion is that the churches which are proportionately accomplishing the most, which are enlisting the largest percentage of the membership in Christian service, which are relatively touching their own communities and the foreign field most largely for Christ, would not be found among the largest. A small field intensively cultivated often yields fruits out of all proportion to what are had from the large field, carelessly worked.

NOT FOLLOWING CHICAGO'S LEAD

The cities of the country are not following Chicago's suggestion that they join in a petition to Congress for light wines and beer. There may be exceptions, but to date in every case which has come under our notice the request has either been rejected or action postponed indefinitely. The president of the Detroit city council was naughty enough to declare that he had "no respect either for the common council of Chicago or the present administration of that city." See that your city follows the good example which is being set.

With God's Help Northern Baptists Cannot Fail

The following predictions of victory for Northern Baptists in the Twenty Million Dollar Campaign that must be completed by April 30, are from leaders in various parts of the convention field. They reflect a general confidence that through hard and united endeavor, through faith and through the aid of God, the task will be successfully done.

"I Am Sure We are Going to Succeed"

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY
President of the Northern Baptist Convention

"I have two reasons for that assurance: First, we have a great God; second, we have many members who believe in prayer. I wish I could say that all our members believe in prayer; but I believe there are enough who will come up against our impossible situation with the assurance that 'all things are possible with God'."

"Victory is Assured"

By DR. EMORY W. HUNT
President of Bucknell University, and Chairman of the Board of Promotion

"If we advance unitedly, and with God, in the single purpose to honor the Lord, and to promote his cause, victory is assured."

"Victories do not Happen"

By REV. M. JOSEPH TWOMEY
Pastor of the First Baptist Peddie Memorial Church, Newark, N. J.

"Some one plans for them. Some one works for them. No one questions the necessity or worth of victory for the New World Movement. We have the material. We may have the power. God will give it to us. Then, if victory is to come, we must plan for it, work for it, and pray for it in every Baptist church! I feel that we will, and that we will rejoice together over the achievement."

"The Air is Charged with Prayer"

By MRS. JOHN NUVEEN of Chicago, Board of Managers, Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society

"The air is charged with prayer. I hear a sound of abundance of rain."

"Now, and Not Later, is the Time to Act"

By CLARENCE A. BARBOUR
President of Rochester Theological Seminary

"Perhaps it is well that we are freed from any temptation to easy-going optimism. There is no advantage in being driven to an extremity. There is no desperation for we have the resources to meet the crisis. All that we need, under God, is that our people realize that now, and not later, is the time to act. If only all of our churches, and the membership of those churches, would reveal the same sacrificial devotion which has splendidly characterized many churches, and very many individual Baptists, we would win a glorious victory. It can be done, with prayer and consecration. Who says it cannot be done?"

"I Believe in the New World Movement"

By ALBERT L. SCOTT
Boston, Chairman of the Committee of the Department of Special Gifts

"I believe in the New World Movement, and in the opportunity which it gives to us Baptists to do greater things than we have ever attempted before. I believe that it has already succeeded to an extent which was beyond our imaginations of a decade ago. The difficulties we are now passing through are such as are naturally to be expected from a great democracy, like the Baptist denomination. Out of all the discussion now going on will come, I am confident, a clearer vision of our destiny and a greater opportunity for service."

"All Things are Possible with Him"

By MRS. ANDREW MACLEISH
President of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

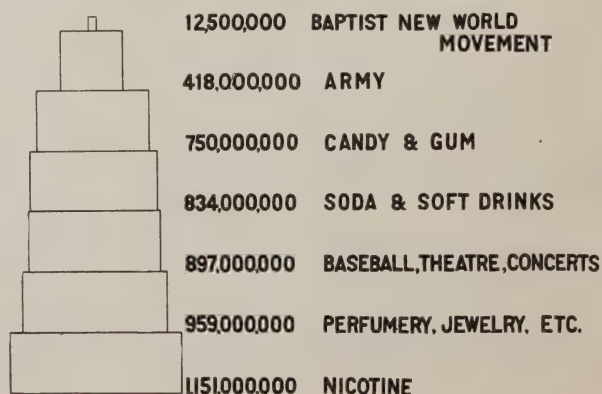

"I believe in the success of this year's campaign of the New World Movement, because of the rapidly rising interest and spirit of determination in our churches, the devotion and intelligence of the women as they go about their continuation campaign, the organization, business ability and consecration of our laymen, and, most of all, because of the wonderful promises of God, upon which we may take hold, and because all things are possible with him."

"The Determination to Succeed"

By DR. LEONARD W. RILEY
President of Linfield College, McMinnville, Oregon

"The first element of success is the determination to succeed. If every Baptist in the Northern Baptist Convention should manifest the same spirit of consecration to a fixed purpose as that revealed in the life of Mrs. Frances Eleanor Ross Linfield and in her magnificent gift of a quarter million dollars to Linfield College, our goal of one hundred million dollars would be reached within this fiscal year. We have the wealth; have we the determination, the consecration, necessary to succeed?"

WHERE MONEY GOES IN ONE YEAR

Pressing the Work of Evangelism in the Local Church

A practical program with suggestive literature (books, tracts and cards) for a live Baptist church, prepared by the Superintendent of Evangelism for Pennsylvania Baptist churches

By ARTHUR B. STRICKLAND

THE most important part of an evangelistic campaign is the months of prayerful and practical preparation which precede the series of special meetings or campaign of lay evangelism. Where such preparation is made the victory is assured. There must be an evangelistic atmosphere in the local church and a soul winning passion especially in the hearts of pastor, deacons and Sunday-school workers. The Sunday evening service and the Sunday school are the natural and best fields for evangelistic effort. Both of these must be built up to the highest attendance possible and ever with the soul-winning objective in view.

The Sunday school is our greatest field. Expert Sunday-school statisticians claim that, in this fruitful field, we are now reaching only one out of five of our scholars for Christ and the church. On the other hand, they claim that four-fifths of our new church members come from the Bible school. We should endeavor to reach every member of our Christian household and every scholar in our Sunday schools for Christ and the church. Many Sunday schools are reached in their entirety for Christ and the church. The tendency is then to wait four or five years for another group to grow up to the proper age for conversion. When a church reaps a glorious harvest, which includes all of its Sunday-school scholars, a campaign should be launched at once to bring in new recruits. We should look at our community as our evangelistic field and our church as our evangelistic force and go out into the Christless, churchless homes and build up a larger school. The organized adult classes should especially be missionary and enlist unconverted adults making the Sunday school the evangelistic point of contact. Where this is done, there is no soul-winning drought.

The minister will be helped by reading the revival stories of the Old and New Testaments and the lives of such great revivalists as Wyclif, Luther, Savonarola, Edwards, Whitefield, Wesley, Finney, Moody, and so on. Read the autobiography of Charles G. Finney, in connection with his "Lectures on Revivals." This will kindle anew the fires of evangelistic zeal and the contagion will spread to the officers and workers in the church. Evangelistic pastors, such as Rev. Chas. L. Goodell follow this plan and recommend it to others.

The following pamphlets will assist the pastor in creating an evangelistic passion and expectancy in his church:

"A Spiritual Awakening" (5 cts.). This is the gist of Finney's "Revival Lectures," a book that has kindled more revival fires, the world over, according to John R. Mott, than any other book with which he is familiar.

The following two are concrete illustrations of revival campaigns conducted by pastors in their own churches. "A Pastor's Experience with a Church Year Program," (5 cts.) "Lifting an Old Church Above Its High Water Mark," (5 cts.).

The above three are sent postpaid at above price by Assembly Committee on Evangelism, 825 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa. Their complete set of revival pamphlets can be had for forty cents.

The story of an evangelistic victory in a smaller church is told by R. V. Jeness in "A Campaign of Personal Evangelism,"—10 cents, Westminster Press, Philadelphia, Pa.

The following books are helpful to the pastor in his self-preparation and may be secured from any of our American Baptist Publication Society branches:

"Great Revivals and the Great Republic" Candles; "History of American Revivals," Beardsley; "Essentials of Evangelism," Joseph; "Evangelistic Awakenings," Steward; "Passion for Souls," Jowett; "Pastoral and Personal Evangelism," Goodell; "Recruiting for Christ," Stone; "The Minister as Shepherd," Jefferson; "A Quest for Souls," Truett; "Present Day Evangelism," Chapman; "Life of Chas. G. Finney," Finney; "Lectures on Revivals," Finney; "Evangelism in the Remaking of the World," Leonard; "Everyday Evangelism," Leete; "Every Church Its Own Evangelist," Edwards; "Letters on Evangelism," Hughes; "Evangelism, Its Justification, etc.," Biedewolf; "The Evangelistic Note," Dawson; "Plans for Sunday school Evangelism," Brown.

The average pastor cannot afford to buy many new books. He cannot afford to be without them. A church member or a board of deacons will bring their church a great blessing by investing $10 or more in evangelistic books for the pastor. The minister cannot make evangelistic bricks without straw.

I. The Local Church, Its Own Best Evangelist

The outstanding success in a number of our Pennsylvania Baptist associations last year came to those churches which followed in the main the program which is outlined below.

It lead to results in a campaign where the pastor conducted his own meetings, in another case, where no special services were held and in one case, where an evangelist assisted the pastor.

The following program is history not theory. It has been proved successful by churches in large cities, in town and villages and in country fields. Held merely as a theory it fails, put into actual practice it succeeds. It enables pastors to do their own evangelistic work. It greatly increases the efficiency of campaigns where the pastor is assisted by an evangelist or outside pastor. It gives associations a program of preparation for each local church to follow in its association-wide evangelistic campaign. This evangelistic program combines the practical with the spiritual. Some lack the practical. (See Luke 10:25-37,) others lack the spiritual, (See Luke 10:38-42.) The combination of both is irresistible. (See Luke 11:5-10.)

Preparation of a Constituency Roll

Make out a list of all unconverted and unchurched people with whom your church has a point of contact, and for whose salvation it is in a measure responsible. This should include (a) The names of all Sunday-school scholars over nine years of age who are not in the church. (b) The names of all unconverted parents, brothers and sisters of Sunday-school scholars. (c) Unconverted persons in church families not listed above. (d) Names of adherents or contributors to church not members. (e) Names of non-resident members of out-of-town churches. (f) If religious census of community has been taken add other names to above list.

Prepare and distribute freely in pews, cards asking the members to give names and addresses of relatives, neighbors and friends not in the church. These can be signed and dropped in offering plates when offering is received.

The Pennsylvania Baptist State Mission Society, Evangelistic Department, 1701 Chestnut Street, has prepared the following Constituency Card, for use of pastors in compiling their lists, in card filing cases. It can be had for 20 cents per hundred.

Some of our pastors, for a long period preceding their special evangelistic campaign are sending suggestive tracts to all who are on their constituency roll. These are presented personally by members of the Band of Intercessors or are sent by the pastor through the mails. In every case the name of church and pastor should be stamped on the Gospel tract. The following tracts are being used extensively: Gospel Tracts. (Narrative series), American Baptist Publication Society; Bible House of Los Angeles Series of Narrative Tracts, such as "Story of An Artist's Studio," "How Spurgeon Found Christ," "You, Me, or Anybody Else," "Cripple Tom," "Charlie Coulson, The Dying Drummer Boy"; the Sunday-school Board of the southern Convention has a fine evangelistic series, including "What must I do to be Saved?," "The Plain Way of Salvation," "Faith, What it is, and why it means so much," "Which," "Excuses."

One pastor in Pennsylvania plans to write to each person on his constituency roll every month, (using a first-class duplicator), enclosing with each letter an attractive message in tract form. This is done following an evangelistic campaign as a preparation for the evangelistic campaign a year hence.

A good idea, followed by many of our pastors is to send 25 cents in stamps to a number of tract publishing houses, asking for complete sets of all their Gospel tracts. These tracts should be classified like the books on one's library shelves. Use the cheap photo albums, sold at 10-Cent Stores, and in these scrapbooks mount the different tracts. The following classification is suggested:

Book I. Tracts for unconverted people:

- (a) Indifferent sinners, (b) Those with difficulties, (c) Awakened sinners, (d) For Sunday-school scholars—boys, girls, adults.

Book II. Correctional tracts:

Tracts vs. millennial dawnism, seventh-dayism, Eddyism, for Catholics, for Jews.

Book III. Tracts for new converts and Christians:

- (a) How to succeed, (b) on prayer, (c) On winning others, (c) On stewardship.

Book IV. Tracts on soul winning in church:

- (a) Secure best pamphlet literature from evangelistic departments of the leading evangelical denominations, (b) Outline courses on personal work, (c) Stories of revival successes.

These books are your sample books from which you order the desired tracts, as you need them. Some churches are laying aside a definite amount of money for this ministry. Many churches have tract racks in the lobbies of their churches. The church which neglects this important part of its Gospel ministry is penny-wise and pound-foolish.

American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. and Sunday School Board, Southern Baptist Convention, Nashville, Tenn., denominational and evangelistic tracts; American Tract Society, New York City; Bible House of Los Angeles, 643 So. Olive St., Los Angeles, Cal.; Bible Institute Colportage Ass'n, 826 North La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.; Westminster Press, Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.; Methodist Book Concern, Philadelphia, Chicago; Fleming H. Revell, 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City; Bible Truth Depot, Swengel, Pa.; Evangelical Pub. Co., Lakeside Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

A careful selection of tracts should be made from the generous supply furnished by the various publishers.

II. A Band of Intercessors

Form an inner prayer circle out of those who will give time to prayer, especially enlist the shut-ins, secure from each a list of the names of persons for whose salvation they are praying. Then divide the remaining names of the constituency roll into lists and distribute same to the members of the Band of Intercessors. Every name on the constituency roll should be on the heart of some praying Christian as a daily prayer burden. Enlist the prayers of every Christian for every unconverted member of their household and of every Sunday-school teacher and Christian scholar for every unconverted scholar in their class.

Our Households for Christ and Every Scholar in our Sunday School For the Master Should be Our Objective

In Truett's, "A Quest for Souls" there are a number of remarkable stories, illustrative of the power of associate prayer. The conversion of Big Jim, the most remarkable conversion which Truett ever witnessed, was a prayer trophy. He was a degraded depraved sinner and thought by most to be beyond the reach of God. Truett, going to his room one night, overheard two saints of God praying in an agony for Big Jim. "For the glory of Christ," prayed they "We pray you, save Big Jim." They quoted God's promise: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father, who is in heaven." To the surprise of all, the next night, Big Jim was in the Gospel meeting. Like a giant oak, smitten at its base by the woodman's axe, this great sinner made the great surrender to the Spirit of God as he cried aloud: "Lord Jesus, the greatest sinner in the world gives up to Thee." (Pages 36-40). Truett also tells a similar story of two praying for an aged wicked river captain. The hardest sinners are reached when Christians are united in prayer for them. Make much of prayer. The above mentioned book, with about 100 illustrations, is a series of sermons preached by a pastor during a series of special meetings. Pastors will be helped by it.

The Pennsylvania Baptist State Mission Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., has issued a Daily Personal Prayer List Card. (20 cents per hundred.)

III. Interviewing People for Christ

Enlist and train a band of personal workers. Select a group from all departments of the church. Definite instruction should be given the workers in the work of spiritual diagnosis and how to use the Scriptures. Every name on the constituency roll and on the prayer lists should be interviewed by the person best qualified to meet that particular person. In the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, there is an invitation committee of men. Each man has promised to give his pastor three hours each week for interview work. That church has won 3000 for its church in the past twelve years. There is a constant stream of men coming into that church. A village pastor drew up a list of 150 names of his constituency. He enlisted over 100 people to maintain daily prayer lists. Twenty volunteered to do interview work. In a three weeks' campaign they won ninety-three for Christ. That pastor discovered his church to be his own best evangelist.

The following card has been prepared by the Pennsylvania Baptist State Mission Society, (20 cents per hundred).

WIN ONE — STAND BY ENLISTMENT CARD

Believing it is the duty of every Christian to help Christ bring in the Kingdom of God upon Earth, and that this end will be more surely and quickly accomplished by PERSONAL WORK, I hereby pledge myself, by the help of God, to endeavor to WIN ONE or more to Christ and the Church by Easter, and STAND BY them until they are established in the life and work of the Church. To this end I will maintain a Personal Prayer List and I will interview people for Christ and the Church.

Those whose names are on the constituency roll of the church, and who are on the hearts of God's people as a prayer burden, are to be reached by Christians who will give definite time to interview work. Personal presentation of Christ by a prayerful consecrated personal worker is the most effective method of reaching the unsaved for Christ.

The Pennsylvania Baptist State Mission Society has also prepared the following card for use by personal workers, (20 cents per hundred). It is self-explanatory. It is modified from one used by a men's organization which has won hundreds to Christ. The deacons of the church and the personal workers should study carefully every scripture passage listed on it.

BAPTIST CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

We are often asked by those who are thinking of uniting with the church as to the questions they will be expected to answer when they come before the board of deacons.

This is a natural and right inquiry, and in order to help you answer it the questions listed below have been outlined.

Will you not read them carefully, and then thoughtfully and prayerfully answer them?

Having signed the card, hand or mail it to the pastor or request the person giving it to you to do so.

Questions to be Answered

(Look up the Scripture)

1. Do you realize your need of a Saviour? Isa. 53:6; Rom. 3:23.
2. Who is the only Saviour of sinners? Acts 4:12; I Tim. 1:15.
3. What must we do to be saved? Acts 16:31; John 5:24; Rom. 10:9.
4. Do you now desire to accept Christ and turn from sin unto him? John 1:12; Isa. 55:7.
5. What does Christ expect those who believe in Him to do? Matt. 10:32; Acts 8:36-39; Luke 22:19.
6. Do you desire to acknowledge publicly your faith in Christ and follow Christ in baptism, in the manner in which he was baptized? Matt. 3:13-17; Acts 2:37-47; Rom. 6:3-5; Col. 2:12; John 14:15.

7. Do you promise to live a Christian life as far as you know how and to be a faithful member of the church?

Feeling that I am able to answer the above questions in a satisfactory manner, and desiring to do the will of Christ, I hereby ask to be received into full membership of the

Eliminate all drones from this personal workers committee. It should be an exclusive organization, composed of those who will give time to this, the most important work of their church.

The Pennsylvania Baptist State Mission Society has prepared an outline study course for use in personal worker's classes or in the church prayer meetings. (2 copies 5 cents, 100 copies 60 cents). This leaflet can be used as an outline for study. The following books will make a good personal worker's reference library. The personal worker's band should purchase them.

"Enlisting for Christ and the Church," Johnston; "Individual Work for Individuals," Trumbull; "Taking Men Alive," Trumbull; "How to Win Men to Christ," Torrey; "The Human Element in the Making of a Christian," Conde.

These books can be had from the American Baptist Publication Society.

IV. The Evangelistic Campaign

After months of this prayerful and practical preparation it is well to launch a campaign for souls. One pastor made the regular Sunday evening services for a given period the harvesting time. His church had more baptisms that Easter than all the other churches combined in their association. A bible class of men made a similar preparation and launched a similar seven weeks' campaign. They set out for 100 souls and won 119 for their church. Another city pastor with his Sunday evening services and four week-day pre-Easter services won over 200 and an additional 200 came before the year was ended.

The evangelistic campaign should be the opportunity for the gathering in of the spiritual harvest following the weeks of faithful seed-sowing watered by the prayers of God's people, and cultivated by the personal work of the people of God.

The following tracts will be helpful to the new convert:

"Safety, Certainty and Enjoyment." This is the famous tract used by Mr. Moody. Millions have been published. It is claimed that the queen of England was converted from reading it. Published by Sunday-school Board, S. B. Convention; Bible Institute Colportage Ass'n, and Bible Truth Depot; "How to Make a Success of the Christian Life," by R. A. Torrey, and "Conversion," by J. Wilbur Chapman, Bible Institute Colportage Ass'n.

Posters, white paper, printed in red and blue colors, can be had in two sizes, from the Scripture Text Display Society, 135 Deansgate, Manchester, Eng. These are suitable for use on large outside billboards or on walls inside the church, during the evangelistic campaign. Size 120 by 80 inches for 4 shillings each, plus postage. Texts: Isaiah 55:6; Eph. 1:7; Rom. 6:8; I Peter 3:18. Size 80 x 60 inches for 2 shillings each, plus postage. Texts: Psalms 1:15; Prov. 28:13; Amos 4:12; Matt. 24:44; John 6:37; Rom. 6:23; Rom. 14:12; Heb. 9:27; I John 1:7.

Many churches form disciples' classes for new converts or prospective church members. Rev. G. M. Walker, pastor Baptist church, Meadville, Pa., has recently published the course he has used successfully for years. Copies may be had for one dollar from the author. The following helpful courses are to be had from the American Baptist Publication Society: "A Course of Training for Church Membership," (3 cents), by Gilkey; "Conversations on the Christian Life," (3 cents), by Gage, Sanborn, and Neel; "Christian Doctrine and Life," a catechism by Young; "Twelve Degree Efficiency Drill" by Newkirk; "You and Your Church," by Kirtley.

Denominational literature should be used before, during and following the evangelistic campaign. In the recent general religious awakening in Wales, it was discovered that the Baptists gained the most additions. This was the more remarkable since the Baptists were not the largest denomination in that principality. Back of this success was the fact that for years the scholars in all their Sunday schools were carefully and systematically instructed in the scripturalness of Baptist doctrines and the glories of Baptist history. We should follow this example by giving our pupils months of denominational instruction prior to our evangelistic campaigns. Where this is done, little persuasion is needed to lead them to enter the church.

The American Baptist Publication Society has a great variety of tracts, pamphlets and booklets on denominational doctrines and achievements. Send for their Small Arms Catalog. The following are used by many of the pastors:

A new Baptist Church Manual (5 cts.); "The Voice of God on Baptism," (16 pages); "A Puzzled Dutchman Made Glad," (4 pages); "Facts on Baptism," by G. J. Johnson; "A Tract on Baptism," by Dr. Emory W. Hunt.

The Sunday-school Board, Southern Baptist Convention, Nashville, Tenn., publishes a much smaller number. Their denominational series include "Baptists and Their Place in the World," by Geo. W. McDaniel, "A True Denominationalism," by President Mullins, "Baptists and the Bible," by Mullins; "Modern Scholarship and the Form of Baptism," A. T. Robertson.

This series and the evangelistic series are given free to pastors of the Southern Convention. Others can have them for 1½ cents per copy.

Why We Should Seek a Revival of Religion

Text: "Behold, I will bring it health and cure."—Jer. 33-6.

By DAVID MILLER

NOTHING can be more important in a study of religious revival than an analysis of motives—When we pray for a revival what are the motives that actuate us? Why do we desire a revival? Answering the question negatively we would say that we do not desire denominational aggrandizement.

You cannot gauge the religious situation or feel the pulse of religious life by statistics. They are always interesting but not always convincing. It was said to Dr. Chalmers of the Free Church of Scotland on one occasion that a certain religious movement would not be beneficial to the special interests of the Free Church although it might promote religion in the land. To which that man of God replied "What is the Free Church of Scotland compared with the spiritual welfare of the people of Scotland?" C. H. Spurgeon used to say "The increase of the Kingdom is more to be desired than the growth of a clan" and went on further to remark "We would do a good deal to make a Pedo-Baptist into a Baptist for we value our Lord's ordinance but our great object is the regeneration of men." So when we pray for a revival of religion let it be this spirit that possesses us.

Neither do we desire merely an increase of our church membership.

Our primary motive in seeking revival should not be to show a large addition in our church roll at the end of the year. That is a perfectly right thing to seek for and we may not be as much concerned about it as we ought, for there is nothing more inspiring than increasing congregations and a growing membership when these are the marks of a healthy spiritual life. But they do not always indicate a fulness of spiritual life and power; other methods have been adopted which have given increased congregations and full exchequers. God's greatest victories are often won by the smaller companies as in the case of Gideon. A reduction of the host was necessary then to give God his opportunity.

On the positive side there are three reasons why we should seek a revival.

1. For the enrichment of the spiritual life of the people of God.

We have already pointed out the need of revival because of the subnormal life lived by many of us. Disappointed, dissatisfied, we are in the position of that Ephesian group of disciples to whom Paul addressed the inquiry "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" There was something lacking in their experience. They knew certain facts concerning Jesus but did not have that spiritual experience which originated with Pentecost. They were living in the post-pentecostal days with a pre-pentecostal experience.

Now this is not God's will concerning his people. His will for us as revealed on Calvary and at Pentecost is a life of peace and joy and power of which the world knows nothing. In Wales, when the Spirit of God swept through those Welsh valleys, lives were flooded with spiritual joy which manifested itself in song and testimony. Dumb lips were unloosed, formalism was swept away, and the wilderness blossomed as a rose.

Hear these words, "Behold I will bring it health and cure and I will reveal unto them abundance of peace and truth." Note the sequence "health," "cure," "abundance"; this is why we should want a revival, that we may enjoy a healthy, strong, vigorous spiritual life—"I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." Are we ready for it? Are we prepared to pay the price for it? Would it interfere with any social engagement we have made for the coming days? Perhaps we might have to make inconvenient changes in our plans but it would be worth it. Nothing else really matters. For the enrichment of our own lives we should pray persistently for revival, for a spiritual awakening in the church of God.

2. For the Recovery of a True Conception Concerning the Function of the Church

There is nothing on which we need clearer thinking than on this. The church's mission is two-fold as set forth in the commissions given by our Lord to his disciples in the Gospel of Matthew and Mark.

First of all the disciples were to evangelize by preaching the Gospel to all the world and seeking to win men to allegiance to Jesus Christ. Behold the picture we have in the Acts of the Apostles, the wonderful triumphs which were won by the preaching concerning Jesus. What an impact those witnesses for Christ made on the world of their day. Through faith in his name men were made whole. The world was turned upside down. From time to time the church has lost sight of the fact of evangelization as its main business and each revival has brought about a return to this conception.

Its second business is to teach men the truth as it is in Jesus. When men are won to Christ they are to be taught the meaning of the Christian life and of Christian living. The life and teaching of Christ are to be unfolded and the nature of the life to which we are called in our Christian discipleship.

What is the condition of the church today? In many places this two-fold conception of the church's mission has been altogether lost sight of. In certain of our evangelical churches amateur theatricals flourish while prayer meetings decay and are only kept from extinction by a few devout souls. On the notice board of a certain church the young women's club advertised to give a play entitled "The Blossoming of Mary Anne" and on another, "Tommy's Wife." We smile at it but it is a tragedy and if the angels weep they must shed copious tears at this.

Here is a misconception of the church and its business in the world. It is not treated as a divinely created and divinely authorized institution for the salvation of men and the building up of a spiritual life but as a purveyor of what is believed to be a safer kind of pleasure than that found in the world.

It is asserted that this must be provided to hold the young people to the church. But this we would repudiate by personal observation. We have seen bands of the choicest young people under the thrill of the fulness of life in Christ finding the highest joy and delight in singing the songs of Zion rather than the worlds' songs and in testifying concerning their spiritual experience.

One thoughtful writer has said, "The great danger of the modern church is secularism." With this remark we are in perfect agreement. As a deacon put it in one of our prayer meetings recently, "There is too much flirting with the world." It is this that leads to spiritual weakness and the lack of spiritual power. The commission of the church is to save and sanctify human life, not to amuse. While charges of narrowness and Puritanism may be hurled at it the church shall be clothed with the promised power from on high when it walks in the pathway of separation to which it has been called.

3. For a More Rapid Solution of Our Social and Economic Questions.

But we are not forgetful that the church is charged with a mission to society. It is—and a very important one indeed. Its voice is to be heard in condemnation on all things that mar and spoil humanity and that rob men of the true life that God designs for them. It is to preach Christ's message concerning the relation of man to man in every relation in life. One has but to read the closing chapters of the Epistle to the Romans to see how Paul inculcates this. In these the great truth of the cross which he has so wondrously unfolded in the earlier chapters is applied to individual, social and national life. The perfect home will be the home where the love of the cross reigns, the true social order will be that in which a consideration is shown between master and servant that has its inspiration in Calvary, and national life will find its true ideal only when it is based on the righteousness revealed at the cross, for only thus nations are exalted.

What problems confront the church today? Communal, national, international and these will be solved more quickly, we believe, by a true revival of spiritual religion than in any other way. What marvelous changes were wrought in communities at Pentecost! Get the pentecostal spirit and we shall get pentecostal results. We want the effects without the cause. If we have the same spirit that possessed men then we shall be redeemed from grafting and profiteering at the expense of the blood of others and a true brotherhood will be found among the nations.

The late Dr. John Watson said some years ago, "The next revival must be an ethical revival." But no revival is worthy of the name unless it is ethical. If it is truly evangelical it will be truly ethical. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation. Old things have passed away and all things are become new." So has it ever been, so will it ever be. Here there are surely valid reasons for revival. For the enrichment of the life of the church, for the salvation of men and for the welfare of society.

revival, was asked by a deputation who visited him, "What is the secret of all this?" His answer was "There is no secret—ask and ye shall receive."

God help us to ask. To unite in our homes and in our churches in earnest, continuous and believing prayer until heaven is opened and the blessing of God be given and all that he may be glorified unto the ends of the earth.

Introducing Clinton Wunder

By ALFRED E. ISAAC

REV. CLINTON WUNDER, a senior in the Rochester Theological Seminary, has received the unusual distinction of being called to the pastorate of one of Rochester's largest churches, the Baptist Temple (formerly the East Avenue Church), with a membership of over 1,700. Although the church was without a regular pastor for over two years, last year the receipts for current expenses amounted to $31,979, and for missions and benevolences, $47,445. Prof. Ernest W. Parsons, of the seminary, has rendered highly efficient service as acting pastor for two years. The church is located at a most strategic down-town center.

Mr. Wunder assumed his duties as pastor September 1, and is now carrying the burdens of this great church in addition to his studies at the seminary for the present year. From the start, Mr. Wunder stressed the evening service, and within a month he was speaking to evening audiences that taxed the capacity of the auditorium, which seats 1,200 or more. His first series of sermons was on "The Religion of the Best Sellers," the first sermon being on "Main Street." Now it is the usual thing for several hundred people to be turned away from the evening service.

Who is Clinton Wunder? He comes from Cincinnati, Ohio, having graduated from the University of Cincinnati in 1914. During his college course, he specialized in social and political sciences. While in college, in addition to his studies, Mr. Wunder made investigations and conducted a financial campaign for the Anti-Tuberculosis League, was an officer of the juvenile court and field agent of the Juvenile Protective Association of Hamilton county, tenement house inspector for the Chamber of Commerce, dance hall inspector, and for two seasons helped in the Red Cross flood relief. In addition to these numerous activities he did considerable lay preaching in the churches. After graduation, he engaged in publicity work with a large organization where he had a staff of fifty under him and an annual expenditure of $150,000.

Through contact with the student department of the Y. M. C. A., he was led to devote himself to Y. M. C. A. work. In 1916, he joined the staff of the industrial department of the International Committee, and in the following year became Camp General Secretary at Fort Thomas, Kentucky. During the united war work drive, he had charge of the speakers' bureau and publicity for thirteen counties in southern Ohio.

Mr. Wunder was among the first seventy men recommended by the Federal Council of Churches for the first chaplain's training school at Ft. Monroe, Virginia. In 1918, he was commissioned chaplain in the army, and did a notable piece of work in Baltimore. At the close of the war, at his own request, he was dismissed, and went back to the industrial department of the Y. M. C. A. For a short time he acted as assistant to Dr. Charles A. Eaton, at Madison Avenue Church, New York.

Mr. Wunder is twenty-eight years old, and was baptized into the Immanuel Church of Cincinnati when he was thirteen. He was ordained in 1917, at the Lincoln Park Church, Cincinnati, and greatly commended himself to the ordaining council at that time. This is his first pastorate.

Mr. Wunder possesses a quiet but vigorous personality, and is an earnest, forceful speaker, depending more upon the substance of what he says than upon any tricks of the orator to win and hold the attention of his audience. In public address and private interview, he gives the impression of having great reserve power. While his sermons would be styled practical and deal largely with the every-day affairs of the people, they never fail to sound clearly and strongly the religious and evangelical note. During the three months of his pastorate the Baptist Temple has received forty new members, several by baptism.

Evangelism in the Home

An address dealing with personal evangelism delivered at the meeting of the Long Island Association, Emmanuel Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., October 20, 1921

By J. C. MASSEE

SO FAR as I am able to discover from my Bible, the Lord Jesus Christ never gave to the Christian Church but one job, and he made that job imperative. He laid upon every disciple of his the imperative duty, and put into every disciple the imperative passion, to win other men to him. The man who has not found his passion for souls, whatever else he may be, has already become a backslider in his heart.

There came into my study in Chattanooga, Tenn., a few years ago an insurance agent who wished to sell the preacher some insurance. I immediately disabused his mind of the possibility and then asked him what company he represented. He told me. I said to him, "It is impossible for that company to do business in Chattanooga. I am perfectly sure you never will sell any insurance in that company here. One of my deacons, one of the best men I know, had the agency of that company in this city and went out of business and had to close shop a year and a half ago." He listened very courteously to me and when I had finished saying all I had to say, he remarked quietly, "I have been in town just two weeks and I have sold $50,000 worth of life insurance in that company." I said, "How did you come to have my name, for to my personal knowledge it has not been in the hands of that company for two years?" He said, "It was in our hands two years ago." I asked, "How did you sell this insurance?" He answered, "I sold every dollar of that insurance to the other fellow's prospects that he did not follow up." Then he turned to me and said, "I am a Catholic and I understand you are a Protestant preacher. But that is exactly where you parsons fall down and where your churches fail. You have not learned the business of following up." One Sunday evening just in front of me at my right a man lifted his hand for prayer. One of my workers followed him up that evening and I was in his home two evenings later. He said to me, "I am coming to Christ and I am coming now. I am deliberately settling this matter on a basis of righteousness and sanity and I am doing it because, for the first time in my life, though I have traveled this continent over and been in churches in every great city, and have lifted my hand for prayer a number of times, this is the first time my hand-raising has been followed up with an inquiry."

Most Men Not Asked

It has been my habit since I have been in the ministry to do personal work, and it is the most intensely fascinating and profitable business I know. When I have asked the question, "How many times in your life has it happened that any man ever came into your home or your office to sit down and talk this business out with you, showing you just what God wished you to do and how to do it?" it will interest you to know that 90 per cent of all the men answered, "You are the first man who has ever done it." The remaining 10 per cent have answered variously, "The pastor called and asked me to come to church"; "My Sunday-school teacher sought to induce me to join the church." Only 2 per cent of all those asked have at any time had a man or woman come into the home and talk the matter out with them. I have come to believe with a profound conviction that the difference between an unsaved and a saved man is the difference between the man who has thought about being a Christian and the man who has thought it through to a decision. Every man thinks about his relation to God. Few men think through their obligations and find the solution of their difficulties or the solvent to their infidelity. If men knew how and what to do, it would be comparatively easy to win them to Christ. The Christian Church, the Christian individual, is not convinced any longer that men are lost. I know no falsehood so disastrous in its results, so outrageous in its caricature of the Master's purpose as that falsehood which is constantly exploited in the churches today that the natural recruiting ground of the church is the Sunday school. I do not believe it for a minute. If that is the only source, then we are already suffering dry rot in the upper branches of the life of the church. There is a wide field for evangelistic effort. There is a tremendous opportunity for soul-winning activity. There is a heavenly challenge of divine opportunity in the homes of this land.

The other evening, only a week or two ago, I sat in my own home, within two blocks of this place. I felt exactly as a man feels when he does not want to do anything else in this world but rest and have a good time. I had a good book and a comfortable chair and expected no company. I had been working with extreme vigor for a number of days and found myself very tired. As I settled myself for a comfortable evening, a still, gentle voice whispered in my own heart, "This afternoon some one told you of a man and woman living within two blocks of you who are unsaved. Perhaps you better go and see them." At first I reasoned with the Master, but after a while he had his way. I walked down the street, climbed a flight of stairs and knocked at a door which was opened by a man. I said, "I am the pastor of the Baptist Temple. You are my neighbor and I thought I would like to drop in for a friendly visit." He was all flustered in a minute and expressed his pleasure at my calling. I had not been with him ten minutes before he told me that he had been waiting for a long, long while for some man to come and talk to him about Christ. The other ministers in whose churches he had from time to time sat, seemed to have no concern about him. Within thirty minutes he and his wife had both yielded themselves to Christ and were rejoicing in a heavenly salvation.

Changing trains one day on a railroad, a stranger came and sat down by me, introduced himself and said, "I wish you would come and talk to my wife and daughter when you get home." I let him tell me about his wife and daughter and when that conversation was over I said, "Tell me about yourself." He said, "I have been under conviction of sin for a whole year and a half. I know a Presbyterian elder and I have gone to his office and stayed there some time hoping he would talk to me about Christ. I have visited a great preacher friend of mine with that same hope. I know a great publisher and I frequent his place of business yearning for him to speak to me about Christ, but I have come to the conclusion that no man cares for my soul." I declare to you a profound conviction, my friends, when I say that the crime of the Christian Church today is its neglect of that tremendous field of opportunity which lies in the family, in the home, and I do not speak of the opportunity of winning children to Christ for that's a simple matter. It is the opportunity of winning heads of families, men and women who have become unchurched by the drifting tendency of all human life, who have been beaten down before the drift of custom and the blight of public opinion, who have not found in the public discourse the cure for their souls' ills, but who yet yearn for Christ.

Joe Said, "All is Well"

If I were to select the one experience that meant more to me than any other one in my twenty-five years in the ministry it would be this: One afternoon I went into the humble cottage of a Negro in the Southland. I had seen him driving the grocery wagon that delivered goods at my home, for months. I missed him from the route and inquired about him. I discovered that my cook was the mother of that boy whom I was missing from the wagon. I asked her one day, "How is Joe?" And she told me he was very sick, dying with consumption. I asked, "Is Joe a Christian?" She said, "No, sir, he is not. He has been too busy to go to church and I guess he did not care much about it anyhow. I don't know how to tell him and nobody else has ever concerned themselves with him." I left my white parishioners that afternoon and I went down and rapped on the humble doors of that negro cottage and walked into where that boy of twenty-three or twenty-four lay emaciated on that ragged bed. I drew up a chair and sat down and talked to him a few minutes. Then I said, "Joe, are you a Christian? Are you saved?" His great black eyes filled with tears as he said, "No, sir, I am not." "Joe, would you like to be saved?" "Yes, sir, oh so much, sir, if I knew how to be saved." I said, "Would you let me tell you?" I drew a bit nearer to the bed and quoted the precious old Word and gave him the Saviour's invitation, and the black boy suddenly found a white soul, washed in the blood of the Lamb. Soon afterward the cook was away for a few days and when she came back she said, "We buried Joe Sunday, sir. He sent you a message just as he was dying. Joe told me to be sure to tell you that it was all well with his soul and he was going to the heavenly home because you came into our home that Monday afternoon." That afternoon in that home is perhaps the tenderest and sweetest of all the memories I have.

You know, most people are like the rich woman to whose residence the little girl came visiting. She looked around and saw the marvelous tapestries and the beautiful pictures and the unparalleled statuary and sat in chairs that were comfort personified, basked in the sunshine of the friendly smile and kindly courtesy, and then, clapping her hands, she said: "Oh, what a beautiful home for Jesus to come to. Does he come often?" The great, cultured splendid woman's eyes filled with tears as she said, "I am afraid he hasn't been invited, dear, to come at all." And the little one, out of whose mouth the Master perfected his praise that day, said: "Then, why do you wait? Invite him now. He will come if you will let him." And the home whose doors had been closed in the Master's face so many years suddenly swung open its portals and the Master came in to make it an ante-room of heaven.

I went into the home of the head of the employment department of one of the greatest factories in America, and asked the privilege of talking to him and his wife. For an hour I undertook to find some means of reaching his heart. He said, "All that you say is not applicable to me or to my wife. We certainly are not heathen. I spend my evenings studying; she spends her evenings sewing or in quiet converse. We love each other. I have nothing in my life to apologize for. I know of no reason why I should do the thing you are persuading me to do." I said, "I want to ask you one simple question: With all the cleanness of your life, with all the success of your business, with all the charm of your home, isn't it true that deep down in your heart there is a conscious lack of something not yet supplied?" His wife said: "There is in my life, sir." And then with a deep sigh and with great sincerity he said, "And in mine. I cannot explain it, but it is there, like a gnawing cancer at my soul all the day through." I said to him, "The lack is your Christ. You have not found him, and your Christ will be the supply of your life." They came quietly, deliberately, earnestly, yielding themselves to the Christ. They found the testimony to him a true word and they went into splendid service, and through all these years I think I have seen no man and no woman develop more marvelously in the graces of Christ.

You need not be timid nor embarrassed. The hearts in the homes of the folks in Brooklyn are more hungry for your message about Christ than they are about anything else in the world. They will more quickly welcome you if you go in the spirit of the Master to tell them the Master's story than they would any other visitor who might come to their doors. "Go home to thy friends and tell them what great things God has done for you and how he saved you."

When the Heavens Are Opened

Pastors tell of methods which have brought results. Evangelical belief and evangelistic endeavor. Doing personal work in a favorable atmosphere. Organizing for victory.

Holding Fast to the Scriptures

By OLIVER W. VAN OSDEL

REPLYING to your letter asking for a statement giving some details of evangelistic methods and results in the Wealthy Street Church we are compelled to say there is nothing unusual in our experience on this field, but whatever has come to us may come to any, in due proportion, who are like-minded. In the definitions given in the dictionaries it is indicated that there is a vital relation existing between evangelistic endeavor and its results, and evangelical belief. Long ago the Wealthy Street Church learned that in all its undertakings everything depended upon its relations with God, whether in building, missions or evangelism. In the erection of its church building many weeks of prayer were experienced and enjoyed with uniform answers of progress and peace. The building committee met once or twice every week during several years, but never considered any business until all the members of the committee had prayed.

The church believes that every Christian is called to a ministry of prayer, and that all matters committed to Christians while the Lord is absent, whether money giving, missionary calls and advances, or soul-winning, are thus profoundly affected. It is God's plan. The church believes in the verbal inspiration of the holy Scriptures, expository preaching which is necessarily evangelistic, salvation through the blood of the cross, and the premillennial coming of the Lord. A week-night Bible class is conducted in addition to the prayer meeting, and during the present pastorate the church has been taken through all of the New Testament and much of the Old, word by word, and through a large number of the books such as the epistles, from two to four times.

Twice each year, October and February, a Bible conference is conducted by some one or more leading Bible teachers. The conference continues several days. At each service on the Lord's day the invitation is given for those desiring salvation, or wishing to unite with the church to come to the front seat. The pastor and deacons stand at the front to welcome those who come. The congregation stands and sings the invitation hymn while the invitation is given. The pastor speaks briefly in encouragement for any under conviction to come forward between the singing of each stanza of the hymn. Any needing instruction are invited into the office after the benediction and instructed and engaged in prayer.

No one is ever asked to raise the hand or sign a card. The feeling is that if conviction is not deep enough to bring the individual to a surrender at the front seat, it is not deep enough to be salutary. Personal workers go through the congregation and accompany those coming forward.

Baptisms always occur at the beginning of the evening service. Those to receive baptism meet the pastor in the office thirty minutes preceding the baptism, and are fully instructed in the causes and history of the confusion in the minds of Christians on the subject, and clearly shown the teaching of the Scriptures and the deep symbolic meaning of the service. It is intended that there shall be no lack of intelligence on the subject, or failure to discern its beauty.

Two visitors are regularly employed by the church; besides, the Bible instruction conducted by the church has produced a large number of personal workers, and these are busy all days of the week. Those coming forward on the Lord's Day when the invitation is given have been previously visited and are usually known. There are, however, many exceptions.

The church endeavors to hold closely to the teaching of the Scriptures in all its worship and work. It does not employ any institutional features, and does not believe in the modern notions of social service drives, and community undertakings, but declares its one business is to preach the Word. All at it, and always at it is the price of a perennial revival. We find no way but to bring men under the Blood.

March 1, 1922, the present pastorate will have continued thirteen years. During that period approximately 1,300 have united with the church; over 700 have been baptized. Five have been sent to foreign mission fields, seven have been ordained as ministers of the gospel, fifteen are in preparation for mission fields and Christian service, one of the most commodious houses of worship between the oceans has been completed. All of the church business, so far as the present writer recalls, has been transacted by a unanimous vote. A spirit of fellowship exists in the membership of the church which attracts the attention of all observers. The attendance upon the week-night Bible class sometimes reaches 400. Prayer meetings are well attended. Average attendance of the Bible school is about 500. The Lord's Day congregations have steadily increased from the beginning. Let all the praise be to him who gave himself for us and saved us by his grace.

Special Seasons

By HENRY F. WARING

TO Henry Clay Trumbull the best part of his life's work was "Individual Work For Individuals"—the title of (as he, too, felt) his best book. This is the work in which the pastor should lead. While recognizing that "it is better to set ten men to work than to do the work of ten men," it is to be remembered that example is the best way to set others to work.

While it has been my privilege to preach on the street and to pastor a down-town church and another so situated that it was like ministering to a procession, the greater part of my ministry has been to churches in residential communities. In the former the game had to be shot at on the wing. In the latter it could be approached more deliberately and with better aim. While in neither kind of hunting should the pastor recognize any absolutely closed season, and should always carry his gun, yet, especially in the latter, he may observe to advantage special open seasons. Because of limited space, our attention will be confined to these.

The first thing to be sought is an atmosphere in which personal work is easier and more effective. A series of protracted meetings may not be advisable. In such a case, to attract attention and to create expectancy, an evangelistic season may well begin with one or more

AT STEPHENS COLLEGE, COLUMBIA, MO.

The Columbia Conference

Denominational leaders of North and South meet at Columbia, Mo., in what may prove to be epoch-making conference. Closer cooperation along the lines of education, missions, tithing and stewardship, and evangelism likely to follow.

Brief History

EARLY in November, 1921, President J. M. Wood of Stephens College, Columbia, had as guests of the college for a few days, Mrs. William A. Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, and Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Convention. Viewing the blessings and understandings of the association and conference of these two leaders from the two sections of our Baptist constituency in the United States, President Wood conceived the idea of having a wider conference among the men and women entrusted with denominational and kingdom responsibilities in these two sections. The idea grew after thought, conference and prayer until he issued an invitation to a group of men and women representative of the two sections and of the varied activities of our Baptist people. The time, January 24-26, 1922, and the place, Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., were agreed on. President Wood issued the invitations agreeing out of his great generosity to provide the entire travelling expense of all the guests. The following attended the conference and participated in its deliberation. Others from both sections were invited, but were unable to attend:

Edgar Y. Mullins, Louisville, Ky., Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Rochester, N. Y., Curtis Lee Laws, New York, J. Y. Aitchison, New York, Henry Bond, Brattleboro, Vt., Livingston Johnson, Raleigh, N. C., H. A. Porter, Atlanta, Ga., C. W. Daniel, Atlanta, Ga., Mrs. George W. Coleman, Brookline, Mass., Miss Kathleen Mallory, Birmingham, Ala., J. E. Dillard, Birmingham, Ala., J. J. Ross, Chicago, Ill., Edgar L. Killam, Chicago, Ill., Shailer Mathews, Chicago, Ill., F. W. Freeman, Denver, Colo., J. A. Francis, Los Angeles, Cal., George W. Truett, Dallas, Texas, E. C. Routh, Dallas, Texas, F. S. Groner, Dallas, Texas, Emory W. Hunt, Lewisburg, Pa., V. I. Masters, Louisville, Ky., J. S. Compere, F. M. McConnell, Oklahoma City, Okla., H. L. Winburn, Arkadelphia, Ark., David H. Harris, Fulton, Mo., J. J. Cooper, Fulton, Mo., S. M. Brown, Kansas City, Mo., James Wood, Columbia, Mo., E. W. Stephens, Columbia, Mo., R. K. Maiden, Kansas City, Mo., D. C. Shull, Sioux City, Iowa, B. H. DeMent, New Orleans, La., L. L. Gwaltney, Birmingham, Ala. Among those from the North who were unable to be present were Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, Frank M. Goodchild, Clarence A. Barbour and Cornelius Woelfkin.

During the days of the conference, the following questions were discussed:

1. How to promote our work
 - (1) In the tithing and stewardship campaigns.
 - (2) In standardizing and equipping denominational schools.
 - (3) In stimulating interest in education.
 - (4) In increasing the number of students for the ministry and improving the quality.
 - (5) How to promote Baptist literature.
2. How can we best promote the next Baptist World Alliance in 1923 at Stockholm.
3. The prospects and perils of the $175,000,000 campaign.
4. Interdenominational affiliations.
5. Report of committee on the advisability of a joint committee from Northern and Southern Conventions on topics of joint interest.
6. What is Baptist liberty?
7. What constitutes Baptist unity?
8. What is the proper purpose of a Baptist confession of faith and should Baptists have one?

Besides the discussions in the smaller groups, there were some notable inspirational meetings held in the college auditorium, to which the students and general public were invited, and who attended in large numbers. Various members of the conference addressed these gatherings.

Understandings and Purposes

The following understandings and purposes in the invitation and acceptance of Dr. Wood's hospitality and in all the discussions of the conference were had:

1. That the conference was entirely unofficial and personal. No guest represented any organization, institution, board or group of men. Every one represented and spoke for himself alone.
2. That if any statement or agreements were made and given to the public, such would bind no organization or section and would only represent the attitude of the persons making them.
3. That the primary purpose in the minds of those inviting to and those participating in the conference was the enjoyment and development of fellowship, with the view of the growth of a better understanding of the tasks, problems and difficulties, common to both sections, the strengthening of an American Baptist consciousness, and ultimately of a larger contribution of American Baptist strength in carrying our Saviour's saving message to a lost world. No purpose further than this was in the mind of any members of the conference.

Certain Agreements and an Appeal

With the above-mentioned understandings, after much prayer, mingled with song, Scripture reading, delightful fellowship and an open discussion by practically every member of the conference of the above-mentioned subjects, a committee set out the following agreements and appeal, which were unanimously approved by the conference.

1. That it is supremely important that all the forces in our churches and denominational organizations should be urged to give their fullest and most aggressive cooperation in our stewardship and tithing campaigns, and that the interchange of ideas, plans and literature would be profitable to both sections.

2. That the churches in both sections of our country should be cautioned against turning to inter- and non-denominational institutions for their pastoral leadership. This practice not only imperils the foundations of theology and ecclesiology, but also the progress of the Kingdom of God as represented in our institutions and forward movements.

3. That we seek by every worthy means to encourage our people in the production, publication and distribution of Baptist literature in books, tracts, religious and secular press, and that we call on our forces to give their most vigorous, insistent and persistent cooperation to the circulation of our Baptist papers, whose successful operation is so vital and necessary to the enlightenment, enlistment and inspiration of our people, and the promotion of all our cause.

4. That we urge our educational forces and our people everywhere to give their fullest cooperation in the solution of our educational problem in the following way:

(1) By keeping our schools in all their teaching and administration loyal to Christ, his Truth, and his churches. They must be held true to the Baptist message in order to claim our children, our money and our prayers and to render the best service to Christ and his Kingdom.

(2) By encouraging confidence in these schools when they are loyal to Christ and his truth, not condemning them on unfounded rumors and uninformed accusations, but only on established facts ascertained in an orderly and Christian way, and then correcting them. Our schools constitute a most vital part of our most precious machinery in carrying out our Saviour's world will. They are worth correcting when they are wrong and are worth saving to the best equipment, to the largest confidence, patronage and support of our people. We need a Baptist conscience on education as true to form and as deep in conviction as the Baptist conscience on our distinctive doctrines. We must educationalize our evangelism and evangelize our education, and put them both over for Christ in the same great spirit and fashion.

Education for Christ's Sake

(3) By so denominationalizing our schools that they will furnish equipped leaders for our churches in all the fields and phases of their work. To sustain an evangelical atmosphere in our educational institutions is as essential a part of Christian education as to maintain high standards of scholarship. We are in the educational business primarily for Christ's and the church's sake. The schools should be kept so close to our churches that they will know the churches' needs and be able to supply their demands in carrying out Christ's commission. We build and support our schools primarily to furnish Baptist strength for the evangelization, Christianization, and civilization of the world.

(4) By preaching on education, talking up our schools, publishing their merits, advantages and their products, and by so organizing our homes and churches that our children will readily and gladly go to them from high schools and academy, and by giving these schools our confidence, prayers, and support.

(5) By doing what we can in increasing the number and improving the quality of our ministerial students. This can be done in calling out the called in our churches, conferences and general meetings, and by denominational efforts in seeking to reach Baptist students in state schools, and by the encouragement of our strongest students to give their lives to Christ's call and service.

5. It is agreed that nothing is more imperatively important in our churches in the home and foreign land than the promotion of the spirit of New Testament evangelism. Personal and church evangelism is universal in its obligations, primal in its importance, curative and preventive in its influence and prevailing in its power. There is no substitute for it in the affairs of God and man.

6. It is agreed that upon the final success of our $175,000,000 campaign depend the most sacred and vital interests of all that we hold dear in our denomination, North and South, and that we should urge upon all of our people the necessity for full cooperation in prayer, heroic faith, unselfish sacrifice, triumphant, aggressive effort in the spirit of the broad fraternity in these distressing economic times. We should behave like God's people, facing our problems and difficulties with dauntless faith and heroic courage. We should not allow complacency, lack of information, lax leadership, loose organization, the critical mind, depressed economic conditions nor anything else to prevent us from obtaining our objective and bringing to Christ and his causes a great nation-wide victory.

7. We join in a most insistent urgency that our pastors and churches seek a large American Baptist attendance on the next session of the Baptist World Alliance in 1923 at Stockholm, Sweden. There is a great call from Europe at this time for us to show our interest in our brothers in these war-stricken lands.

Limits of Cooperation

8. This conference places itself on record as heartily approving the spirit and doctrine of co-operation set forth in the New Testament. We joyfully recognize the fact of the spiritual unity of all true believers in Christ. We reaffirm our age-long conviction in favor of the principle of religious liberty for all men everywhere. But inasmuch as in our view of the New Testament teaching every local church is self-governing and independent, it is self-evident that we cannot subscribe to what is popularly known as organic church union. We believe that the free association for common ends of the New Testament principle of cooperative Christian effort, that the voluntary principle must control in all such effort if we remain loyal to Jesus Christ our Lord. We rejoice in the fact that there are many forms of welfare work and social service in which Christians of all names may co-operate and reinforce each other for common ends. The limits of such cooperation are easily defined. Baptists cannot co-operate with others in any form of effort in which compromise of the truth is required or our freedom of witnessing and preaching is impaired. We must proclaim the gospel in its completeness and its integrity and remain forever loyal to every part of the great commission.

The combined Protestant churches of Greater New York have been organized to do their part in meeting the unemployment situation which may develop in New York City during the winter. A committee of thirty-six prominent clergymen and laymen has been appointed by the New York Federation of Churches to plan the campaign in behalf of the unemployed. In it the purpose of this committee to study the unemployment conditions in the city, securing first hand information regarding the men on the bread-lines and in the lodging houses and to interpret these facts to the churches, building up a constructive program which may be carried out by each local organization. The committee will form district organizations composed of the local churches and it will cooperate with relief agencies of various kinds, which shall deal with the unemployed—both the homeless men and the needy among families.

I Saw Three Ships A-sailing

BY AN OLD SALT—A WELL-KNOWN BAPTIST SKIPPER.

NAUTICALLY speaking, there never was any other three ships built on the general lines of these here ones I'm going to spin ye a nice little yarn about, for I've set sail in all of them now, and I reckon they're as seaworthy craft as is being nailed together in these days, and unusual safe and steady for ladies and children; which is a consideration when it comes to recommending boats for family use.

The first ship left dock late in November for ports in Europe, and if ever an old sea-dog saw a prettier sight than that, then I don't know! For they stacked the hold so plumb full of bales and barrels and boxes and what-not that I stood on deck letting out an occasional "Glory be!"—for even an Old Salt like me has got a heart buttoned inside his nor'easter oilskins; and I kept figgering out how slick and cozy all them little peaked shivering kids in Poland and Russia and Latvia was soon going to look in those there coats and mufflers and what-nots which good Baptist landlubbers all over the country had collected. As I says to a sailor beside me: "Where'd they ever lay hands on such sleughs of clothes, eh, mate?"

And says he, tender-like: "Ain't you ever been home long enough, you Old Salt," says he, "to see your wife house-clean? Why man, if she's a she-woman at all, she'll begin emptying her attic chests for an airing till you wonder where all the stuff ever come from! Just grand stuff, too, nice and warm and all, but out of style in the sleeves maybe, or too long or too short or something. Well now, see, no sooner does she hear tell of this here ship than she empties them chests in a rush of loving compassion. It was just contagious from ocean to ocean, man! Thousands and thousands and thousands of folks searching through chests and trunks and presses for things to 'Fill a Ship in Fellowship.' All honor to their kind hearts, says I!"

"Same here!" says I, pious-like. But that night, down in me bunk, I opens the little black Book what is always buttoned in me jacket and these here is the words springing out at me: "Though I give all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." So I reckoned I'd stop swabbing down my denominational decks with complacency, and board another ship built even bigger than this grand little relief vessel where just left-overs was stowed.

So, it being Sunday, I hustles over to take a look at the ship called Worship. For do you know, I'd an inborn notion that her sailing dates was "Sundays only!" But bless you, there ain't a minute of any day when Worship don't go sailing out from the shore of humanity into the measureless ocean of God's power. With half an eye I recognizes the good Baptist passengers from my home church, and the things they tells me makes me see what a ship it was I been neglecting: with the promises of God as decks to stand on, and the love of God as sails to catch all breezes both of prosperity and adversity, and the service of God as rudder and helm to help me steer a straight course, and the everlasting arms of God as girders underneath to withstand the wildest buffetings, and the Son of God on board to pilot me.

"Why, a fellow could venture safely anywhere with You!" I cries in reverent joy.

"Ah yes, you could," the Pilot answers, "But 'God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth.'"

Well, I signed up then and there for the voyage of life. I reckon them as ain't ever sailed out into the unknown on God's errands can't have the same enthusiasm as an Old Salt like me who has weathered real storms on board her. But I found out this—I kept making Worship list to port side. (You landlubbers may not know that starboard's the right and port's the left side of a boat; and a "list" means that the cargo has shunted until she sails with a decided lean.) Which was the way I made Worship lean toward the left instead of the right. "Worship Him in spirit and in truth," the Good Book says—well, I was all for worshipping in spirit; with prayers; and hallelujahs; and "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men." All the cargo collected on my travels shunted over fit to capsize any less steady ship. But it took an English sailor who had a passion for dictionaries to set me shifting the things in the hold so I could steer a straighter course to heaven by worshipping Him "in truth" as well as "in spirit."

It all came about quite natural, as big things generally does, I notice. Says I: "I don't rightly know what that word worship means, do you, mate?"

This was treasure-trove for him, the dictionary being chart and compass to that sailor, and he being British-born and bred has got quaint traditions back of him, too.

"Worship," says he, "is the grandest word in the dictionary. It's a picture, really."

"Paint it!" says I.

"Well," says he, waving his hand, "behold a castle, one of them old gray feudal strongholds with a stone fortress and a moat and a drawbridge and a portcullis and a dungeon, also an overlord owning everything in sight: all the land and all the people and all the buildings. See it?"

"Plain as day!" says I, busy adding turrets and benches on the fortress, and keys a foot long to the castle doors.

"Now," he continues, "there comes a man who wants to own some of the overlord's land, be enfiefed they called it then, so what does he do? Why, he makes his request, and once a year he takes a little of the earth of his new land into his two hands, and kneeling, he puts those two hands with the earth inside 'em into the two hands of the great overlord, and he says: 'Your worth-ship!' And that's what worship really is, mate, recognizing who gives you the right to ownership, and sharing it with him."

So then I see, plain as day, how I had selfishly shunted my cargo away from the right side of "worship Him in truth," and I felt conscience-stricken. So in the year 1922, when we come to anchor off the Denominational Shoals and the Deficit Reefs, I says to the Pilot: "Could you please put me ashore, sir? I ain't fit to sail no more in the comforts and luxury of this fine ship, with all them folks to be rescued on the rocks."

And would you believe it, but there was

The Steward Psalm

THE LORD is my partner: I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down and dream new possibilities for developing our joint business; he leadeth me beside those who still need the water of life.

He restoreth my sole excuse for calling myself "Christian"; he leadeth me in the paths of world service for his name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of denominational deficits I will bear my share, for thou art with me; thy work and thy tithe they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table of budgets before me in the presence of mine inertia; thou anointest the hinges of my safe deposit box with oil of gladness above its fellows; my purse runneth over.

Surely stewardship and tithing shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will build up the King's Business forever.

fitted out for the special benefit of a poor Old Salt like me a trim little lifeboat called Stewardship. To be quite frank, it took me a while to get the hang of that ship! I thought I was going to take to it at first, as I wrote my wife: "Dear wife, I never set sail in nothing like this before. For one thing, I'm the Purser! And therefore responsible for all moneys and cargoes, and must give an accounting of everything I have on board. Now it isn't compulsory, but it sort of seems as if in gratitude for all I've received I had ought to send back at least a tenth of what I've accumulated this year as an expression of my dependence on Worship. I been carried through deep waters on board that ship! But do you think you and the kids can spare that much docked off my wages and my perquisites?"

And she writes back: "It ain't a case of how much we can spare for God, Jack, but how much of God's money we should keep back just for us. I been reading in Deuteronomy 8, some verses put there special for you and me, and I feel we had ought to give back a tenth, because God gave you the power to earn it, didn't he? And it's all really his, anyhow, ain't it? And a man won't rob God, will he? He's trusted you with it, and it's required of stewards that a man be found faithful, ain't it? Well, I've decided that if we try real careful we can make the nine-tenths go as far as the ten-tenths; and I reckon when once you get to sailing around the world in that life-boat of yours you'll get back your money's worth just watching your tenth at work rescuing the perishing and caring for the dying."

So now, with all the nautical experience of an Old Salt who's learned the ropes, I'm begging you to climb aboard Stewardship with me and steer a straight course between the narrows of Mine and Thine. In case you're thinking: "What kind of a salt is this old fellow, anyhow?" I'll be reminding you of the words of the Lord Jesus (meaning you as well as me): "Ye are the salt of the earth." And if you got any doubts about whether you're a seasoned skipper, just recall that rich young chap who never broke a single one of them ten commandments but was such a reg'lar skipper when it come to parting with his worldly goods that the Great Pilot said to him, regretful-like: "These things ye ought to have done, and not to have left the others undone."

instead of having to pick potatoes up on a knife, we are going to lay rows of red hearts along the floor, and the contestants, at a signal, must start with a silver knife to pick up the hearts balancing them on the knife as they carry them back to a table. The one who picks up all the hearts in his row first is the winner in that set. Probably only four can play at a time. So when the next four play then the winner of that set must play against the winner of the first set, and so on, until the real winner is chosen. Polly has made a box of candy for this winner, with one big heart pasted on the lid and one on the bottom of the box. Each contestant pays a penny to enter the race.

5. Heart Aches!

This is a poem contest and we think it will be a regular circus! For we have twenty little blue hearts on each of which is written a disease (measles, mumps, fever, toothache, sprain, etc.), then there are twenty little white hearts on each of which is written a nationality (Chinese, Hindu, African, Negro, Indian, Mexican, Immigrant), and twenty little red hearts on each of which is written the name of one of our guests. Every contestant pays a penny and picks a red heart, a blue heart and a white heart out of a bowl, then with pencil and paper they must make up a poem using the disease, the nationality and the name on their three hearts. The prize for this will be a booklet of nine stories called "The Flyaway Doctor" (5 cents, send to Literature Dept., General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.)

6. Learn It By Heart!

This is to be an observation contest in which the players pay their penny, then form in single file and march once around a table (in a room which has been kept closed until now) on which are a great many different objects. Returning to the next room the players write down what they remember seeing. The fullest list will receive the prize—Bill's book.

7. Come To My Heart!

This is really only a bean-bag contest, but the bean-bags are to be thrown through a hole in a big red heart. The player who gets the most bags through will receive the prize of a bag that looks exactly like the bean bag, only it will be full of candy! It costs a penny to enter.

8. Hearts of the World!

This will be like tailing the donkey, only instead of a donkey we will have five big red hearts in a row, on the wall, with the picture of a Chinese child pasted in one heart, Indian in another, Japanese, African and immigrant. Each player pays his penny, and receives a slip of paper on which is written a Bible verse. He is then blindfolded, turned around three times and starts out to pin his verse on the heart he touches first. The one who comes nearest the center of a heart wins the prize—a copy of "A Noble Army," this year's junior study book which mother contributed.

We're Going to Have a Valentine Party!

By PEGGY

BILL and I are so excited over the Valentine party mother says we can have that we thought if we told you about it this week then you could plan to have one like it, yourself, for we know it's going to be loads of fun and it will help us earn a whole lot of dimes for the Continuation Campaign, too. We planned our party one dreadful sleety afternoon when Peter and Polly came home from school with us, and we've been nearly bursting with secrets ever since! So it's really a relief to me to be able to share the secrets with you. It all began because Bill wanted to earn more "Continuation" money.

"Let's have an entertainment and charge ten cents admission," Peter suggested.

"But what could we do?" asked Bill.

"Why not have a Valentine party?" Polly said in that dear prim way of hers that always hits the nail on the head.

"The very thing!" we all cried in a chorus.

"I know! Let's charge ten cents a ticket, little red heart tickets, and then tell every one to bring as many pennies with them as they can so they can enter all the contests and games at a cent apiece. That could include buying refreshments, too," Polly added.

Uncle Tim was the greatest help in the world and wrote us out a program of events, so that when the party arrives we won't get mixed up and do things at the wrong time! This is the way the contests are to come:

1. Broken Hearts. (A picture puzzle contest).

For this we got twenty envelopes. Then we cut out twenty hearts from smooth wrapping paper and on each heart we pasted a picture cut from Missions. Then one at a time we cut up each heart into about fifteen zig-zag pieces, putting the pieces into an envelope at once, so that they would not get mixed up with other hearts. When we play this, every guest who wishes to enter the contest buys an envelope for a penny; then, at a bell, the envelopes are opened and the pictures matched. The one who finishes first is to receive a prize—an all-day sucker, with a heart tied on it.

2. Two Hearts That Beat As One!

This is to be a three-legged race. Every one wishing to enter it pays a penny as his or her legs are being tied to his partners. The two who win are to receive two dear little jack-knives, Uncle Tim's contribution to our prizes. He has tied them on the back of a red heart, writing on the front: "No knife can cut our love in two."

3. Heart Failure!

Those entering this contest pay a penny apiece as they receive a sheet of paper and a pencil. They are to be blindfolded and must then draw a heart. The best "heart" is to be awarded one of those big chunky red, white and blue pencils which you can buy at the 5-and-10-cent store.

4. Heart Trouble.

This is to be like a potato race, only

Topic for February 19

THE SOURCES OF HAPPINESS

John 4:9-14; 15:11

"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy may be in you and that your joy may be made full."

The use of the sources of happiness will depend very largely upon one's philosophy of life. For the practical every-day kind of a Christian, the discussion of this topic must be taken out of the abstract and brought down to earth where human beings live. We can mention only a few, and briefly some of the sources of happiness.

1. Our purposes. There are many people who are not Christian but who find real happiness in real purposes. A man without a purpose is like a ship without a rudder. Some one has written:

"No man is born into the world, Whose work is not born with him."

A man's work involves certain purposes. These should be a source of joy to red-blooded young people.

2. Our purposes linked up to God. Life's greatest happiness comes to the individual who has sought and found the divine plan; who, by reason of his relationship with Christ, enters into the larger meaning and value of things. With confident optimism such an individual can read the following lines:

*"God is working his purposes out
As year succeeds the year,
God is working his purpose out,
And the time is drawing near,
Nearer and nearer draws the time,
The time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled with the glory of God
As the waters cover the sea."*

3. Our relationships. Fortunately for man, he must live his life among others of his kind. Unfortunately many times the intimate contacts of life bring the greatest problems. Whatever may be the problem, situations change but little and men will have to learn the fine art of getting along together. Young people have unusual opportunities in the store, office, the school and out in social activities. How difficult it is sometimes to make Christ's power felt in these contacts, and yet, if young people would make their greatest contribution to the life of the world, the supreme ambition of all life must be to make him known.

The more intimate relationship of our home should always be sanctified by the presence and power of Christ. "Christ is the head of this house" should be more than a motto prominently displayed upon the walls of the house in which we live. One of George Leslie McKay's favorite stanzas:

*"I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
Or to defend his cause,*

*Maintain the glory of his cross,
And honor all his laws."*

THE TWIN CITIES

At the invitation of the "Twin Cities Convention Committee" seventy-three representatives from the various churches of St. Paul and Minneapolis attended a get-together meeting at the Minneapolis "Y" on January 17, in the interest of the big St. Paul Convention, June 28-July 2. General Chairman Dr. Robt. Earl gave a brief address and then introduced others prominently connected with the entertainment of the convention. General Secretary White was present and spoke briefly. Enthusiasm ran high, a number pledging themselves to work for 100 per cent registration of their entire church people.

The Dano-Norwegian church, under the leadership of "Dic" Hoiland, has the honor of leading in registration. The society has fifty-one members and already sixty-two have been registered.

"100 of the church membership registered for the convention" is a very attractive slogan. A number of the churches hope to reach such a goal.

WESTWARD HO!

Very recently the superintendent, Mr. R. L. Simpson, of the First Baptist Sunday school gave a complimentary dinner to the officers and teachers of the school. The pastor, Rev. D. I. Coon, was asked to prepare a suitable program. Covers were laid for sixty-five. On the back of the hand-decorated place-cards, which were in the shape of a foot-ball, the following program of toasts appeared: 1. "In Training to Hit the Line." 2. "When the Whistle Blows"; 3. "The Kick-Off"; 4. "Team Work for a Touchdown"; 5. "Rooters on the Side Lines"; 6. "Making the Goal"; 7. "Ten Years Before the Game Begins"; 8. "Final Words from the Team Manager."

Following these five-minute toasts, the company separated into groups, according to departments of the school, for brief discussion of matters pertaining to special work of the individual groups.

The young people of the church are stimulating devotion in the home through their Community Altar League. Other societies of the city are cooperating.

HAWKEYE SPECIAL

The theme for the annual banquet of the B. Y. P. U. of the First Church, Keokuk, was "Touring with a B. Y. P. U." Mr. Harold Finlay acted as chauffeur; solo by Miss Marian Reed. Note the subjects discussed: 1. "Looking Out Through the Windshield." 2. "Looking in Through the Side Curtains." 3. "The Speedometer." 4. "Upkeep Cost." 5. "What Model." 6. "Looking Out Through the Back Curtain." Miss Virginia Ayres gave a reading.

AROUND THE CAPITAL

Last November, the Columbia Federation of young people initiated a "Better B. Y." Campaign. The campaign is to close May 28. There are five items on which points are to be awarded: 1. Standard of excellence, ten points. 2. Best percentage attendance at local meetings, members five points, visitors five points, total, ten. 3. Best percentage attendance at Federation meetings, members and visitors, ten points. 4. Highest percentage Bible readers, ten points. 5. Highest percentage gain in membership, ten points.

As an incentive to strenuous effort, the Federation offered a round-trip railroad and Pullman ticket to the St. Paul convention.

The Fifth B. Y. P. U. has increased 110 per cent in membership in two months and is still going.

There were 422 present at the last Federation meeting. The address was delivered by Dr. Abernethy of Calvary Church.

OVERHEARD IN HADES

LITTLE DEVIL: Master, that New World Movement planned on earth now seems a go. It bodes no good for us, I fear.

BIG DEVIL: My boy, your uncle has been running great campaigns himself and has not lived for naught.

LITTLE DEVIL: Is there a way to stop these drives for money and for souls?

BIG DEVIL: There is, my boy, leave that to me!

L. D.: What shall we do?

B. D.: Remember, son, sound doctrine and good deeds have been among our deadly foes.

L. D.: I know that, Master.

B. D.: Well, set one of these against the other; for I've always found that if we get Christ's crowd debating Christ, we're safe.

L. D.: Debating Christ?

B. D.: Yes; was he divine or human? I split the church wide open once by just a little trick of mine. I had them fight, if Christ were God, or only just like God. They fought, divided and—I laughed.

L. D.: But that was long ago.

B. D.: Yes, but I have new words to conjure with. No longer "substance," "essence," "person" interest the saints. Yet we can get them juggling with more modern terms.

L. D.: That's great. What do you mean?

B. D.: I mean that some say. "He's divine," and others, "No, deity must be used of him, to make one truly orthodox."

L. D.: I see the point. You've got an analytic mind.

B. D.: But that's not all. You see, my boy, Christ died. They say he did atonement make, and so he did. But no one yet has so expressed the meaning of his death that all agree. It's an ancient dodge of mine, I know, but still it works. If I can get them bandying words, "vicarious," "ransom," "influence" and the rest, they'll lose themselves in finer-spun theories of his death, and not remember that for which he died, you see.

L. D.: That's great—go on!

B. D.: Yes, suspicious sown of one another's orthodoxy will kill cooperation—without which their millions strong will fall apart and prove as weak as pygmies.

L. D.: My, what a head you've got!

B. D.: Well, I've not lived in vain. I know these Christians' fondness for the truth, and how they're prone to think that what they "know in part" is Truth itself—the very word of God. This I encourage; then those that don't conform are heretics whom good men may not trust. To some I whisper, "Don't forget the Bible is God's Word"; to others, "Nay, it conveys God's Word." And so they'll argue all about the Word and neglect to do what God's Word says, "Go into all the world and preach."

L. D.: How wondrous shrewd you are.

B. D.: Yes, I sometimes place a brick stamped "modern" in a doughty champion's hands; he hurls it at his brother's head so hard that he, stung severely by the blow, picks up another, labelled "tradition," and throws it back. It keeps 'em busy, and both forget I'm on the job! A creedal bomb thrown in their mission work will often turn the trick and blow their plans to flinders.

L. D.: You sure have learned to play the game.

B. D.: And I have many other weapons I can use; or rather, give to them to use 'gainst one another. The Bible says that Jesus comes again. But we can stave it off indefinitely if those commissioned to pray down the New Jerusalem and labor for its coming will only split and fight each other as to when, and how, and where this coming is to be. I've often hung a lot of trouble for these Christians on such like little pegs as "pre" and "post." They innocently tumble for it.

L. D.: Bravo, now I know why thou wast made the king of Devils.

B. D.: Yes, and shall remain so 'gainst divided opposition. Au revoir.

TELL THE LORD AND NOT THE "PUBLIC"

In the Dec. 31 number of THE BAPTIST a brother, commenting on an article in the Dec. 17 number entitled, "Is this a True Indictment," advised the author to tell his story to the Lord and not to the

Burmese Christians Give

"We hope to erect a dormitory on this compound soon. We have asked the Home Board for 10,000 rupees for it. We have also asked the Christian churches through the associations in this country for 6,000 rupees. In every instance we have received more than we have asked, the Burman church at Moulmein giving us more than 2,000 rupees. Our association gave us over 1,500 rupees."

A Mohammedan Officer

"Several of our most influential church members have been won to Christ through the influence of our institutional church work. Last year a Mohammedan official joined our social service guild. Later he asked me to open up a chapel in his home. I did not understand his motives so I declined. Still later he came a two days' journey in wet weather to attend a guild meeting, contributed $200 and said that he really wanted to become a Christian. I have given him a New Testament and some Christian literature. It means something for an official to stop his work and come two days' journey to attend a Christian service."

"Public." This set me thinking and this is in part what I thought: When one writes a publication to THE BAPTIST he is not writing to the "public," but to the brotherhood of Baptists; and who has a better right to know our perplexing problems and the work and the status of the church than this brotherhood and to whom on earth can we turn for sympathy and counsel if not to our Baptist brotherhood?

The status of every church in this brotherhood should be of the deepest concern to every other church for in more ways than one the churches stand or fall together. No church can say to other churches "I have no need of thee," any more than one organ of the body can say to another "I have no need of thee." No church lives unto itself and no church dies unto itself. We are all one body in Christ. The place that the country church has held in the past—and a larger place is open for it in the future—in the circle of Baptist churches makes it one of the strategic points in the work and triumph of the Kingdom of God. In the past it has served as a great feeder to the ministry. A few years ago I saw the statement that 95 per cent of the ministers in New York City were country bred. If this is true of New York how much more is it true of smaller cities, country and village churches!

Also the country church has been an important feeder to the city churches in furnishing them many of their most substantial and trustworthy laymen. It has the first chance to mould and shape the young lives of today for these positions awaiting them in the ministry and as laymen at home and abroad. (Let the country church take these facts to heart, face to face with the Lord of the harvest.) Therefore the Baptist brotherhood of churches should be much concerned in and should know the status of churches great or small, good or bad within its embrace. Not that it may make unkind criticisms of the church that has fallen by the wayside, but that it may help by its sympathy, counsel, prayers and personal touch.

Brother, is your church failing to function as a member of the great Baptist brotherhood? Tell it to Jesus and tell it to the brotherhood through THE BAPTIST and thousands will come to your help through prayer and those who are able will willingly assist through the personal touch, for we are all brethren in Christ to help that church that has fallen victim to sin and has lost the joy of salvation and is looking to hogs, merchandise or what not to restore it. Coming back into fellowship with Jesus in sacrificial service is the only thing that can restore it.

International Lesson for February 19

ELISHA AND NAAMAN THE SYRIAN
2 Kings 5:1-27. Golden Text: Psalm 103:2, 3

Time and Place

The time is about 850 B. C., with probably Jehoram, son of Ahab, king of Israel and Ben-hadad II of Syria. There is temporary peace between the two countries, after border warfare, in which the little Jewish maid had been taken captive. The Syria of that time did not include Palestine as it does today. Damascus, its chief city and the oldest city in the world, was the commercial center of a prosperous district and famous for its beauty and wealth. It was a journey of about 125 miles that Naaman took thence to Samaria.

Lesson Story

Naaman, captain of the Syrian army, conqueror, a mighty man of valor, was a leper. Kindly concern for him was felt from the little captive handmaiden to the king, so that when the former said to her mistress "Would that my lord were with the great prophet that is in Samaria! Then would he recover him of his leprosy." this word was carried to the king, who directed Naaman to go to the king of Israel bearing a letter from himself. Naaman, with valuable presents and silver and gold to the amount of about $80,000, took the long journey, anticipating a magnificent reception. His arrival with a letter from the king of the erstwhile enemy country had the effect of greatly disturbing Jehoram, but Elisha said, "Let Naaman come now to me and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel." When Naaman and his retinue appeared before the house of the prophet, Elisha sent his servant to him with the command: "Go and wash in the Jordan seven times." He was not treating Naaman as a mighty man, but as a sick man who had come to him for help. But Naaman took the command, given through a servant, as little short of an insult. The undesirability of the muddy Jordan, down the borders of which he had journeyed for miles on his way thither, was fresh in his mind. If river bathing was the cure for leprosy, why not the clear and beautiful rivers of his own country? He was in desperate straits, however, so that it was not a difficult matter for his officers and servants to persuade him to forget his indignation and obey the command, especially when he recalled the last clause of it—"and thy flesh shall come again to thee and thou shalt be clean."

Leading Thoughts

1. "A mighty man—but a leper." Mighty men—lepers with sin abound today.
2. "Thus and thus said the maiden"— what a helpful, far-reaching "thus and thus!" "Let the words of my mouth be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord." 3. "If the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it? How much rather than!"—the simple thing at hand. Most people are ready to do great things, but the unattractive, obvious, humble duties are another matter. Obedience to a not very pleasant command brought to Naaman the great reward.

Evangelism In Religious Education

By E. M. STEPHENSON.

THE "Great Commission" makes evangelism a world-wide and an age-long enterprise. It is the chief work of the church of Christ.

In this commission the disciples of Jesus are named as those who are to be his agents in evangelizing, in making disciples of all peoples. He promises to accompany them in spirit every one of the days till the commission is discharged.

The chief element in the means employed in this work is the story of Jesus as given in the Gospels, the most compelling and spiritually effective message ever given by voice of angel or tongues of men. What could have been more effective in the perfecting of Apollos than the simple story of Jesus as told him by Aquilla and Priscilla? Or what could the apostle Paul have used with better success than this story in enkindling the souls of the twelve brethren whom he met at Ephesus who knew only the baptism of John?

There is also a suggestion of the methods by which this result is to be achieved. "Teaching is one way, and training to observe all that Jesus commands is another, which we are wont to include in "Religious Education," "Christian Education," and "Social Living." Paul had this idea of it as we shall see if we read Eph. 4:13 and Col. 1:28.

We have just passed through the Christmas season, and I have been pleased to note the evangelistic flavor. The churches have made good use of the festival in bringing the spirit of Jesus into the lives of all the children and others as well.

This is as it should be, for we have just ahead of us another very significant event in the celebration of Easter. Well nigh all pastors are planning their work so as to reach an evangelistic climax about Easter Sunday, which for this year is to be April 16. It is safe to say that between now and then, 100,000, mostly of the junior and intermediate ages of our Sunday schools will confess Christ in New Testament baptism in the churches of the Northern Convention. But whatever the number may be it is sure to be far less than it might have been if all who will feel such a step a duty could be reached. It is common observation that in all congregations many are discouraged by their parents, or forbidden outright, for one reason or another, and many more overlooked or neglected who might have been reached and added to the number of those who are being saved.

For the benefit of parents, pastors, Sunday-school workers and workers with young people I am presuming to give some suggestions as to how we may double our accessions this year without any more cost of time or labor or money.

For those churches which expect to hold evangelistic meetings for a week or more every night I would recommend a book entitled The Perennial Revival by Dr. W. B. Riley, a veritable thesaurus of the best instruction for that sort of evangelism. For those congregations which expect to confine their ingathering to a campaign in the Sunday school there is no better book than that masterpiece by Mr. Frank L. Brown, Plans for Sunday School Evangelism.

I would call attention also to a new book just now off the press of our own Publication Society of which the title is Constructive Evangelism, by Dr. Ingram E. Bill, pastor in Beloit, Wis. This is a book on sustained evangelism, and is worthy of the most serious attention.

From impressions that have borne in upon my mind through many years of observation, I think that every church should have a good, strong committee on the spiritual and social life of the church, with the pastor at the head. Such a committee could have a great influence on indifferent or unbelieving parents, standing in the way of their own children. Not many parents could resist an appeal from the most spiritual souls in a church. They would at least allow their children to obey the Master, and they themselves might come.

There are timid and inexperienced teachers who hesitate to deal personally with their pupils who might be strengthened and encouraged to win all their classes with a little sympathetic aid from this committee.

There is a growing gulf between the Sunday school and the church services. Whole classes with their teachers leave the church building at close of the school with entire indifference to the services of worship and preaching which follow. The fault is not altogether with the Sunday school. There should be more school consciousness in the church and congregation and a greater number of scholars in all of the services of the church. This could be brought about by the strenuous efforts of such a committee.

Our Own Folks

Dr. Lerrigo Becomes Home Secretary

The board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society announces the transfer of Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M.D., from the office of Candidate Secretary to the Home Secretaryship, which has been vacant since the resignation of Dr. J. Y. Aitchison in July, 1919. For two years and a half the duties of this office have been performed by Associate Secretary William B. Lippard and the Treasurer, George B. Huntington. The election of Dr. Lerrigo to his new office and his appointment as the society's representative on the cabinet of the New World Movement and on the General Board of Promotion brings imperatively needed relief to Mr. Huntington, who has served so faithfully and efficiently in a double capacity for many months. Dr. Lerrigo will continue as secretary for Africa and in charge of the medical work, and will also have general supervision of the candidate department, whose duties will be performed for the present by Rev. C. S. Keen, missionary in Nanking, now at home on furlough. In this way the board at the least possible expense fully mans the foreign mission ship for the trying voyage ahead.

Dr. Lerrigo accepts his new responsibilities thoroughly equipped for his task. He is in the maturity of a vigorous manhood, is filled with spiritual energy and enthusiasm and has had wide experience of men and things both at home and abroad. He is a worthy successor of the noble men who have held this great office in years now gone. He began with a successful term of missionary service in the Philippines, from which he retired on account of the health of his family. He was three years district secretary in New England, where his genial nature and prompt business methods endeared him to the hearts of the people. He then became secretary of the Five Year Program and later has had a remarkable career as the candidate for secretary of our own society. He will have the unanimous and hearty support of our board, and, we trust, of our entire constituency in his new and important field of labor.

On behalf of the Board of Managers: Frederick L. Anderson, chairman; William B. Lippard, recording secretary.

A Forward Movement Among The Churches in Utah

By M. L. RICKMAN

At the evening service of the New Year, Immanuel Church, Salt Lake City, burned the final mortgage, representing an indebtedness of $22,000. The paper was held by Mrs. J. E. Berkeley and lighted by Deacon N. D. Corser, amid the waving of handkerchiefs and Chautauqua salute. During the special service, a message was read from Dr. J. Sherman Wallace, of Madison, Wis., the former pastor who directed the campaign to "Lift the Load": "Congratulations to all the members of Immanuel Church. It was a big job and you did it well. I wish I could be with you Sunday night. May God bless you in the future as He has in the past. Give my love to all the people." The church building cost about $93,000.

On the evening of Jan. 8, Burlington Church, Salt Lake City, burned the mortgage on its property. The program was featured by a short address by a representative of each department of the church. Mrs. E. W. Senior held the mortgage over the tray and Deacon W. M. Sanderson applied the match.

January 11, Rio Grande Church, Salt Lake City, burned the mortgage on its property at the annual meeting, roll call and banquet. Miss Frieda Dressel held the mortgage and Rev. H. Jacobs applied the match to it.

At Wall Street Church, Ogden, the Negro people celebrated their freedom from debt, making a glad New Year for four churches in the state of Utah.

First Church of Ogden, Dr. L. A. Garrison, pastor, secured cash and pledges to the amount of $65,000 for a new church building. Immanuel Church, Salt Lake, will expend about $3,000 improving its property. Mr. George E. Merrill, Architect-Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, has furnished plans for new Sunday-school buildings at Rio Grande and Burlington churches and Taylor Mission, in Salt Lake, to replace the present single auditoriums in which they have been conducting their classes for a number of years. Bethel Church is planning an addition to its building to accommodate the primary department of its Sunday school. Rev. Earle D. Sims, of Chicago, is in charge of the work at Soldiers Summit, where he is building a new edifice which will be finished about April 1.

1922 opens with a splendid forward movement among the Baptists in Utah, the most difficult and probably the most important mission field in the United States.

Church News by States

MASSACHUSETTS

DR. FRED P. HAGGARD, long-time Baptist leader in missions, is passing through distressing anxiety. Mrs. Haggard, taken suddenly ill, has undergone a serious operation at the hospital at Wolfboro, N. H., and her condition is critical. There will be abundant prayerful sympathy for her and her husband.

ONE OF OUR PROMISING young ministers, who had resigned his charge, has prevented two churches, that were ready to do so, from calling him. Is this another good sign on the ecclesiastical horizon? A good reason for not accepting a call is also a good one for preventing it, lest ministers be unduly puffed up. True, the reason must be found soon enough.

DR. W. QUAY ROSSELLE is encouraged by full houses Sunday evenings at First Church, Malden. A series of services on the "Mighty Dramas of the Old Testament" is affording an opportunity to handle vital present-day questions without gloves, and is arousing wide interest. Dr. Rosselle is at once sowing seed and gathering harvest.

DR. P. H. MACDOWELL at First Church, Melrose, is leading in an effective and inspiring effort along practical lines of religious education. Wisely organized, led, and kept warm and vital, the work wins gratifying cooperation.

NEW HAMPSHIRE gains a good minister by the transfer of Rev. F. S. Boody from Wakefield to the important church at Franklin. The Wakefield Church is one of the strong suburban fields.

REV. U. M. SIMMONDS of First Church, Elizabeth, N. J., accepts the call of the Portland Street Church, Haverhill. In this change our state gains a strong minister whose remembered pastorate at Waltham will make his welcome back to Massachusetts.

JANUARY 10 marked the tenth anniversary of Rev. C. A. Burgess as pastor of Rockland Church, and was also the date set for the annual roll call and supper. More than 200 sat down to a bountiful repast, served by the Loyalty Club of the Bible school. An inspiring address was delivered by the Rev. Frederick S. Boody, until recently of Wakefield Church. At the close of a musical program, Rev. and Mrs. Burgess were called to the platform and presented with $300 in gold, in token of the affectionate regard of the church. A new pipe organ is being installed, the gift of Mr. Alonzo W. Perry, and a clock is soon to be placed in the church steeple.

RHODE ISLAND

REV. HERBERT S. JOHNSON, is the preacher at First Church, Providence, this month.

SOUTH CHURCH, PROVIDENCE, has called Rev. Fred Halner, who was at one time pastor of First Church, East Providence. Mr. Halner is expected at South Church Feb. 12.

EVANGELIST LYON AND HIS PARTY begin a series of meetings in a tabernacle in East Providence Feb. 22. The evangelical churches are united in the campaign.

PLAINFIELD STREET CHURCH, Providence, Rev. C. E. McColley, pastor, is conducting a Baptist Chautauqua for six Thursday evenings, Jan. 19-Feb. 23. The teachers are Miss Marion Place, Mrs. L. E. Swain, E. L. Clark, Rev. C. E. McColley, Rev. F. L. Wilkins. Special lectures will be delivered by Rev. S. D. Ringrose, B. T. Livingston, Earl H. Tomlin.

CONNECTICUT

TWENTY-FIVE MEMBERS received the hand of fellowship in First Church, New London, January 1. These new members came as the result of the regular evangelistic activity of the church. Every Sunday evening the pastor, Rev. Chester H. Howe, has made an evangelistic appeal with gratifying results. The church school is holding a monthly rally when all departments gather for the last fifteen minutes in the church auditorium. Attendance has increased beyond all previous record. Miss Mabel E. Brown, pastor's assistant, has organized an Amona Class for young women and an Intermediate C. E. Society, both of which are growing rapidly. She also conducts a story hour for the children attending morning worship, who are dismissed to the church school rooms during the singing of the hymn before the sermon. These children are organized as a Herald Band. Mrs. Howe has organized a Junior C. E. and a Crusaders Society among the junior children. Every department of the church is cooperating in the evangelistic and educational program with strong emphasis on missions.

REV. IVAN BENEDICT has closed another successful year as pastor of Branford Church. Never before has the church shown such a deep interest in missions and evangelism. Improvements are being made on the house of worship.

DR. J. N. LACKAY, PASTOR of South Church, Hartford, put on a strong program during the month of January in the interests of education, evangelism and missions. He was assisted by Rev. Clifton D. Gray, president of Bates College; Gov. Everett E. Lake, of Connecticut, and Hartford City Corporation Counsel Walter Schultz. Another interesting feature was a gospel team of the nations from Hartford Theological Seminary, representing Japan, China, Philippines, India and America. The program one evening was in the hands of a gospel team of six young people in the local church. The program closed with three Salvation Army speakers from New York City assisted by South Manchester Salvation Army Band. Music was furnished by the church quartet and chorus, together with the Colonial Quartet. The church has just closed the best year in its history. Raised for all purposes $22,607.10. There remains a balance of $1,962 on the current expense side of the account. The father-and-son banquet will be held at the church Friday evening, Feb. 17.

IN OLIVET CHURCH, HARTFORD, Rev. Herbert B. Hutchins, pastor, is stressing Bible-school work with a ten weeks' course of instruction. Rev. W. T. Thayer, director of religious education is conducting courses on the organization and administration of the church school. Miss Edith M. Town is conducting courses in story telling and hand work.

CONFERENCES ON STEWARDSHIP have been held by the ministers in all six of our associations. Conferences on stewardship have been held for representatives of the churches in all the associations. Stewardship in its deepest meaning and most searching demands, as set forth by Christ, is beginning to grip our people as never before. We look for great things in the February campaign.

REV. JAMES MCGEE HAS JUST entered upon his seventh year as pastor of Calvary Church, New Haven. Mr. McGee, who is chairman of the evangelistic program of the State Convention, is in great demand throughout the state as a conference speaker on evangelism.

AT FIRST CHURCH, HARTFORD, the work is moving forward with vigor, and in a harmonious spirit. Dr. White, wide-awake, wins willing workers, because of a worth-while program. The church raised during the past year $54,000, 61 per cent of which was for benevolences. Twelve years ago when Dr. White became pastor the church was raising for all purposes $10,000. Through the years the pastor has been preaching stewardship, not as a legalistic demand but rather as a joyous privilege the Christian has for giving expression to his love for Christ and devotion to Kingdom interests. There was a net gain of seventeen new members for the year 1921. This church is organized on the family group plan, with forty-four groups representing 540 families. Every group is a hive of industry. The women have eight groups of ten women each who are pledged to pray for the success of the Woman's Continuation Campaign and all its affiliated interests.

NEW JERSEY

RIDGEWOOD, EMMANUEL: A series of Thursday evening suppers, Bible studies and general discussions on "The Church and Its Work," have been planned. The discussions are on "The Church and Its Women" by Miss Helen Hudson, publicity secretary, Women's Foreign Mission Society; "The Church and Its Social Obligations," by Dr. Samuel Zane Batten, secretary social education department, A. B. P. S.; "The Church and the Bible School," by Rev. Otto Laegeler, superintendent Sunday-school and young people's work of the N. J. Baptist Convention; "The Church and Its Community," by Rev. Charles Goodal, Roselle; "The Church and Americanization," by Dr. C. A. Brooks, secretary city and foreign-speaking missions, A. B. H. M. S.; and "The Church and Its Kingdom Task," by Rev. J. Earle Edwards, superintendent N. J. Board of Promotion. The pastor, Dr. T. H. Sprague, will conduct each evening a Bible study related to the themes under discussion as based on the Gospel of Luke. The church is now credited with approximately $20,000 as paid over on account New World Movement. Mr. Frank H. White of the church has been elected a member of the board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

WEST VIRGINIA

SINCE NOV. 1, J. D. VANNOY has been pastor of First Church of Buckhannon. The work here seems to be on the upgrade with congregations increasing and the Sunday school the largest that it has been for five years or more. The B. Y. P. U. is growing in membership attendance, and interest and a Junior Society has been organized.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. L. F. TAYLOR, formerly of Tarentum, entered upon the pastorate of the Allison Avenue Church, Washington, February 1.

THE NEW EDIFICE of Park Church, McKeesport, which represents an investment of approximately $75,000, was formally dedicated Jan. 22. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Rev. Emory Hunt, president of Bucknell university, who took for his subject, "The Church." The dedicatory exercises brought to a close a week of special exercises. During the day reports of the various committees indicated that cash and pledges had been secured sufficient to meet the indebtedness of the structure, with the exception of about $5,000 or $6,000, although it will be necessary to carry a mortgage for a considerable amount, as some of the pledges will extend over a period of several years. Rev. William R. Hill, pastor, was in charge, assisted by Rev. William Chappell, secretary of the Pittsburgh Baptist association. Rev. M. A. Sloane, one of the veteran Baptist ministers of the Pittsburgh district, recited from memory the fourteenth chapter of St. John, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. T. Davis, of East McKeesport, a former pastor of the church. Mr. Hill has been with the McKeesport Church two years. Previous to this he was pastor-at-large for the denomination in North Dakota.

NEW YORK

PROSPECT AVENUE CHURCH, BUFFALO, is enjoying unusual prosperity. Dr. H. Wyse Jones conducted recently an evangelistic campaign which gave great spiritual stimulus to the work of the church. The earnestness and consecration of the evangelist have left a marked impress upon those who heard him during the two weeks' services. The solid character of his work made it easy for the pastor to conserve the results. Mr. Ralph Stewart who assisted Dr. Jones was requested to remain for three months to assist in choral work and in the Sunday school. His wife ably assisted the women of the congregation by the organization of a business women's club of which she was the teacher. Rev. J. W. Millard has been engaged as neighborhood visitor. Through this community contact and a strong evangelistic program the Sunday evening congregations have doubled and almost every Sunday there have been responses to the invitation. These conversions have given new encouragement to the church and to the pastor, Rev. John T. Cowan, who is now beginning his sixth year of able ministry.

IN THE FOUR YEARS of the present pastorate the Lafayette Avenue Church, Buffalo, has received 334 new members, 144 by baptism. The church has closed a year of steady service and readjustment during the industrial depression. It is cooperating materially in the New World Movement having more than raised its first year's quota last year. More money is being given to missions than is expended on current expenses. Two teacher-training classes are being conducted for the growing demands of the Bible school. Jan. 1 the congregation adopted the plans for the new church and departmentalized Bible School building submitted by the building committee. The board of architecture of the American Baptist Home Mission Society has rendered invaluable service in the building plans. It is hoped to begin the new building early in summer.

EMMANUEL CHURCH, BROOKLYN, observed the week of prayer Jan. 8-15, with the assistance of Rev. John H. Strong, of Rochester, recently pastor of the Eutaw Place Church, Baltimore. Dr. Strong preached morning and evening both Sundays and each week evening except Saturday. A diligent student of the New Testament, a man of prayer and of a profound and vital religious experience, a preacher, winsome and persuasive, he brought us all face to face with our Lord and made us to see the vast spiritual resources at our disposal. The fact that he is taking some months to carry through literary plans of his father makes it possible for him to render such a service as this.

Colgate University

One of the most pleasant social affairs held at Colgate this winter was the reception given by the students in the Theological Seminary to the men in the college who are preparing for the work of the ministry. This year the event took on added interest in that Dean J. F. Vichert and his bride were in the receiving line. Eaton Hall was prettily decorated for the affair. Music was furnished by the Seminary orchestra. Among the 78 students in the university fifty-four are in the seminary, and of the men in the college twenty-nine are preparing for religious work. The student volunteer organization has fourteen members who are looking forward to service on foreign fields.

Bible classes for students meet regularly in the Baptist Church Sundays. These classes are taught by members of the university faculty. Two hundred and twenty-five students have elected the curriculum courses in Bible study offered in the university.

Arrangements have been completed with the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention whereby Rev. Allyn K. Foster will hold a series of religious meetings on the campus just preceding the Easter vacation.

Two New Baptist Schools

Last September, after a period of four years' inaction, Cook Academy dormitory was reopened. The building has been put in excellent condition at an expense of more than $75,000. It is now a modern dormitory, having swimming pool, basket ball court, and hot and cold water in the dormitory rooms. Registration has far exceeded the expectation of the board of trustees. At present, there are about 120 students registered. New students are being received every month and the outlook for the academy was never brighter. There are several students preparing for the ministry, and many boys who have passed the high school age have found opportunity at Cook to continue their study under favorable conditions. Principal Cate and those associated with him have been earnest and constant in their efforts to promote the interests of the institution, and the result is most gratifying.

Keuka College at Keuka Park, suspended instruction in the spring of 1915. It reopened this fall as a college for women with the registration of thirty-seven freshmen. Three others are to enter in January. Already a considerable number have registered for September, 1922, and there is every indication that the college will reach its capacity in its fourth year. Six of the freshmen have volunteered for missionary service. Several others are giving the matter earnest consideration. There are twelve departments, offering courses which lead to the degrees of bachelor of arts and bachelor of science. The students have organized various societies incident to a college. The Y. W. C. A. is strong and aggressive. They have adopted Madras College in India as their sister college and have already raised a considerable fund which is to be sent to Madras. Summer school begins June 29, and there is an opportunity to shorten the years spent in earning a degree. Summer school offers courses in regular college work, also special courses in music and teacher training for Sunday school and community workers.

Mrs. Josephine Martin Glidden

With the filing of the will of Mrs. Josephine Martin Glidden, who died in Sioux Falls, December 25, was revealed another evidence of her life-long devotion to education. As the last of the long list of benefactions she left to Sioux Falls College a bequest of $50,000 to be used in the erection of a girls' dormitory to be known as the Glidden-Martin Hall, in memory of her father, mother and brother.

Mrs. Glidden was born in Clarendon, Orleans County, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1847, the daughter of Dan and Dorcas Putnam Martin, who were faithful Baptists. She received her education at Livingston Park Seminary, Rochester, N. Y. She was united in marriage to Daniel S. Glidden, June, 1871, and went to Montour, Iowa, where Mr. Glidden was superintendent of schools. In 1878 they moved to Sioux Falls, where they gave their lives in the building up of the community. Mr. Glidden died in 1920.

For more than forty years Mrs. Glidden was a public-spirited citizen, throwing her strong, cultivated personality, with true missionary zeal, into the task of bringing the advantages of culture and refinement to a pioneer community. She was influential in organizing a public library soon after she came to Sioux Falls and has been on the library board during most of its history. She was one of the organizers of the History Club which has been an influential organization of the city. A firm believer in Christian education, she watched the growth of Sioux Falls College through its entire history and contributed liberally to its support. Her interest in Christian education and the confidence inspired in her by the scholarship and devotion of such men as former presidents E. B. Meredith, A. J. Finch, Frank Walsh, A. W. Norton, E. F. Jorden, and Rolvix Harlan and many other faithful workers, led her to remember the college in her will.

It has been said that this gift of $50,000—it will possibly amount to nearly $60,000—is the largest ever made by a citizen of South Dakota to the cause of education, and it may prove to be the largest single gift ever made to a South Dakota college.

The surviving relatives are cousins, among whom are Mrs. D. M. Inman, Mrs. M. D. Thompson, and Mrs. R. A. Morgan, of Vermillion, S. D. Mrs. J. S. Ferner, of Holley, N. Y., a niece of Mr. Glidden, came to be with her during the winter and was at her bedside until the last. Her only brother, Chas. J. Martin, formerly president of the Washburn-Crosby Co., at Minneapolis, died several years ago.

IOWA

AMES CHURCH reports interest among college students, with a predominance of young people at mid-week prayer meeting. An evangelistic campaign was held at the college January 6-8 under the leadership of David R. Porter, secretary of student department of the Y. M. C. A., and Miss Winifred Wygal, executive secretary of the Y. W. C. A. of the North Central Field, assisted by the Omaha Male Quartet. This campaign suggested to Pastor R. B. Davidson an opportune time to preach on "Life Enlistment," with the result that on January 8 eleven young people came forward as having already dedicated their lives to Christian service; eighteen others joined them indicating that they wished thus to dedicate their lives. A Life Service League will soon be organized.

KANSAS

SOUTH LAWRENCE CHURCH of Wichita made a gain of ninety-six members during 1921, forty-four coming by baptism, fifty-two by letter and experience. Five died and fifteen were granted letters of dismissal to other churches, leaving a net gain of seventy-six. The church is less than six years old and has a membership well above 400. G. A. Creekmore led in the organization of the church and continues as its pastor.

FIRST CHURCH OF TOPEKA closed two weeks' revival services Jan. 15, under the leadership of Dr. Franklin W. Swift of Rochelle, Ill. There were 103 decisions. The majority will unite with First Church. This is the greatest revival the church has experienced in many years. Congregations were large from the first and all were captivated by the man, the message and the methods used. The music was led by the pastor, Rev. Chas. F. Mathews, supported by two large choirs.

NEBRASKA

Grand Island College

The enrollment this year is 138, an increase of about 60 per cent over last year. Repairs have been made on several of the buildings; the boys' dormitory redecorated and steam heat and shower baths put in; the girls' dormitory redecorated, the heating system changed and a hot water tank is now being put in to provide hot water for the occupants. The administration building has received new equipment for the chemical laboratory and new furniture for the president's office. The heating plant has been repaired, but a new plant will be necessary in the near future. The campus has been improved by the setting out of trees.

The gymnasium was relined just before the new year and three stoves are being placed in it. Two bleachers have been built and the basket-ball team is using the building for practice. For the first time it will be possible for the college to have its games in its own building. Grand Island high school will also have its home games here as the building is larger than the one they formerly used.

Plans for introducing high school students to the college are in operation. A personal letter and an attractive card showing the administration building have been sent to the Baptist churches of Nebraska and Wyoming and to the nearer churches of Colorado and Montana. The Nebraska convention set aside January 8-15 as Grand Island week during which time pastors of the state presented to their churches and to nearby high schools the importance of a Christian education and the need for trained leaders in the churches and in the work of the kingdom. A number of high schools will also be visited by the state convention workers and by members of the college faculty. To aid in this work an illustrated bulletin has been published which contains fifteen pictures of college buildings, class-rooms, laboratories and special groups.

ILLINOIS

FIRST CHURCH, MOLINE. Mr. Babcock, pastor, held its sixty-ninth annual meeting, reporting the most successful year in its history. Four hundred and fifty people sat down to dinner. The reports showed a marvelous growth in recent years. In 1915 there were 339 members; today there are 733. During this year there have been 120 baptized, twenty-two received by letter, twenty-nine by experience. The average attendance in the Sunday school was 331. There is an active B. Y. P. U. with a membership of seventy-four. The church raised for all purposes $11,435, of which $4,271 was for New World Movement. There were thirty-one visitors from out of town during the year. Average at prayer meeting was 93. Highest attendance at evening service was 683; average 404. People are continually turned away from the services for lack of room. A fine basement was recently finished, at a cost of $7,000, to accommodate the rapidly growing Sunday school. The church has twenty-five young people at College Three are preparing for the foreign field, and a young man is in Shurtleff College preparing for the ministry. Mr. Babcock is in the seventh year of his pastorate at Moline.

REV. G. H. MURCH, PASTOR of Centralia church, with his wife, has gone to Miami, Fla., to spend a month or more in the hope of regaining his former health which has suffered as the result of an attack of pneumonia the latter part of November. The church presented Mr. Murch with a purse of a little more than a hundred dollars toward the expenses of the trip, and continues his salary during his absence.

TRUSTEES OF FRANCES SHIMER SCHOOL, Mt. Carroll, voted Jan. 12 to erect a new dormitory for fifty pupils to be ready for the opening in September. Mrs. Enos M. Barton and Dr. J. S. Dickerson, of the Chicago trustees, were present. Dr. Theodore G. Soares, University of Chicago, was elected trustee in place of Dr. L. A. Crandall, resigned. The school has turned away students for lack of room for three years past.

THE EIGHTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING of First Church, Chicago, preceded by the annual church dinner, was held on Wednesday evening, Jan. 11. Although the church was pastorless the first nine months of 1921 no backward steps had been taken and church, Sunday school and other organizations reported progress. The new baptistry was dedicated Christmas morning by the baptism of five, four being adults. The new building housing the baptistry, adjoining and connecting with the church auditorium, affords additional Sunday-school rooms at a cost of several thousands of dollars. In addition to the above the church, Sunday school, and various organizations raised about $21,500. Of this amount some $5,500 was given for missions and benevolences. First Church is well established in its new location, and with the coming of Dr. Perry J. Stackhouse, pastor, the future seems promising.

JAN. 8 WAS "GO-TO-CHURCH" Sunday at First Church, Barry, T. Elmer Jones, pastor. The attendance was nearly 600. A School of Evangelism will be put on in the early spring.

ABOUT 300 MEMBERS of the church and congregation of First Church, Austin, gathered at the church edifice on the evening of Jan. 24 to wish the retiring pastor, Dr. Judson B. Thomas, and his wife God-speed on their journey to the South in search of health and rest. A fine program, consisting of music and readings was given and words of appreciation of the work of Dr. Thomas were spoken by Mr. L. T. Foreman, of the new Judson Church, by Dr. J. Ladd Thomas, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Austin, and by Dr. Benjamin Otto, Secretary of the Chicago Executive Council. Mr. E. S. Osgood spoke for the church and presented the pastor with a check for $1,040 expressive of the love of the church for him. Mrs. Thomas was not allowed to feel slighted, as Mrs. Guy Reynolds spoke very fittingly for the ladies of the church and presented her in their name with a beautiful ivory toilet set and a substantial gold piece. After a good rest, Dr. and Mrs. Thomas expect to return and to make their home in Austin, and while Dr. Thomas does not plan to serve again as pastor of a church his friends feel sure that some of the best service of his life for the Master is ahead of him. He has been pastor of the Austin Church for almost twelve years, before which time he was for many years district secretary for the western district for the Home Mission Society. In all he has been forty-one years in the ministry, his most notable pastorates having been in Topeka, Kan., Dubuque, Iowa, and Austin. The Austin Church while sorrowing greatly for the loss of its leader is planning to secure a new leader as soon as possible and to go forward into bigger and better work for the Master than it has ever done before.

MISSOURI

UNUSUAL PROGRESS is being made in the work of Central Church, Kansas City, since the coming of Rev. Chas. H. Berry as pastor last October. Several goals have been adopted, as: 100 in B. Y. P. U., 100 in study classes, 100 in Tithers' League, 100 in Intercessors' League, 100 new members during the year. The entire membership is organized into ten equal groups with three captains each, one for women, one for men, and one for young people. These various goals are pushed through the group units. The church is steadily developing along these various lines. The attendance at B. Y. P. U. has run as high as eighty-three, there are nearly fifty tithers, fully seventy-five are attending study classes and about twenty members have been added to the church roll, ten of them by baptism, in the last three months. The morning audience Jan. 15 filled the church to hear the pastor's sermon on "The Deity of Jesus Christ." Three young men accepted Christ and one young lady was received by letter. At the evening service seven young men were baptized.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of First Church, Columbia, was held on the evening of Jan. 4 with a large attendance. Reports from all departments of the church had been previously gathered and printed in a booklet which was distributed at the meeting. The reports show that this has been the greatest year in the ninety-eight years of the church's history. In the work of the past year of outstanding note are: The fine evangelistic spirit; launching of financial campaign for a new church building; tithing campaign in November; increased and steady attendance at prayer meetings; steady advance in Sunday-school work; increased attendance and substantial work in both B. Y. P. U.'s; organization of women's work, and in all lines of work has moved steadily onward. There were 155 additions to membership, which is now 890. The church raised for all purposes $16,582.10. This ends Dr. T. W. Young's ninth year as pastor.

MICHIGAN

A RECORD-BREAKING CROWD of nearly 200 enthusiastic people attended prayer meeting at Jefferson Avenue Church, Detroit, last Wednesday and at a special meeting following the service a unanimous call was extended to Rev. A. V. Allen, to become pastor of the church.

REV. THOMAS B. MARSH, president of the Pontiac Council of Churches, chairman of the executive committee of that organization and former president of the Pontiac Pastors' Union, has tendered his resignation as pastor of Bethany Church, where he has occupied the pulpit for four years, to answer a unanimous call to the pastorate of First Church, Sault Ste. Marie. He leaves Pontiac Feb. 7. During Mr. Marsh's pastorate the membership of Bethany Church has increased about 200 per cent and the Sunday school has grown so large that it has been necessary to divide it into two sections. First Church at Sault Ste. Marie is one of the leading Baptist churches of the state and the largest north of Bay City. Its present pastor, J. H. Vatcher, has been called to First Church of Port Huron. Rev. Marsh's successor has not as yet been named.

AT THE BIBLE-SCHOOL SESSION of Scotten Avenue Church, Detroit, January 15, a dramatization of the lesson "Elijah's Challenge of Baal Worship," arranged by Supt. Geo. A. Small, was enacted by members of the school. At the request of the pastor and others it was repeated at the evening service.

REV. A. F. BRASS, PASTOR OF WALLED LAKE Church, has given notice that, owing to failing health on the part of his wife and himself, he must retire from active pastoral work, resignation to take effect April 1. Mr. and Mrs. Brass will make their home in Wixom, where Mr. Brass will be available for pulpit supply as long as health permits. Any young or middle-aged married man may write concerning the pastorate to Miss L. E. Hoyt, Walled Lake.

NINETY-TWO MEMBERS were received by First Church, Lansing, during 1921, bringing total membership up to 1,263. Forty homes were reached in a movement of Christian Americanization. About 100 were added in this way to the Sunday-school attendance. Calls were made in "friendly service" by the Woman's union at 2,960 homes. Of the $36,571.74 which constituted total receipts of the church for the year, $15,000 went to missions. The remainder was taken up by current expenses and the community building fund.

REV. GEO. W. BATES, FORMERLY of Clinton Ave. Church, and Rev. A. F. Waechter, of Stanton Park Church, helped Rev. W. A. Steinkrans, of Scotten Ave. Church, Detroit, to conduct two weeks' successful revival before Christmas. New Year's Eve three young men were baptized at the stroke of midnight. There have been baptisms every Sunday night and will be through January.

AN INTERESTING SERIES of revival meetings has recently been held at Carsonville. The pastor, Rev. W. F. Gawne, was assisted by Evangelist F. A. Geisenheller of Chicago. In addition to the quickening of the membership of the church, there were a number converted.

Executive Board of the Woman's Missionary Society

The executive board of the Woman's Mission Society of Michigan assembled Jan. 10 at Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, with the president, Mrs. Edward Wilson, in chair. The ladies were pained to hear of the illness of Mrs. N. H. Bowen, secretary-director. Mrs. Joshua Roberts, secretary of Alpena Association, is also ill in a Detroit hospital.

Mrs. L. N. Smith, acting young woman's secretary, reported eight new W. W. G. chapters, also that six boxes had been sent by girls to missionaries. Children's secretary, Miss Howell, reported a new Jewel band at Coldwater and one at Monnier Road, Detroit, with thirty babies. A band of Heralds at Battle Creek has been graduated into Crusaders and a new Herald company of fifty members organized. Mrs. L. J. Wreggit, secretary of literature, reported having sent out thirty-four packages and written seventeen letters.

Miss Cooper spoke of the wonderful time the missionaries had on their various fields at the Christmas season. $136.30 was received in cash and goods received valued at $184.50. Volunteer teachers are much needed at negro center where 4,000 pupils are enrolled.

Mrs. W. H. Dorrance, chairman Christian Americanization Committee, spoke of some of the plans of Detroit churches. A wonderful work is being carried on in Pontiac by Mrs. Chas. Woodbridge.

Mrs. Wadsworth was present and told of her work and plans. It is hoped she will have the prayers and cooperation of Michigan Baptist women as she spends the next three months in the state.

Mrs. Jas. W. Clapp of Pontiac was chosen trustee to fill vacancy caused by resignation of Mrs. Z. Grenell.

The White Cross work is now divided into three departments. The overseas work should be reported to Mrs. Arthur Bassett, Vinsetta Park, Royal Oak, Mich., overland work is in charge of Miss Marie Heaton, 50 Charlotte Ave., Detroit, and the city mission work will be looked after by Mrs. Weaver.

Miss Grant spoke at length on plans and problems for Continuation Campaign and the building of dormitory at Kalamazoo College.

JANET BURGESS.

MINNESOTA

FIRST CHURCH, St. Paul, is beginning to reveal the effects of the inspiring leadership of the pastor, Dr. John A. Earl. The annual meeting on January 18 was marked by a spirit of enthusiasm and goodwill. The treasurer's report showed that nearly $40,000 had been contributed for all objects during the year. From a church of less than 1,000 resident members this is a remarkable accomplishment. During the year the church plant was thoroughly overhauled, a new gymnasium provided, and the entire plant renovated and decorated at a cost of almost $7,000. A moving picture machine has been installed, and on Sunday nights is used in connection with an evangelistic service. It is not uncommon for nearly 1,000 people to hear the gospel on Sunday nights. Wednesday is set apart as church day. The women meet in the afternoon, the families of church and congregation gather at the supper table, each of seven or eight different groups get together for study for an hour, then comes the family worship from 8:00 to 8:30. The Wednesday services are the most popular services held in the church. An intensive campaign of evangelism, community service and education is carried on all the time, the members cooperating by methods adopted by the pastor. A new office in this church is that of registrar which has charge of the records of the Sunday attendance for each church member; at the end of the month a letter is sent by the pastor to each absentee informing him that he has been missed. This method is working wonders in building up the attendance, and in keeping the church office informed with regard to the membership. Dr. Earl has been trying for months to secure a thoroughly trained and consecrated young man to take charge of the community work in this strictly downtown church.

Pillsbury Academy

The report of the Committee of Visitors to the Minnesota Baptist Convention at Duluth last fall, contained some facts about Pillsbury Academy that Northern Baptists who are supporting this splendid work ought to know.

It showed the earnest efforts of the trustees and faculty to throw about the entire life of the boys entrusted to their care, a strong Christian atmosphere. Visits to the class rooms revealed a faculty alert to take advantage of every opportunity in the English, history or required Bible classes to bring out the religious principles involved. The visit to the football field, during practice, showed the boys under Christian leadership interested not only in building up a football team, but in developing self-control and clean play. The local Baptist pastor, Rev. A. C. Wickenden, was there playing with the boys, who by requirements of the school must attend upon his preaching every Sunday morning.

The visitors found the school under splendid discipline. At chapel the boys gave most appreciative attention to an earnest message on the importance of prayer in a boy's life. It was the same in the dining-hall, when Dr. Price returned thanks at the beginning of each meal.

These facts may seem small to mention, but to a visitor who spends a day or two on the campus, they give the desired tone to the whole school life and he leaves the splendid hospitality of Dr. Price's home and of our time-honored school, wishing that a much larger number of Baptist boys were getting their high-school work under such excellent Christian auspices. —For the Committee, W. E. Woodbury, Chairman; A. F. Holmer.

OHIO

FIRST CHURCH OF WILMINGTON, OHIO, enters upon the work of the coming year with renewed zeal as it gratefully recalls the Lord's blessing of the past year. The Bible School has shown marked increase in attendance and interest under the leadership of Supt. Arthur Sutton. The pastor, with a few assistants, is conducting week-day religious education classes for boys and girls one day a week. The Dotereon chapter, World Wide Guild, Miss Catherine Snider president reports a successful year, and increase in the interest since the adoption of the Guild programs. The Woman's Missionary Society, Miss Louise Walker, President, continues to furnish instruction and inspiration to the church along missionary lines. Dr. Valentine, of Philippine Islands, was the acceptable speaker at a recent morning service in charge of the Woman's Society. During the past three months the pastor, Rev. P. L. Vernon, has been delivering a series of sermons upon the great problems of life and religion.

FUNERAL SERVICES for Dr. Thos. W. Powell, who died January 16, at the age of 85, were held in Mt. Gilead Church, January 18, by pastor D. E. Miller, assisted by Rev. J. H. Julian, pastor of Chester and Chesterville Baptist churches, and Rev. D. H. Cramer, pastor of the Mt. Gilead Presbyterian Church. Dr. Powell for years had not accepted any regular pastorate but has been known as "the Pauline evangelist," helping to tide along churches between pastorates. He would aid and guide them in any difficulties, help them to settle a pastor, then quietly step out and accept a similar work elsewhere. He has aided some of the largest and finest Baptist churches in America. He was the author of several books widely read. His friends were counted from Maine to California and from the lakes to the gulf.

CENTRAL CHURCH, COLUMBUS, combining with the local Railway Y. M. C. A., is holding an evangelistic campaign, Jan. 8-Feb. 6, with sermons by Rev. W. Pfeiffer, pastor, and Prof. P. P. Bilhorn as singer and chorus director. The church is located in the heart of the city which insures large audiences. Cottage prayer meetings are held and a well-equipped nursery enables mothers to attend services while their children are being cared for. Two campaign slogans have been adopted—"500 souls for God!" and "The heart of Columbus for the heart of Christ!" Central church has been doing constructive work during the past months. Among the most vital accomplishments was the revision of the church roll, Dec. 14, decreasing the membership from 500 to 272, since which time two have been received by letter.

special services. Last spring we found this helpful: Having obtained the hearty cooperation of the deacons, after considerable advertising we began on Sunday morning with a sunrise prayer meeting followed by a breakfast which was followed by a conference, for instance, of the Sunday-school workers, closing the first series of the day with the regular morning services, but making them specially evangelistic. A "four o'clock pleasant Sunday afternoon gathering," for which special invitations had been sent to those previously listed as prospects for church membership, was followed by a sunset supper and that by the regular evening services. The result was that workers were stimulated, "prospects" were attracted and on the very first day decisions were made for "Christ and his church"—the advertised slogan of the campaign. An unusually warm pressure by the hand of a middle-aged man after the morning sermon led to the securing of his promise to be out in the afternoon where the opportunity for personal work resulted in his decision for Christ and for baptism.

Social services, where everybody is friendly and the "prospects" are having a good time, are often better opportunities for personal work than more distinctively religious services. In the midst of some New Year's Eve "stunts" by different departments of the church, and before the quiet, serious last hour of 1921, a personal talk with a young man about thirty resulted, later, in his appearing before the deacons with such a joyous testimony that with radiant faces they voted to recommend him for baptism.

Once a spirit of expectancy is created the regular services easily take on an evangelistic character. After one such a woman manifestly was deeply moved. Called on during the week she made the decision. Her daughter was talked about and prayed for, and when seen also decided for Christ and baptism. The daughter had a chum who, on being spoken to, came at once. The chum had a sister who when visited was "almost persuaded." The sister had a husband who seldom went to church, but who had become interested in the pastor's class. A Sunday afternoon appointment was made with them with the result that upon rising from her knees tears of joy were in three pairs of eyes. Both husband and wife shortly afterwards were baptized.

Once "the thing" is in the air, appointments can be made, over the telephone or otherwise, and with few preliminaries it is possible to get down to business immediately. In so doing the pastor in selling his wares must be on both sides of the counter at once. For instance, lodge men, hesitating at baptism, can be appealed to effectively by its unequalled symbolism. No apology should be made for approaching men. The pastor should believe that he is selling the biggest thing on the market and manifestly should act on that belief. At the same time, however, he should appeal to the heroic and not primarily to the desire for a good bargain. There should be a maximum of testimony and a minimum of discussion, and in case of a failure to "sell" his "prospect" at once the attempt should end in such a way that the deal may be closed later.

An evangelistic season should be looked upon by the pastor as the time for realizing on his and his church's investments of sociability and good will in the preceding months in the church, on the train, in the club, in the lodge, on the links, etc. To prepare for this, it is well to read much about evangelism even though there is not complete agreement with all that is read. The example of successful personal workers, but supremely that of the Master himself, should be studied. Then, with expectancy created and the atmosphere electric, the pastor should fare forth prayerfully, confidently, thankful for his inestimable privilege of personal evangelism. For it is a great job. In all the work and joy of the ministry there is nothing quite equal to it.

Meetings to Help People

By T. CLIFTON HARRIS

SHINGLEHOUSE is a window-glass manufacturing town, hard hit by the government restrictions on that industry during the war; population about 1,800; Methodist Episcopal, Adventist, Roman Catholic, and Baptist churches.

I will divide our campaign into three stages:

1. Preparation: Large emphasis was placed on this for two months preceding our meetings. Sunday-morning sermons were on "revivals"; evening sermons evangelistic; mid-week services given to instruction in personal work; text books, the Bible, "Win One," by Lamb, and "Taking Men Alive," by Trumbull. A constituency list of about 180 was prepared. Prayer lists were made out and handed in. About twenty crusaders responded to the appeal for personal workers. Names from the constituency list were assigned these crusaders during the campaign. Cottage prayer meetings were held three evenings each week for a month preceding the meetings, and in the mornings during the meetings. A personal letter was sent to each person on the constituency list, by the pastor, urging acceptance of Christ. Enclosed in each letter was a declaration card, and one on "How to accept Christ and become a member of the church."

The campaign was well advertised both before and during the meetings. Each family connected with the church and Bible school was given a placard to place in the window; the local newspaper, the church bulletin board, weekly topic cards distributed, a large sign on the front of the church, personal announcements and invitations by letter, were all used. Our regular choir was augmented and new song books secured. No socials of any kind were held for the month preceding the meetings. We aimed to have as many persons linked to the campaign, and as many new interests as possible. A goal was set for "Fifty new members for Christ and the church by Easter."

2. The campaign proper: Our "meetings to help people" as we called them, opened three weeks before Easter. At once the value of our preparation was manifest. The first night the auditorium was crowded, and with very few exceptions this was the rule during the campaign. Our Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, and Sunday-school classes attended on different nights. Two Sunday afternoon meetings were held, one for fathers, and the other for mothers, admission being by ticket, distributed Friday evening and through the local stores on Saturday. A number of evenings ten-minute outdoor song services by the choir preceded the indoor meetings. No offerings other than the regular Sunday offerings were received. Announcements were made at the very beginning that no division would at any time be made in the meetings between the saved and the unsaved. No unsaved person was approached during the meeting in the church by personal workers—their work was all done outside of the church. No outside help was secured, the pastor doing all his own preaching. Easter was a red letter day in the history of this church, starting with an outdoor sunrise song service, followed by a baptismal service before a crowded auditorium; an infant dedication service, and baptism, and the hand of fellowship extended to forty-eight new members at 10:30 a.m., a meeting for fathers at 2:30 p.m., an outdoor song service, and baptism again at 7:30 p.m. We had more than reached our goal. The meetings were continued for another week, with nineteen additional confessions, making a total of ninety-three decisions in all, about seventy-five of whom united with this church. About four or five were under thirteen years of age; about one-half between thirteen and eighteen years. About one-third of the entire number were from our Bible school. With the exception of about twenty of the number all who made the decision were on our constituency list, many of them being dealt with by the personal workers outside of the church.

3. After the campaign: A letter of welcome was sent by the pastor to each new member, and also to the parents of all under sixteen years of age coming into the church. A pledge card, and an "opportunity" card were handed to each new member at the time of receiving the hand of fellowship. Then followed a week of intensive instruction in church membership. A luncheon by the men of the church to the boys under sixteen and their fathers; a luncheon by the women of the church to the girls under sixteen and their mothers. A luncheon by the men of the church to all the new male members over sixteen years; a luncheon by the women of the church to all the new female members over sixteen years, occupied four evenings in which as we sat around the table the pastor gave an hour's table talk on the duties and privileges of church membership.

To much emphasis cannot be laid on the value of our preparatory work, of the cottage prayer meetings both before and during the meetings, on the work of the choir, of the personal work of the crusaders, and on the faithful preaching of the gospel by our pastor, who at the same time kept in touch with and directed every phase of the campaign.

The Promise of His Coming, by Chester C. McCown, New York; The Macmillan Co. $2.

Dr. McCown is professor of New Testament Religion in the Pacific School of Religion. He is not a pre-millennialist, but believes that there is danger in indifference to such interpretations of the second advent. The subject, he thinks, would not have held so important a part in the thinking of Jesus and Paul if there were not in it values indispensable to Christian thought and feeling. This book is an attempt to interpret the idea of the second advent historically. Many will find it entirely inadequate. But there are none who will not find it helpful as an introduction to a fairly difficult subject.

In days when every live minister is preaching short sermons to the children of his congregation, a volume which shows how other men do it is bound to be suggestive. This volume of story-sermons by the successful pastor of the Shadyside Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., is certain to get good reading by his brethren. Parents of children will also find it useful.

They are particularly prepared for church schools having Sunday, week-day and expressional sessions. Schools which are trying to do first-rate work will wish at least to observe the method which is here used. It has come a long way from the older type of lesson helps.

The Life of Jean Henri Fabre, by the Abbé Augustin Fabre, translated by Bernard Miall; New York; by Dodd, Mead & Co.

It was a happy inspiration of this biographer to let the noted French scientist tell his own story in his own words by the free use of extracts from the monumental works of the poet-seer; the good taste and the expert skill of the transcriber is shown in the clever arrangement of the autobiographical sections and the illuminating connecting passages. Here is presented the child life in the wild environment of Malaval, the gradual rising from peasant to that of elementary school-teacher, later almost a professor; then of the stroke of fate, crushing at the time, destined to set his feet in the path which led to close study and writing about insect life. The hard existence, the true poetry inherent in the man and the final achievement of success and fame against bitter odds is clearly shown. One of the greatest points brought out is the sincere religious faith dominating the man at a time when physical science was expected to show the utter vacuity of the God-Idea. Besides his great services to science, Fabre deserves much valuation for his definite stand for the certainty of a Supreme Deity expressing himself by and through all created things according to a definite plan. The biography is most interesting and will serve its purpose if it leads the reader to the original works of Fabre. The complete set is now translated into English and issued by the publisher listed above.

"It Is to Laugh"

"Mary," said the mistress of the house, when she discovered dust on the table, "I can write my name on this table."

"Yes, ma'am," replied Mary, beaming, "I always said there is nothing like education."

At the end of six weeks of married life a southern ducky returned to the minister who had performed the ceremony and asked for a divorce. After explaining that he could not give divorces, the minister tried to dissuade his visitor from carrying out his intention.

"You must remember, Sam, that you took Lize for better or for worse."

"I knows dat, parson," rejoined the ducky, "but she's wuss than I took her for."

A young doctor was summoned as a witness in a case that depended on technical evidence. The opposing counsel was inclined to be sarcastic at the idea of so young a doctor being called.

"You are familiar," he said, "with the symptoms of concussion of the brain?"

"Yes," said the doctor.

"Then, if Mr. Smith and myself collided, and banged our heads together, should we get concussion of the brain?"

"Mr. Smith might," said the doctor.

"Yes, I've just been reading a splendid book!" "Indeed. What was it?" "Well, I forget the name." "Who was the author?"—hopefully. "Oh, I don't know." "Well, what was it about?"—desperately. "Indeed, I've forgotten." Long pause—then, eagerly, "It had a red cover!"—Tit-Bits.

"The bluff, cheery optimism of the late Senator Frye," said a Lewiston divine, "could not brook a whiner. Once at a dinner here in Lewiston, a whiner seated opposite Senator Frye said dolefully, 'I have only one friend on earth—my dog.' 'Why don't you get another dog?' said Senator Frye."—Boston Herald.

SUGGESTIONS FOR ANTIPHONAL CHOIRS

One of the greatest values of this music page to me in the interesting series of side-lights it gives from time to time on the needs of the field of church-music, and the success—or otherwise—of the publishers in meeting these peculiar and particular needs. Some months back a couple of letters came asking for help in the search for choral titles available for use where churches boasted of an adult choir and a children's chorus, or where the physical lay-out of the church auditorium was such that a divided choir was both practicable and desired. Both letters complained of the paucity of material available for such purposes and asked for suggestions. Search for such suggestions was long and detailed—and the results were quite meager; evidently church-composers have not heeded or have not been interested in the artistic and devotional possibilities of this form of writing. There is plenty of material for double choruses, antiphonal choirs, and the like back in the works of Bach, Palestrina, de Lassus, and other men of the golden age of choral writings; but most of this was schemed for use in the Roman church, or patterned after such forms; and its complexity of part-writing and musical thought too often renders it impossible for use in our denominational services with the means at hand for the performance of the same. In this issue is listed the gleanings from the catalogues of two publishers; more will follow as I get on the track of available material; but today we make a start:

If any of the readers of this page can suggest effective repertoire of this nature, such help will be greatly appreciated. Another definite need which has come to light is for inspiring choral or solo music, of good musical grade, dealing in a modern way with the subject of missions.

ANTHEMS FOR QUARTET

At divers times we have printed, in this column, lists of anthem titles, tried out in actual church use, and suggested for the aid of the many devoted and earnest choir-leaders who are in such localities as lack ready access to the shelves of the metropolitan music-dealers. Most of the requests for such suggestions came from leaders of chorus-choirs; what few calls came for lists suitable for the more specialized "quartets" were handled by personal letter. But during the past month a regular subscription-list of letters have come in asking that practical anthems be recommended for the particular service of quartet-choirs. So, in order to meet that need, we will print from time to time selections of good devotional music designed for the above purpose. The appended list is chosen from the catalogue of the A. P. Schmidt Co., of Boston. Any music-dealer will supply the numbers.

Kinder ($1.10)

Kinder ($1.10)

Dunn ($1.12)

Halloway ($1.12)

Barrett ($1.15)

Five practical, effective anthems for solo and chorus of mixed voices (or for quartet use), noteworthy for their simplicity, beauty of setting and sentiment, and all displaying efficient workmanship. The two numbers by that fine organist of Philadelphia, Ralph Kinder, display the practised hand of the veteran composer and choir-master, the handling of the voice parts is superbly done, and the organ parts are full of interest. The first title brings in a well-written obbligato for soprano solo against a choral-like background by the four-part chorus; I am anxious to do the anthem in my church; it is not often that one finds so beautiful a number cast in such simple guise! The other Kinder anthem is somewhat more conventional, but effective and usable none the less; would be a very valuable number for quartet use. The Dunn number is a good arrangement of a popular sacred song, melodic and appealing, available for either quartet or chorus-choir use. The text (by F. H. Martens) is notably interesting and of fine literary quality. The last two titles are better fitted for use with choruses; both tread in the paths of the finely-chiseled examples of the best English writers, such as Gadsby, Stainer, Sullivan, Attwood, Barnaby, Parry, et al., a school marked by an exemplary management of the vocal writing, nobility of sentiment, little condescension to the temporary vagaries of the untrained multitude, and a sincere spirit of devotional sincerity. Both of the titles under consideration depend for their effect upon the individual beauty and shading of the parts (they are designed for a capella singing); they offer fine opportunities for effective shading at the hands of a competent and artistic director and chorus. They afford ideal material for service use; and the musical standard of any church permanently using them cannot fail to be improved. Sweetmeats are all right in their place, but too much of the chromatic, sensuously-melodic type of anthem (too much current in our present day services) soon becomes overly cloying.

THE CALL TO COMRADESHIP THROUGH THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

During the first eight months of this year the Publication Society from all sources received $140,150.03. This is $71,884.46 less than it received the previous year for the same period. The monthly deficit this year has averaged $10,141.05—more than five times as great as that of last year; and yet the expenditures are less than 85% of the amount approved by the Finance Committee of the Convention and authorized by the Convention itself.

THE NEED IS GREAT!

This extraordinary shrinkage in the expected receipts has produced a critical situation. The Society has been obliged to borrow heavily to maintain its work even approximately at the level of last year. It has practiced economy wherever possible, even to the extent of not filling vacancies caused by resignations. Any further lessening of our work for the Churches in the field of Bible distribution and Religious Education would be a tragedy in view of the general situation in our land.

HE GIVES TWICE WHO GIVES QUICKLY

Greater still is the challenge of the men and women who are giving their lives to the work which our gifts support—men and women who went out trusting us for support—men and women fired with the passion of service for the Master. They have not waited for us, they have done the work—IT IS OURS TO MEET THE COST.

- WILL you lighten a Bible Worker's load?
- WILL you cheer a Colporter Missionary's heart?
- WILL you bid the Religious Education Director and the Christian Teacher go on teaching?
- WILL you keep the stream of Bibles flowing out into the un-churched communities and un-reached homes of our world?
- WILL you claim a share in the healing of the world's deep wounds?

INSPIRATION

THE picture above is a reproduction of the work in marble by Kathleen Beverley Robinson, the original of which is in the Art Institute of Chicago. By a living touch the soul is awakened; through knowledge power is developed; in service is found the key of life and joy.

Fresh from the Field

The pamphlet on Mormonism, containing "Ten Reasons Why Christians Cannot Fellowship the Mormon Church," and Elder Brigham H. Roberts' reply thereto with a "Rejoinder" prepared by two "Gentiles" who have had long acquaintance with the views of Mormon leaders, is now ready for distribution by the Home Mission Council, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. While it appears that the Mormons considered the Ten Reasons of sufficient importance to put forth their best protagonist to reply to them, the authors of the Rejoinder make it clear that Elder Roberts not only virtually confessed that Mormonism is the same today that it was twenty-five years ago but that Elder Roberts himself was the author of one of the "proofs" why Christians cannot fellowship Mormons.

Pastor William E. La Rue, of the Takoma Park Church, Washington, D. C., writes that he is situated near the Walter Reed Government Hospital, where great numbers of wounded soldiers are being cared for. If there are any Baptist boys there, or friends of those who may read this, the pastor will be glad to call on them and show them friendly attention by request. The church is worshipping temporarily, pending the erection of its new building, in the Seventh Day Adventists' church. There has been a marked increase in the attendance at the services since the pastor began his work in November.

The Northern Baptist Theological Seminary through President Taft announces that one of the last things done by the late Dr. Augustus H. Strong before leaving Chicago upon the completion of the lectures given under the William Cleaver Wilkinson Foundation was to turn over to the library fund of the seminary the entire amount of his honorarium for the lectures as well as to pay his own expenses while in Chicago and all traveling expenses. The books purchased from this fund will be almost entirely for use in the department of theology.

On Jan. 13, the First Church, Ann Arbor, Mich., extended a call to Rev. R. Edward Sayles, for ten years at Duluth, recently with the Dort Motor Car Co., at Flint, as director of welfare work. He will be on the field early in February.

Dr. Harry L. Boardman was on Jan. 19 granted a letter of Christian standing by the First Church, Riverside, Cal., of which he was pastor from 1916 to 1919. The reason for Dr. Boardman's request is found in his changed attitude towards the Bible which makes him feel out of harmony with the prevailing standards of doctrinal regularity among the Baptists, especially of the section in which he lives. His present intention is to identify himself with the Congregationalists. The calendar of the First Church says: "Dr. Boardman leaves us with our respect for his frank manliness, his consistent Christian life, and the kindly spirit in which his request was preferred."

There will be a vacancy in the pulpits of the Bois D'Arc and Zenobia churches in Illinois on March 1. "We are looking," says our correspondent, "for a good live man to take charge of these fields. Will pay a good salary to right man."

For further information address, E. J. Tilton, Moderator, Thomasville, Montgomery Co., Ill."

A note from Rev. C. Adorian, president of the Union of Baptist Churches in Roumania, under date of Dec. 24, says: "This year will soon be gone. It has been a year rich in experience and difficulty for our Roumanian work, full of disappointment to many, but withal some measure of accomplishment. We find much for which we are thankful. At this time we are especially mindful of our good friends and brothers in America to whom we are indebted for their precious and helpful cooperation."

The British "Baptist Handbook for 1922" contains some interesting comparative statistics for 1920-1921. There has been a decrease of two in the number of chapels; of 6,185 in church sittings; of 2,416 in church members; and of eight in the number of local preachers. There has been an increase of two in the number of churches; of 985 in the number of Sunday-school teachers; of 5,604 in the number of scholars and of six in the number of pastors. The present number of members is 402,688 and of Sunday-school scholars, 517,969. The Baptist Times and Freeman, of London, commenting on the figures says:

"In view of the great evangelistic effort put forth in connection with the Baptist United Fund, it is disappointing at first sight to note that there is a decrease of 2,416 in the membership, which to some extent is accounted for by a decrease of 1,270 in Wales. The figures for London, however, show an increase of 174. But it must be remembered that the church statistics are generally made up to the close of the previous year. That being so they do not include the results of that effort or of the campaign which has been going on in many of our associations during the past year. It is gratifying to note that there has been a considerable increase in the number of teachers and scholars in the Sunday schools. This fact, taken in connection with the decline in church membership, emphasizes the importance of so improving and adapting methods of dealing with the children and young people as to retain them when their school life is over. The leakage in the transition from the Sunday school to the church is one of the most serious problems we have to face."

The Lenten season this year is being made the occasion for a more united emphasis upon the development of the devotional life. A series of topics for prayer and meditation, entitled "The Fellowship of Prayer," covering the period from Ash Wednesday to Easter, has been prepared by the Federal Council's Commission on Evangelism for the use of the churches. The booklet is issued by the Federal Council, the financial responsibility, however, being assumed by the Congregational and the Reformed churches. It is brought out in such large quantities that it can be furnished at two cents each when ordered in lots of five or more. "The Fellowship of Prayer" is a series of studies on Luke's Gospel. Beginning with Ash Wednesday, a Scripture reading, a hymn, and suggestions for meditation and prayer, are given for each day until Easter Sunday. Special prayers have also been prepared for each week. It is hoped that as a result hundreds of thousands of people will be led into a new appreciation of the Gospel of Luke by thus reading it as a whole during the Lenten season. For use in connection with "The Fellowship of Prayer" special copies of the Gospel of Luke in convenient form to go with the "Fellowship" booklet can be secured for five cents each from the Federal Council's offices, 105 East 22d St., New York City.

The Canadian Baptist speaks enthusiastically of the Bible addresses given by Dr. J. J. Ross, of the Second Church, Chicago, at the Ossington Avenue Church, Toronto, Jan. 16-22. The attendance was splendid and the messages helpful. The account furnished by the church concludes: "We thank Dr. Ross; we pray that God's blessing may be his portion in his Chicago work; and we trust that he may return on a similar mission to Ossington Avenue Church."

A correspondent in South Dakota announces that there is a good opening for a Baptist physician in Centerville in that state. If this notice reaches the eyes of any interested person he is asked to correspond with Mr. J. P. Hornbeck, Centerville, S. D.

The Congregational Commission on Evangelism, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, puts out a little booklet for the exclusive use of pastors, entitled, "Suggestions for Lenten Sermons and Addresses." While prepared especially for Congregational pastors, the little booklet is being increasingly called for by pastors of other denominations by whom it may be had for five cents in stamps. Contained in it are seven Lenten sermons on "Christ the Life of the World," seven evening sermons on "Christian Truth and Daily Living," and five Holy Week sermons on "His Last Week."

Miss Maude A. Royden the first woman to preach in the City Temple in London and one of the best known women in England is to visit this country. Miss Royden will arrive next spring to be the principal speaker at the Young Women's Christian Association Convention in Hot Springs, Arkansas. During the war her appointment as pulpit associate to the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, who at that time occupied the City Temple pulpit in London, stirred the Church of England. Because of her sex it has closed its doors to her. Slight and frail of stature, rarely raising her voice above a conversational tone, Miss Royden preaches to large congregations with remarkable success. Born to wealth and social position as the daughter of Sir Thomas Royden, formerly Lord Mayor of Liverpool, Miss Royden early turned to devote her life to social problems. A woman of rare intellectual gifts and power, she first gained recognition as an Oxford University extension lecturer.

Rev. Ray E. Close, pastor of the Third Church, Portland, Ore., has been elected executive secretary of the Portland Council of Churches to succeed Rev. Ralph C. McAfee, the first incumbent of the office, who on Feb. 1 goes to Kansas City to become secretary of a church federation there.

Rev. C. G. Morse, of Martinsville, Ind., has been chosen the new superintendent of the Southwest District of Indiana. Mr. Morse is a graduate of Kalamazoo College and the Divinity School of the Chicago University. He has held pastorates in Chicago, in Coldwater and Ypsilanti, Mich., and for two years at Martinsville, with a record that makes him welcome in the larger field which he is now entering.

All Seats Free

In the attractive calendar of the First Church, Springfield, Mass., we note in a prominent position that "All Seats Are Free." Do we understand that there is no one holding them down? There have always been a considerable number of free seats when it has been announced that we were to preach. We have found that every effort put forth to stimulate an interest in THE BAPTIST and Missions has resulted in greater interest in our worldwide work. Vital interest in God and his work will make "Free Seats" worth a premium.

Killam's Kollum

Are Women Temperamental?

We have been foolish enough to ask the question. It does not follow that we are foolish enough to attempt to answer it. Some women must be temperamental. We can in no other way account for their actions. We have probably said enough along this particular line. THE BAPTIST wants to say here and now that if the average Baptist woman is temperamental in her church work we would like a receipt guaranteed to produce a like result in the Baptist men. Women have been the pioneers in educational work in the church. Who started the regular and systematic study of missions in the churches? Women. Where do you recruit the most faithful and efficient teachers in your Bible school? From the ranks of the women. Who in our denomination can face a crushing task with hope, with faith and with a reasonable expectation of success? The women. Women were the first to understand fully the need of a better-informed church membership. The women are today the most active, take it the country over, in behalf of THE BAPTIST and Missions. Women do give a large place to their feelings in their church work. Their feelings, it must not be forgotten, are grounded in a fair knowledge of the facts concerning the world's needs. Our men through a better knowledge of these needs are becoming temperamental.

Money Keeps Talking

Lest, kind reader, you should interpret our silence about our subscription receipts as an indication that they are slowing up let us say that January also showed a good gain over the same month a year ago. In Jan., 1921, the subscription receipts were $4,886.19 and in Jan., 1922, they were $5,972.71. The gain in subscription receipts for the four months from October to February is $7,781.14. This is not bad but it will continue to grow better.

It Was Good Business

In the issue of Jan. 21, we pointed out the business method used by Rev. H. F. Adams of the Twelfth Avenue Church, Belmar, N. J. We said even before we had returns from Belmar that this man knew good business methods. Here is the first report: We received a check covering ten new annual subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. Not one of these families were subscribers to either THE BAPTIST or the Watchman-Examiner. The pastor says, "I think this is a 'fair result.'" So do we. It is 10 per cent of the reported membership of the Twelfth Avenue Church. He says, "And more may subscribe." Wise, ingenious methods followed by hard work always bring results.

"We Will Keep at It till the Goal Is Reached"

Can Northern Baptists succeed in their New World Movement Campaign for the fiscal year? Here is the answer to that question by state directors of promotion, all the way from Maine to California. They are the men who are closest to the work on their respective fields, the ones who best know the difficulties of the task.

"A Steady Pull Will Do It"

By A. LeGRAND, state superintendent of Wisconsin.

"Wisconsin is looking hopefully to the new drive of the New World Movement. Ten men are giving all their time to this task for five weeks. A dozen others are giving part time. The task is so important that we must 'go over the top.' A steady pull will do it."

"Determined to Reach Goal"

By C. W. BRINSTAD, executive secretary for Northern California.

"Missionary offerings increased 224 per cent. Baptisms increased 212 per cent over the basic year of 1919. Special emphasis on tithing, evangelism and stewardship leagues. Almost all churches determined to reach goal."

"The Greatest Thing that Ever Came to Our Denomination"

By WILLIAM A. DAVISON, secretary of the Vermont Convention.

"The New World Movement is the greatest thing that ever came to our denomination, and Vermont is pushing hard the collections of back pledges from those who did not pledge, or who have come into the churches since the pledges were taken."

"Nothing Less Than the Goal"

By EDWIN C. WHITTEMORE, director of promotion for Maine.

"For Christ and his salvation of the world, nothing less than the goal. For the spiritual help of ourselves and our churches, not how little may we do, but how much can we do. Prayer that pledges. Pledges paid. Opportunities met. The second mile. Together with God, for God."

"We Will Keep At It Till the Goal Is Reached"

By FRED A. STOCKTON, general superintendent North Dakota Convention.

"We are making our plans as rapidly as possible, to meet all of the needs and program of the convention. North Dakota is a 'bitter ender.' We will keep at it till the goal is triumphantly reached."

"They Put the Lord First, This Spirit Will Win"

By G. W. CASSIDY, director of promotion for Iowa.

"No state feels the present financial depression more keenly than rich agricultural Iowa, but many Iowa Baptists are borrowing money to meet their pledges. They put the Lord first. This spirit will win."

"Hopeful of Exceeding Financial Receipts of Last Year"

By W. F. RIPLEY, director of promotion for Colorado.

"State has been divided into ten districts, with leaders in charge of each. Teams composed of minister, laymen and women plan to visit every church. Hopeful of exceeding financial receipts of last year."

"Michigan Going, Looks for Victory"

By GRANT M. HUDSON, director of promotion for Michigan.

"Michigan going: state divided ten districts, Forward Step Campaign purpose threefold: 1. Missionary inspiration. 2. Stewardship League each local church. 3. Get each church committed to take joint canvass for current expenses and New World Movement. Look for victory."

Save

THIS word stood out on posters and in papers during the war and it was observed in regard to food and at times in regard to other things.

Some things were not saved. Some luxuries sold more during the high wage period at the close of the war than ever before. Munition workers had not been trained to save but were trained to spend. Many devices were instituted to cause every one to spend.

Stewardship includes training in saving. A report tells of a man who scrimped and saved until he had $7,000 in the bank and then lost it all by buying some oil land of an oily-tongued stranger. He had saved but he did not know the first thing about real saving.

Saving money builds character. The larger life comes from saving. The spendthrift is disliked by all for an "easy mark" and cannot hope to have a really great character. The time to begin to save is in youth when the income is so small that saving seems impossible.

One basis of a good steward is a real saver.

"For God Is With Us"

By WILLIAM REID, director of promotion for Massachusetts.

"Massachusetts is indulging in no criticisms, but the constructive kind; offering no excuses, but trying to do her best; has no doubt about results. For God is with us."

"We Enter Our Campaign With Faith in Its Ultimate Victory"

By A. B. MINAKER, superintendent of the Idaho Convention.

"With the courage of our convictions that the New World Movement must be completed, we enter our campaign with faith in the ultimate victory."

"Expectation of a Splendid Response"

By WALTER I. FOWLE, state secretary, Nebraska Convention.

"A special Training Conference of Nebraska workers was held with Dr. Bowler on Jan. 6. There was manifested an earnest determination to do great possible things for the Kingdom, and a spirit that warrants expectation of a splendid response on the part of Nebraska to the new appeal of the New World Movement."

"With Characteristic Zeal, Courage and Sacrifice"

By J. F. WATSON, executive secretary for Western Washington.

"The Baptists of Western Washington are not disheartened, but, with characteristic zeal, courage and sacrifice, are planning to carry their full share of the denominational burdens."

"Pressing Toward Victory for Their King"

By F. G. CRESSEY, director of promotion for Ohio.

"Buckeye Baptists are battling against demons of indifference, misinformation and laziness. With 'concerted action under unified leadership' (Foch), they are pressing toward victory for their King."

"Every Member in Every Church"

By B. T. LIVINGSTON, general secretary for Rhode Island.

"Board votes unanimously to cooperate in securing pledges and cash. Collections in November 116 1/5 per cent. All one body, we (men and women) are cooperating with our national officers and organization. Our motto: 'Every member in every church' going their limit for the denominational program."

"To Secure as Much Money as Available"

By CARLOS M. DINSMORE, general superintendent for the Indiana Convention.

"The Baptist churches of Indiana are determined to pay one-half of their pledges by April 30, if at all possible. Our entire missionary program is to secure as much money as available."

"When Baptists Awake, Victory Will Be Ours"

By FREDERICK G. DAVIES, director of promotion for Southern California.

"When Baptists awake to their world task as America awoke to hers in World War days, victory will be ours. Christ cries, 'Awake, awake ye Baptists!'"

"Forward Together Is Our Watchword"

By WILLIAM G. RUSSELL, director of promotion for Pennsylvania.

"Pennsylvania plans to hold a conference with a small group of people in each association. The members of this group will be fully informed as to our denominational achievements and need, and in turn will carry the information into each local church, through which channels it will be carried into each home, and so reach the last member in the last church of the entire state. The state board of promotion has heartily endorsed plans that contemplate Pennsylvania participating to her full ability. Forward Together is our watchword."

"Nevada Will Do Her Part"

By GEORGE L. SNYDER, director of promotion for Nevada.

"Baptists are slow but sure. The goal will be reached, even if at the last minute. Stewardship campaign O. K. Nevada will do her part."

The Baptist

"Enthusiastic for the Lord"

By BERTHA G. JUDD

A FEW weeks ago a young woman newly appointed as state secretary for the World Wide Guild was asked, "Can you enter enthusiastically into the campaign?" "Yes, indeed," she replied, "I can be enthusiastic in any work for the Lord." The words of this young worker express the spirit that has been characteristic of the service of Baptist women in the organized work of their missionary societies for fifty years.

The gifts saved in tiny amounts from the household allowances; the letters written to missionaries; the prayers daily offered on their behalf; the information diligently sought by reading and study to foster a sense of fellowship with the workers; the persistent recruiting among the women of the churches in order to provide for the expansion of the work, all were consciously and worshipfully service for the Lord. And faith reaped abundant harvests. The number of workers steadily increased, until both the foreign and home mission societies have a staff of workers in the field numbering more than one for every day of the year. The aggregate of the small individual gifts each year is hundreds of thousands of dollars.

To-day we are face to face with a new task: the enlistment of the churches as a whole for the work of the denomination as a whole. The women enlisted fifty years ago in the organization of their missionary societies, are recognized as a factor of great importance in the accomplishment of this larger work. For years their vision has been that of world evangelization. Now the time has come for it to be enlarged, that it may comprehend all the denominational objective: the publication of the Bible in numerous languages and of religious literature for the youth of our churches; the support of the institutions of learning in which our young people may receive training for service; the care of those who have grown old in their work as preachers and missionaries. To this greatest task ever visioned by us, Baptist women are rallying in the Continuation Campaign.

Its objective is not merely the completion of the hundred million dollar fund but a spiritual victory expressed in the allegiance of a people who have put away false gods and are ready to bring "all the tithes" into the storehouse. That this may be realized women from coast to coast are daily praying. They have always found refuge in prayer, perhaps because their resources have seemed so inadequate to the work before them; and they have given gladly and increasingly because they have prayed; and the successes for which they have rejoiced have come in answer to their prayers and gifts.

This campaign requires more of prayer and intercession because it is a greater test of faith than anything previously attempted. It is not that there are not enough women in our churches, and that there is not enough money. It is because many women lack vision, and so much of the money in the hands of those who call themselves by the name of the Lord is not dedicated to Him, that faith is tested. That it may be victorious again as so often before, women pray and bring their gifts of self denial* and thanksgiving and love, a host of them who "can be enthusiastic in any work for the Lord."

A Woman's Number

THE BAPTIST herewith presents to its readers a Woman's Number. Perhaps this is the first time that any of our national weeklies has asked the women of the denomination to use its pages for the presentation of their work in its various phases. This issue is therefore a new thing under the sun. Its value is so evident, however, that we shall be surprised if there is not a request that it be repeated.

The leading editorial is by one of our well-known women. Here also are messages from the president of the Northern Baptist Convention and from the presidents respectively of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Societies. There is a statement of the aims of the Continuation Campaign and other material which speaks so well for itself that words of commendation are unnecessary. Read it all.

The women of the denomination have learned organization down to the last church, cooperative effort and sacrificial giving as no other group of our people has learned these. We take our hats off to them. We are sure that they are going to succeed in their effort to raise $2,000,000 before May 1. Their challenge to the men, which involves both the immediate raising of large sums of money and the development of an organization as effective as that possessed by the women, must not go unheeded.

* * *

Great pressure is being brought to bear upon the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention to change the place of the annual meeting from Seattle to some city more readily accessible to the majority of the churches. Despite the just claims of the Pacific Coast, it is urged that economy demands this year a central location for the meeting. It is certainly to be hoped that a decision will be reached before the next meeting of the executive committee on March 8.

Editorial Comment

AN APPEAL FROM RUSSIAN BAPTISTS

On another page is printed an appeal from Russian Baptists. We rejoice that communication has at last been restored with these brethren of ours. But we are saddened by the story they tell.

A Russian winter is bad enough when men and women are well-clothed and fed. It is terrible beyond measure when all the people are under-nourished and but poorly clad. When famine stalks through the land, no words can describe the scene. We suggest that, as you read this appeal, you set your imagination to work.

Christianity expressed in doctrine may be hard for some to understand. There is none so stupid that he cannot understand Christianity expressed in loving deeds. What is the Russia of tomorrow to be? What is to be the relation of that Russia to the United States? Such questions are mightily important. We cannot answer them in full. But this we know that Russian children who are fed and clothed this winter by American money are going to have a warm place in their hearts for America and the Americans. And these children of today will be the Russia of tomorrow.

THE SOLICITOR'S ROYAL ROAD

No man has a right to go to another man and ask him to make a gift for a cause, however good, until he can say, "I have made my own gift, and it represents for me a sacrifice proportionately as great as that I am asking you to make." Any man can understand that kind of talk and can love the spirit back of it. Remember, too, that the test of the gift is not its size but what is left after it is made. The man who gives $15,000 and has left of his income $135,000 is not giving on anything like the same scale as the man who has an income of $1,000 and of this gives $100. Giving has no great value to the soul until it means sacrifice to the individual. Our well-to-do men and women will be wise if they take notice in these days of what the poor widow, in her great love for her Lord, is doing.

A CONSCIENCE FOR THE MOVIES

Is Will H. Hays to be paid his salary of $150,000 a year in order to be a conscience for the movies?

So some think. And all know that a conscience is needed. The men in the business know how to make pictures and how to put them on the market; the wonderful expansion of the business proves that. But these same men have not known, or have not seen the wisdom of acting on the knowledge possessed, how to keep the business from drifting into sensuality and scandal. They have discovered, however, that the nation-wide protest is no manufactured affair, but the honest expression of people everywhere who wish the movies to give clean entertainment and to cease to be a menace to all that is decent.

Can Will H. Hays, as national director of the moving picture industry, give them the help they need? Well, he is a Presbyterian elder who takes his religion and his position seriously. He has always had the reputation of carrying his religion into his work. With simplicity and straightforwardness, his friends say, he has carried his religion into his work at the head of the post-office department. So perhaps there is hope. Whatever may have been the motive of the moving picture men in choosing him (and we should credit them with the best and not the worst) he is a good omen.

"I HAVE FOUR MORE BOYS"

The son of J. L. Shellenberger, of Hesston, Kansas, died of smallpox recently, contracted while engaged in the relief work of the Near East Relief at Diarbekr, Turkey. In reply to the notification, the father wrote a letter in which these words occur: "I have four more boys I am willing to give as soon as they are as well qualified as Menne was. It is a consoling thought that he died in the service of the Lord."

We have our rolls of honor for the boys who died in France. There is also a heroism of peace, and a devotion on the part of parents and workers as fine as anything seen in the war. Parting is hard but it is magnificent for a man to lay down his life for his Lord and for suffering men and women. We salute this father and his boy who is alive forevermore. And we hail also that fine company of our young people who in the same spirit go out to our mission fields, bearing with them the blessing of their parents and of the Lord. "I have four more boys." Thank God for that.

ENFORCING PROHIBITION LAW IN DETROIT

Judge Pliny W. Marsh, of Detroit, has furnished us with a list of prosecutions for violations of the prohibition laws as these went on in the Recorder's Court of that city for the period Sept. 1-Dec. 31, 1921. The record shows conclusively that the agencies which are enforcing the law in that city are not idle. The figures follow:

Number of prosecutions, 772; total number convicted, 534. Dispositions: Fined, 444; committed, 49; sentence suspended, 26; probation, 15. Total number not convicted, 165. Dispositions: Acquitted, 12; dismissed, 89; nolle prosequi, 60; withdrawn, 4. Number still pending, 73. During these four months the total fines collected were $91,155.

ENTHUSIASM

A man came to three stonemasons cutting stone in a great enclosure.

"What are you doing?" he asked the first.

"Working for $5 a day," the stonemason answered.

"What are you doing?" the man asked the second.

"Trimming this stone—can't you see?" the stonemason replied.

The man approached the third stonemason. "What are you doing?"

"I am building a cathedral," said the third stonemason.

And there, you see, is the whole secret of enthusiasm. You cannot buy it at $5 a day or at any other amount. There can be no enthusiasm in chipping stone or doing any other mechanical task. But the man who builds a cathedral—his part of it—is a fellow with God, for he is a creator, too. If you don't believe it, have a look at the cathedral at Milan, or that at Cologne.

Now this thing that the Near East Relief is trying to do—this saving of a whole people from hideous death—is a cathedral greater than St. Sophia. It is built of human lives, and its walls of flesh and blood house the unconquerable soul of a race. No man can be mean or niggardly or selfish or petty who has this vision constantly before him.

When you find someone to whom this work of the Near East Relief—this fine work of building a vast human cathedral—means nothing; who seems to you to be petty and hypercritical; don't scold, don't sulk, don't despair. Help him to get back his lost vision.

(From "Team Work," the little family paper of those American men and women who are working to gather funds and supplies to keep alive 110,000 Christian children, victims of war and massacre in the Near East.)

COMPULSORY CHURCH ATTENDANCE

The heated season of the year brings many strange legislative proposals, and so also does the period of most intense cold. Massachusetts gets recognition this time through the bill introduced into the legislature to make church attendance compulsory upon all citizens. Mr. Bennett, who introduced the bill, takes the measure seriously, but to date few have been found to agree with him. There are some who think that he must want to make church going unpopular and counts upon that tendency in men to want to do everything which is forbidden and to refuse to do what is ordered. This much, however, has been accomplished that the joking discussion has not failed to notice that benefits accrue to the community from habitual church attendance on the part of its members. We should have better communities if such attendance were general. Perhaps some ministers, especially in the East, will be inclined to take advantage of this free advertising of the churches to urge the claims of the church upon all the people, living under the shadow of the building.

BY UNION ROME MEANS ABSORPTION

There are dreamers who talk at times of schemes of Christian union in which the Roman Catholic Church is included. Strangely enough they miss the oft-repeated statements from Roman authorities that the only union there can be is that in which individuals come to the Roman Church, confessing their sin, asking forgiveness and pleading to be taken in. Any kind of corporate union would be to recognize the Protestant sects and that Rome will never do. A recent statement in America, the Catholic weekly, should speedily send glimmering all such hopes on the part of weak-kneed Protestants. It says: "The Catholic position on reunion is clear, 'Charity in all things,' but for heresy one has no terms except terms of condemnation. Reunion, yes; but not at the cost of peril to the deposit of faith. The sooner our separated brethren learn that they must come, one by one, as little children to a great and tender Mother, and that the only conceivable basis of reunion is submission, full and unconditional, to the see of Rome, the sooner shall we realize that blessed vision of peace, one flock and one shepherd." We Baptists in turn will be willing to receive for baptism any Roman Catholic on credible evidence of his own conversion and present faith in Christ.

CHICAGO SUPERINTENDENT CONDEMNS "JAZZ"

Following an investigation by Superintendent of Schools Mortensen, the Chicago Board of Education has issued a condemnation of modern "jazz" tendencies in dress, dance and general behavior among high-school pupils. To him these things are demoralizing, an attitude in which he is supported by the Illinois Parent-Teachers' Association.

Parents will be interested to know that Superintendent Mortensen holds them largely to blame for juvenile misconduct, asserting that what they themselves do is sure to be imitated by their children. A sound observation, that!

Students in several Chicago high schools are organizing to bring about better standards among all the students, encouraged by Mr. Mortensen's assertion that loose and immoral behavior is characteristic of less than 3 per cent of the pupils.

Hasn't the time come for church people to be as positive in their condemnation of the barbaric and indecent in conduct, dress, music and dancing, as are some school authorities? We shall soon be hearing again the old slander that the church lags in the rear of all reforms.

SECOND THOUGHT ON A MILLION DOLLARS

When Charles Garland, an interesting New Englander, was offered $1,000,000 as his share of his father's estate, he made a grand gesture and refused it. As for him he wanted poverty and contentment on his little farm. He asserted that he was opposed to the whole system under which one man could possess one million dollars while another had little or nothing. The newspapers caught his gesture and transmitted it to the whole country. So he preached his sermon, if sermon it was. And people read and laughed and wrote him letters, suggesting that their conscience was not as keen as his. Now, it seems, he has changed his mind. He has friends who could make good use of this money. A little for himself and much for them would be his idea. So he becomes the gracious distributor of this unearned wealth. What next?

It is the use a man makes of the money which comes to him that determines his character or lack of it. No one man can change a system and no stage refusal to accept money will help the situation. But by the use of money a man can attack some of the abuses which are patent and perhaps remedy them. He can give opportunity to many who otherwise will have their noses to the grindstone all their lives. He can liberate ideas through the printed page or the spoken word. He can invest that money in the building of a Christian center in a heathen land. Some of Rockefeller's money has gone to the founding of a great medical school in China. What an untold blessing that money is going to be to generations yet unborn! What might not be done on some of our mission fields with a million dollars! Men may not be responsible for the money which comes to them, but the Lord is going to hold them responsible for the money which goes from them.

The Goal of the Continuation Campaign

Two million dollars in new gifts from Baptist women by April 30, 1922, sought by the Woman's Foreign and Home Mission Societies, as a special contribution towards the $100,000,000 Fund

What are churches for but to make missionaries?
 What is education but for to train them?
 What is commerce for but to carry them?
 What is money for but to send them?
 What is life itself for but to fulfil the purpose of missions, the enthroning of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men?

How We Could Reach Our Goal

In the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention there are more than 250,000 women. Some can give large sums, some only small ones, but all can give something, "as the Lord hath prospered."

A Spiritual Challenge from the Women

We must not see dollars but human souls. In religious work men and women complement each other. Women join prayers and issue challenge.

Confident but Not Self-Confident

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY.

IN the zero hour of the night—two o'clock—I awoke the other night to face a big, fearsome question born of great fatigue and depression—"Supposing Baptist women should fail in their great purpose! Then what?"

I lay staring at the darkness, cold and trembling, while the words said themselves again and again—Suppose they should fail! Then what? I turned the torturing thought over in my mind—it was the hour of unfaith and of fear. Then in my heart there whispered the voice of a great hope, "I am standing on the promises of God."

But dear women, dear comrades, I want to put the question squarely up to you. Are we going to fail? There are certain attitudes that will lead to certain failure, certain others that will insure success. We may be complaisant, proud of our organization, self-confident. Then we shall fail. Our trust must be not in organization, no matter how perfect, but in the living God. We may be timid, fearful, without daring to face impossible odds. We may be like Peter seeing the waves and feeling the wind as he tried to walk on the waters—then we shall begin to sink.

We may be prayerless, then we shall fail.

We may, on the other hand, have the urgency of a great conviction of the importance, the absolute necessity of our task. Inasmuch as we are possessed of this, we shall have each one the fighting strength of ten. Let us be convinced women, possessed women. We can sell a great proposition like ours to the denomination only when we have first sold it to ourselves.

We may have a spirit of sacrifice that will work miracles, remove mountains. If only we can take the passionate pouring out of gifts for the country and sublimate it to a greater intensity for the cause of Christ—the greater cause demanding the greater sacrifice, we shall not fail.

We may see not dollars but human souls. We must translate these great sums that we need to raise into their equivalent of work; hospitals to be closed if the money is not given, schools closed, girls to miss their chance for Christian education, boys to be turned back from the ministry, souls unreached to die in the darkness, Jesus the Saviour to fail to reach sinners with his healing and forgiveness. O, if we can only be big enough to imagine for one moment the tremendous, the awful cost of our failure in time and in eternity. We shall not fail, we cannot.

Hail and Godspeed

By ALICE B. COLEMAN.

IT is a great day in the life of our denomination that sees the laymen putting on the harness and girding themselves for organized effort toward meeting the crisis which our boards and societies are now facing. It is a still greater reason for thanksgiving that their present effort is not to be an isolated one, related only to the great needs of this fiscal year, but that the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council is to be a permanent factor in the denominational work and that the laymen are henceforth to act together in all their undertakings.

To say that it is not good for man or woman to be alone in any department of life is a truism, but the vital truth contained in the statement is perhaps not so fully realized in the realm of religious work as in other parts of life. Yet beyond question the truth holds good in religious life and work as fully as elsewhere. Each needs the other. A more inclusive view, a broader vision, a saner and sounder judgment are arrived at when questions and situations, perplexities and burdens are considered and are borne together and when achievements and victories crown the work of both.

For many years the Women's Home and Foreign Mission Societies have held the field alone as fully organized groups within the denomination representing purely lay activities. They have proved the value of thorough and far-reaching organization, of volunteer work by a host of volunteers, and of intensive work, each in its given field. In recent years they are joyfully recognizing the value of united effort in many lines of work that are common to both. Whatever the form of the laymen's organization and whatever specific methods and lines of work they may adopt, we are assured that in all essential features and in spirit, as truly as in effort, their work and ours will proceed along parallel lines, united at many points by the bonds of cooperation, understanding and sympathy.

We rejoice beyond measure that this day has come. We greet the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council with enthusiasm and with faith.

And so we say once more to our brethren,

Hail and Godspeed.

The Race is On

By MARTHA H. MACLEISH.

IN the planning of this Woman's Number of THE BAPTIST, it was decided that there should be a message from each of our three women presidents. Now comes the suggestion that I may address mine to the men of the denomination. This rather appeals to me. In the first place, I've written many messages to the women for lo, these many years, and who knows but they may be getting tired of them. In the second place, it gives me a chance to say some things—nice things, too—to these Baptist men who are our brothers and our husbands and our friends, and in particular our partners in this great Baptist enterprise.

I am glad to express to you, State Directors of Promotion and State Convention Secretaries, our sincere appreciation of your spirit of cooperation. You were a little afraid of us at first. You didn't feel quite sure that we could be depended upon to play the game, and to tell the truth we, too, suffered some of the same qualms about you. But experience has shown that all we needed was to get acquainted. We know now that we can trust each other, and can work together. We women are glad to have the broader view, to see the denominational work as a whole, and we find it good to get the masculine point of view upon plans and work. We hope you also find contact with our women workers helpful, and all we ask is that to the women everywhere there be continued some definite financial responsibility and freedom to use their own methods where those will bring the best results for the common good.

To you, Dr. Aitchison, we want to express again our personal loyalty and our appreciation of the way in which you are carrying your heavy load of responsibility. We have always been grateful for your generous attitude toward the organized woman's work of the denomination, and again we pledge you our best in both labor and prayer.

To all the other men at headquarters who are carrying the burden of promotional work, which we so fully understand, we say God-speed, and let us help where we can. To you especially, Dr. Heath, we would like to say that we are all glad, with the possible exception of the women of Massachusetts, that you decided to stay by the Department of Conferences and Conventions. You have made it and we wouldn't have known it without you.

And now last, but by no means least, we bring our glad greetings to you, the Laymen, with your fine new organization. We feel that you have done the one remaining thing that was necessary to bring the denomination to the point where it can with hope and good courage face its task.

We appreciate your undertaking, for we have been longer than you in this business of organizing down to the local church. We know the time and the effort required and the steady continuous work needed to keep the organization up after it is once formed. But we also know what it is worth to be able to reach quickly down to the last church, and we rejoice that you are making that possible.

We certainly join our prayers with yours for the success of our common enterprise and that we may be kept from self-sufficiency or a reliance upon human agencies.

We note that you have been given a proper handicap in the amount to be raised, and now, set in our places and ready to go, we offer you our challenge—Come on! We'll race you till April 30.

Faith is the Victory

ENCAMPED along the hills of light,
 Ye Christian soldiers rise,
 And press the battle ere the night
 Shall veil the glowing skies;
 Against the foe in vales below
 Let all our strength be hurled;
 Faith is the victory, we know,
 That overcomes the world.

Refrain:

Faith is the victory!
 Faith is the victory!
 Oh, glorious victory,
 That overcomes the world.

His banner over us is love,
 Our sword the Word of God;
 We tread the road the saints above
 With shouts of triumph trod;
 By faith they like a whirlwind's breath
 Swept on o'er every field;
 The faith by which they conquered Death
 Is still our shining shield.

On every hand the foe we find Drawn up in dread array;
 Let tents of ease be left behind,
 And—onward to the fray;
 Salvation's helmet on each head,
 With truth all girt about,
 The earth shall tremble 'neath our tread,
 And echo with our shout.

To him that overcomes the foe,
 White raiment shall be given;
 Before the angels he shall know
 His name confessed in heaven;
 Then onward from the hills of light,
 Our hearts with love aflame;
 We'll vanquish all the hosts of night,
 In Jesus' conquering name.

Around the Clock in a Day Nursery

By CONSTANCE JACKSON

NEXT to a Ford factory a day nursery in a Christian center is the busiest place imaginable! Whether it be in Chicago, or New York, Indiana Harbor or Camden its activities are practically alike and its babies essentially the same—interesting, teachable, lovable. For the day nurseries are the far-flung battle line of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society against the hunger and nakedness which many of the little ones of America suffer as the heritage of their birth into homes of poverty. In the heart of a crowded, Christless community its doors stand open with inclusive hospitality to welcome the homeless, the friendless and the neglected. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven" is the unwritten motto of the day nursery, as once around its busy clock will suffice to prove.

7. A. M.—

The nursery has been swept and dusted ready for the first influx of children. Mrs. Trevino and Mrs. Paulinsky arrive with Mary and Joseph, aged respectively two and three. The children are turned over to the nurse with considerable dispatch for the mothers are on their way to the button factory where they must work till sundown. Tony, Marie, Stefano and Katherine, all under five, arrive in due order, and coats are taken off, hats put in the lockers and wet shoes removed. Bread and cocoa warm the chilly mites and bring a rush of color to pale cheeks.

8. A. M.—

Older brothers and sisters on their way to school deposit a new flock of babies who find their place quite naturally among the toys in the bright, sunny nursery. As the hour of nine approaches the five-year-olds are sent down to the kindergarten from whose happy circle snatches of song and laughter soon float up.

9. A. M.—

Pedro and Joseph are having trouble over the much prized "kiddy-kar" which, unfortunately, is too small to accommodate two three-year-olds even though they do not boast the ordinary plumpness of babyhood. A little tact on teacher's part serves to divert their attention to a box of blocks and they are soon busy building sky-scrapers in the chummiest manner possible.

10. A. M.—

Baths are in order and one child after another is carried out by nurse, undressed and popped into the clean white tub which is such a source of interest and admiration on the part of the mothers. They, too, have the privilege of bathing after their day's work, the hours assigned being noted on a card attached to the bathroom door. Said one woman, "You open every day?"

"Yes," was the answer.

"Then I come 'tree' times," she replies. "I eat breakfast I come; I eat dinner, I come; I eat supper, I come!"

11. A. M.—

Savory odors are beginning to waft into the playroom from the diet kitchen, hands are washed, rebellious locks brushed into order and bibs tied in place for dinner.

12. M.—

Nurse is a good cook and provides bountifully of soup, vegetables, bread and butter, and milk. Already Susie, who looked so frail and anemic when she first came to the nursery last week, shows a marked improvement. Rudolf's mother says that he now wants to wash his hands before he sits down to a meal at home and insists on saying grace "like they do over there." Said the mother gratefully, "This a grand place for him. He learn manners over here."

1 P. M.—

It is nap time and tired babies who, when they first came to the nursery fussed at this forced interruption in their activity, now fall asleep in their seats at the table if dinner is a little later than usual.

2 P. M.—

Quiet still reigns in the nursery while the soft breeze from an open window blows roses into Pedro's wan cheeks. It is a pretty scene—twenty small white cribs each with its sleeping occupant snug and warm beneath his baby blue puff. Small shoes beside the bed patiently await the wriggling little toes of owners, quiet now in sleep.

3 P. M.—

Those who escaped baths before dinner are captured on waking from their naps. Gradually impatient feet are shod and pinafores tied on once more. Books, dolls, teddy-bears and blocks litter the floor again and the playroom rings with mirth and laughter.

4 P. M.—

Clad in warm wraps the children are out on the large porch at the back of the nursery enjoying an outdoor frolic in the late afternoon sunshine.

5 P. M.—

Healthy babies are hungry babies, they say. Full of vigor and rosy of cheek the nursery children are ravenous for the simple supper of bread and milk which ends their day. Heads are bowed reverently to ask the Father's blessing on the meal and during its course several quieting kindergarten songs are sung in concert.

6 P. M.—

Mothers, confident that their little ones have been well cared for, arrive after their hard day's work in the factory to find Pedro or Marie rosy and well fed, all buttoned snugly into their warm coats. One mother was so delighted when she saw her child after his first bath and in clean clothes that she offered the nurse 50 cents for what she had done! Another, a young widow, had been having to pay a woman $4 out of her weekly thirteen to care for her two little girls until her return from work. "I was nearly ready to give up," she said to the headworker, "and then I found you. Now my children pray for you every night."

Shall eager hands entreat our help in vain? In all our large cities the number of day nurseries needed could be multiplied a hundred times. Aren't you eager to help in so fascinating an occupation? The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society needs women with missionary spirit, some training and practical experience with small children to act as directors of day nurseries in their Christian centers. If you are willing to go on a great adventure for Christ communicate with Miss Jessie Dodge White at 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Money Wanted

A mother whose little boy left her for the happier home has given the money for a kindergarten in Japan, but there is no land on which to place the building, so the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has a veritable castle in the air and the children in the slums of Kobe are still waiting for a new kindergarten building.

A cable brings the information that an earthquake visited the vicinity of one of the girls' schools in India. As a result a great crack was left in the pretty white stucco building. This not only spoils the artistic effect but makes the building unsafe for the 140 girls and the two missionaries who live under that roof.

A school in South China that started with a little group of girls in a missionary home, has grown to two day schools with ninety-six girls. The present building is outgrown. The saddest thing on tongue or pen—no more pupils or teachers no class work for women, no kindergarten, not one step beyond the present until there is more room.

Women in Home Mission Lands

A Dedication in San Salvador

Letters have just arrived from San Salvador, Central America, telling in glowing terms of the dedication there of the splendid new Baptist edifice. For the first time all the missionaries of the republic gathered together in the capitol city. Miss Martha Howell, a teacher under the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society in their school at Santa Ana, writes: "It was a supreme moment when we stood about the doors of the new Baptist Temple in San Salvador and lifted our hearts in gratitude and praise to him who had given it. With a very impressive ceremony the doors were thrown wide open and the large auditorium was soon filled. All the missionaries were there, and the believers came from towns and villages away over on the border, many of them walking long distances. The years of hard work in limited quarters and of patient waiting are rewarded and the beautiful edifice stands as a challenge to great effort in the Kingdom of God." Faith wins, and the missionary knows this as does no one else.

Great Christian Center for Detroit Negroes

The great new Christian center for Negroes recently opened in Detroit with the cooperation of the two home mission societies and the Detroit Baptist Union is already reported "too small for what we want to do." Detroit feels especially the problem resulting from the great migration of Negroes from the southern states. It has been next to impossible to house and care for these newcomers adequately. This new center is located in one of the most densely populated sections of the city and its influence for good on the lives of the Negroes cannot be estimated. An active interest on the part of Christian men and women in the North is required in order to achieve that day when the Negro population shall no longer constitute a "problem" in our land.

Training New Workers

One of the most vital branches of missionary work is the training of new workers to carry on the message which has transformed their lives. The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society is doing this in more ways than is ordinarily realized. Almost every one at all interested in the work knows of the Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago, the missionary supply house where high school and college graduates are trained for actual service.

Besides this the Woman's Home Mission Society operates a normal and missionary training department in the school at Pueblo, Mexico, and a missionary training school is associated with Shaw University in Raleigh, N. C., where young women are prepared for service among their own people. Shortly another such department is to be opened in connection with the Hostil at Rio Piedras, Porto Rico, for the training of Spanish speaking peoples, and a woman's department is soon to have a place in the International Seminary in East Orange. If the Woman's Home Mission Society is to meet the appeals that are constantly coming in it must send out a large number of new missionaries and teachers. It would be useless to erect new schools and Christian centers without trained workers to man them. Can one build bricks without straw?

Ohio Women in the Continuation Campaign

"While it was yet dark the women came."

The share of Ohio's Baptist women in the quest for $2,000,000 by April 30 is $187,000 and they are singing "Faith is the Victory."

Ohio, as a part of East Central District, has for her campaign director Mrs. R. L. Hutchinson, Huntington, W. Va., and Mrs. W. H. Alexander, Columbus, Ohio, for director of publicity. The state as a unit is under the direction of Mrs. Elizabeth R. Phillips of Youngstown. Ohio is divided into four districts, each of which has its own campaign director. These women are Mrs. F. C. Wellman, Granville; Mrs. S. E. Davies, Zanesville; Mrs. H. A. Long, Middletown; and Miss Ethel Bentley, Toledo. Under their direction conferences have been held during January in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Marion and Zanesville. Questions have been asked and answered informally. Mrs. Phillips has outlined the plans and Mrs. Hutchinson and Mrs. Alexander have sobered and stirred the hearts of their bearers as they unfolded "The Whole Task" and emphasized "Our Father's Business—Ours." A splendid spirit of courage and enthusiasm prevailed and divine guidance was earnestly sought through prayer and the Word of God.

The outcome of these conferences has been the campaign organization of the associations. Teams are being appointed from each church; two women who will go whenever and wherever called to groups of women who need their message. Already prayer leagues have been mobilized. The aim is to have a prayer leader and a band of praying women in each church. Mrs. F. G. Cressey is the state prayer league leader.

To quote from one of Ohio's district directors: "When have women failed at any dark hour? Have they not come forward bravely and have they not met the crisis victoriously? Our missionaries at Rangoon have voted to give a MONTH'S SALARY! Can we allow these women to be recalled because we have failed to offer daily prayers, to give unstinted service and to make sacrificial gifts?"

Christian Schools and the New Internationalism in Japan

"What is happening in the schools of Japan is of far more importance to the future welfare of mankind than what is happening in her dockyards."

By ROBERTA M. MCKINNEY

DURING the early days of the recent conference in Washington, H. G. Wells made the significant comment, "What is happening in the schools of Japan is of far more importance to the future welfare of mankind than what is happening in her dockyards." The tone of the comment carried with it some uncertainty as to what is happening in the schools of Japan but those of us who are fortunate enough to know something of mission schools and the work being done in them feel no uncertainty as to those schools and their influence upon the future.

Missionary leaders have been strong in the assurance that in spite of the seemingly hopeless militarism of Japan, due to the influence of the military party in power, there was growing up through the influence of Christian schools and teaching a public sentiment that would at last disrupt the shell of militarism and disclose a nation ready to take its place with other nations of the world on a basis of international good-will. Even so disinterested an observer as the vice-president of the San Francisco chamber of commerce, after representing the chambers of commerce of the Pacific coast on a mission to Japan in the interests of commercial relations, said on his return, "You might well expend a million dollars on this enterprise (The Woman's Christian College at Tokio) in the interest of international relationships alone."

It remained, however, for Madame Yajima, coming to America on her own initiative with her petition signed by thousands of Japanese women to furnish conclusive evidence that the thing missionary leaders have hoped for has been taking place in Japan.

Madame Yajima, one of the first women of Japan to receive a higher education, was for forty years head of the girls' school, Joshi Gakuin, of Tokio. As founder of the W. C. T. U. in her country she has been most fittingly called the Frances Willard of Japan.

When President Harding sent out his invitation to the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments the text was not printed in Japanese papers as the Japanese government does not give such information to the press. Uncertain rumors got abroad but the people only wondered what it was all about. It was some time afterward that, by a curious chain of circumstances, the fact of the invitation became known to Madame Yajima.

We are told of a conference which followed, Madame Yajima being present, together with her two nephews, one of them a noted novelist, called the Tolstoi of Japan, the other the editor of Japan's most influential newspaper. At this conference President Harding's invitation was discussed and piles of American newspapers were searched for light on the situation. Finally Madame Yajima gave it as her opinion that the thing to do was to take President Harding's invitation at face value and she startled the company by announcing that she was going to America to assure the women there that the women of Japan want education, not battleships and armies, and that she had come to pray with them for world peace.

All objections based on age and lack of funds were surmounted by this indomitable old lady. She was 90 years of age, to be sure, but she was blessed with health, not rich but she had the purse which loving and admiring pupils had presented to her on her birthday as a fund to make her old age comfortable; and at any rate she was going to America if she died there.

When the women of Japan heard what she was planning to do, money for her passage began to come in, as well as signatures for her petition and both continued to come up to the hour that she embarked.

The petition was presented to President Harding on the eve of the conference. Behind it, to use Madame Yajima's words, were vast spiritual resources, and it represented the mobilization of thousands of hearts.

Just before sailing, knowing that neither she nor her companion could make themselves understood in English, Madame Yajima had printed a brief statement outlining her purpose in coming to America. The statement is so beautiful in its simplicity that we give it in full: Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

We have hope and gratitude for the coming conference to be held in Washington. The reasons why I, a woman of eighty-nine, have crossed the ocean and the continent are: 1. I am sure that the coming Pacific Conference will surely be the foundation of world peace. 2. We, the Japanese women, do not like war but truly and heartily desire peace. 3. All those who believe in God and love peace ought to join hands and work to make this world the home of God. 4. I have fortunately many friends in America, those who are one with us both in faith and principle. For these reasons, I, as a free individual and neither an official messenger nor the representative of the country, have come to this land.

For the last thirty-five years I have acted as the president of the National W. C. T. U. for the purpose of world peace, world purity and world prohibition. I think I am one of the most fortunate women in Japan in having many friends throughout the world, and the health which the Lord has blessed me with makes me able to cross the ocean and visit you for the third time. I know no other language than my own, yet I know that God knows every language, so I have come to pray with you sisters quietly. God has promised that he will listen to us when two or three gather together and pray. My country-men and women have sent me and support me with their prayers.

Let us pray for the coming of a World Peace.

Kaji Yajima,

Founder W. C. T. U., Japan.

Modernizing Missionary Meetings

The hoary problem of the modern missionary program committee resolves itself into two factors—a "fetching" invitation and "delivering the goods." Apply advertising principles.

By ESTELLA L. AITCHISON

IF we give up our women's mission circle, what plans can you suggest that will take in the whole church membership? The Methods Observer is glad to note that this vexed question of the early days of our promotional merger is giving place to the higher one, "How can we develop the latent resources of our women's organization and utilize its full working values?" Woman's distinctive activity in the local church, especially during the period of the day when men as yokemates are not available, is neither an invidious distinction nor a feminist feature, but rather a matter of efficiency. There is no question, however, regarding the desirability of improving and modernizing the average machinery with which our church women are conducting their work. For a working model of a high-gear, efficiency organization of your church women, we can only refer our readers to the article on page 54 of January Missions, and utilize our present limited space for a brief discussion of ways and means.

It would appear that the good man who was driven to comb the highways and hedges for his supper guests had nothing on the modern missionary program committee in its desperate expedients to muster an audience. As a matter of fact, this hoary problem usually resolves itself into two factors, viz., a "fetching" invitation and "delivering the goods." Out of long experience, the Methods Observer is prepared to guarantee that adequate attention to these points will secure a good turn-out—allowing time, of course, for a moss-covered mission circle to live down its reputation. The "fetching" invitation is but an application of the principles of modern advertising.

Arranging the Lure

A brief of ten successful mission circles the writer has in mind affords the following suggestions:

Have a catchy title and an attractively worded invitation (visualized by object or design, if possible) instead of "the usual missionary notice," in church calendar, local newspapers, on bulletin board and posters displayed in church vestibule or even down-town store windows. Supplement this by urgent individual invitations face to face, by mail (visiting cards with an added line, a full program attractively displayed, a unique request on a missionary souvenir postal), or by telephone, certain groups in the society—special committees, the work circles, and so on—taking turns in calling up all the women of the church several days before each meeting and stressing attractive features of the forthcoming program. Vary the bait from month to month, but never neglect the individual lure. Shot-gun invitations may bring down something or nothing but they rarely bag an audience worthy of the painstaking preparations.

Compare the following catchy program subjects, taken from actual use, with such spade-is-a-spade titles as "Our Work in Africa"; "Missions in China"; "Missionary Education in Burma"; "A Visit to a Tropical Garden"; "Rousing the Rhinoceros"; "The Land of the Blood-Red Ruby"; "The Orient at Our Doors"; "Friendly Visits in Little Italy"; "Mathie—A Door of Hope for the Negro Race"; "Around the World with the Christmas Spirit"; "Our Ambulance Corps in Overseas Service"; "A Down-to-Date District School."

Keeping Faith with the Audience

An adequate attendance will never be built up until, to borrow a perfectly good phrase from the commercial world, the program committee is prepared to "deliver

A Missionary Woman's Commandments

(With apologies to South Pacific District)

I. Thou shalt remember thy missionary day, to keep it free from engagements, and not absent thyself without excellent cause.

II. Thou shalt on the first day of the week lay by of thy store as God has prospered thee, that there be no need for a mad gathering at the end of the year.

III. Thou shalt learn the joy of doing things well, and to that end, be willing to serve on committees.

IV. Thou shalt give of thy talent, whether it be literary, musical or artistic, for the benefit of thy missionary society, knowing that she who giveth is even more blessed than she who receiveth.

V. Thou shalt subscribe for and read Missions and The Baptist. They are worthy of thy attention.

VI. Thou shalt study our missionary literature and acquaint thyself well therewith, that thou mayest have a deep and broad intelligence.

VII. Thou shalt be ever ready to give of thy time and strength in work for the cause of missions.

VIII. Thou shalt be watchful to engage the young women of thy church in missionary service, organizing them in chapters of the World Wide Guild.

IX. Thou shalt not neglect the children within thy borders, but shalt form them into companies of the Children's World Crusade that they may early learn to love missions.

X. Above all thou shalt pray daily and believingly that God himself will do those things that are beyond our power, and will guide and bless our efforts in his service.

the goods." (Don't be shocked, Mrs. Prunes-and-Prims. Possibly the first thing your missionary society needs to do is to crack the veneer of prim traditionalism from your phraseology.) It is high time women who would scorn a steady menu of plain-boiled potatoes, fried round steak and cabbage au naturel instead of their tasty catering, cease to serve missionary societies with raw study books and magazine articles and warmed-over leaflets passed out by an eyes-glued-to-the-page reader. Study the natural tastes of your women. Find out what they care for outside of a missionary meeting and, so far as practicable, cater accordingly. For instance, you can get a powerful pull on the pocket-book and the prayer impulse by appealing to the imagination, especially among the younger folk who are accustomed to consider your meetings dry. Use stories, poems, songs, plays, tableaux, and the like. Send your truth in through eye-gate by means of maps, charts, graphs, easel lectures, stereopticon slides and moving pictures. Yes; we have them—Baptist missionary movies—three sets of them: "Moving Pictures of West China Baptist Mission"; "Moving Pictures of Sunrise for the Mono," and the five-reel picture, "Men of Tomorrow." Speed the day when we shall be able to see our New World Movement contributions in action on all the fields!

Where can you get ample supplies of the above-mentioned, real-life material? In the literature department of the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City. The new catalogue of missionary literature, including that of all the societies and boards of the Northern Baptist Convention, is a just subject for pride, both as to its contents and the excellent classifications.

Drafting Program Recruits

How can we get our timid or less gifted folk into line? This, like certain other hackneyed queries, is not so much of a poser as it seems. May we say at the start that it is not necessarily foreordained and predestined that every church woman should take part on a program. Many serviceable women express themselves most effectively in working up social events, calling and even doing "kitchen police duty." But a larger proportion than you would think are available for program use if the approach is modest and tactful. One society of which I know starts its timid women on missionary news items, the devotional exercises in which the leader supplies the theme and the audience passages of scripture. Mrs. J. S. Lemon, of Centralia, Ill., recently suggested another excellent beginning. She says: "The question box in Missions means so much to our society and we use it each month. First, the woman who has charge of the question box must read her Missions for that month, in order to know the correct answers. Then each woman responsible for a question must read some, to answer her query at the meeting. And lastly, we find that if a person has only a question to answer, it makes her feel that she is a vital part of the meeting; and as there are twenty questions, we are always sure of that number of people in the audience!"

Finally, brethren, do not imagine that you have only to use catchy titles and advertising; serve live-wire programs and supply every woman in the mission circle with a "job" to make your organization a vital part of The New World Movement. Genuine interest in the subject matter, loyalty to the Great Commission and an absolute dependence on the Great Empowering are as essential to a missionary society as brain, nerves and heart are to a virile body. We are only seeking to remind you that the One who assembled this great complex of tastes and endowments which we call a woman never contemplated the divorce between the informational and the attractive which the average missionary program exhibits.

What of the Coming Generation?

The Rising Generation Will Lead

By MARY L. NOBLE.

THE rising generation of Baptists has taken a long leap ahead through the organization of the Children's World Crusade, which was started four years ago for the missionary education and training of boys and girls under twelve years of age. We used to have scattering cradle rolls and baby bands and little helpers—now we have 1,389 Herald Bands and Crusader companies, which include children from five to twelve years. The training in carrying on their own societies, in conducting the business, in doing the handwork that will be useful to the missionaries, and in helping to bear their part of the responsibility of the missionary societies, is, according to General Pershing, one of the most optimistic of the authorities, a guarantee of efficient leadership in the future. Some results which indicate the ground for such hopefulness are:

by the Crusaders between June 1 and Dec. 1, 1921, according to the reports sent in. This is due to the fact that the best missionary books printed for boys and girls are available through the traveling library for Crusaders.

104 Books to Borrow but these are different from ordinary borrowed books, as these have to be returned. A month is allowed for them to be circulated in each company, and there is now of sixteen companies, which shows the demand for good reading.

Perplexing Puzzle Solved

Each month on the Children's World Crusade page of Missions there is a puzzle for the boys and girls to work out. The responses are increasing in number and there is every reason to believe that these boys and girls, who are begging now to solve these problems, will be equal to anything that will confront the denomination in the future. There is not only a willingness to master a hard proposition, but the children have found pleasure in the task, as is witnessed by a note attached to the solution by one "Successful Puzzler." "It was very hard work to get them, but it was fun."

A Foot of Dimes from Every Crusader

This is the slogan of the Crusaders' World Campaign. For the first time in its history, the C. W. C. has been given a definite financial objective. Its quota is $6,000 of the $6,000,000 of the Continuation Campaign. February first was the day set for making the start, and cardboard foot measures with slots for twelve dimes were in the hands of the Crusaders on that day. From the bare announcement in January Missions many orders were received, not only from members of the C. W. C., but from boys and girls, where there is no Crusader company, who were eager to help by getting a foot of dimes. One boy said, "I'm sure of 10 cents a week for my foot, because my brother gives it to me for helping carry papers." Three states will help on the campaign by using a love chain instead of the foot of dimes. Each link in the chain will be 10 cents.

A Cosmopolitan Organization

In this Crusade are bands and companies of Japanese, Chinese, Mexican, Indian, Roumanian, Hungarian, Slovak, Italian, Negro, Norwegian, Swedish, Polish, Russian and French children, and children in two Baptist orphanages and two Union churches.

At present there are 3575 chapters including one in the Philippine Islands, three in Japan, one in China, one in Burma, three in India, three in Cuba and two in Porto Rico, one among the Kiowa Indians, several among Negroes, besides many among the new Americans in our large cities.

Canadian Branch

A year and a half ago the leaders of women's missionary interests in the Maritime Provinces asked the privilege of affiliating their girls with the W. W. G. and they now have thirty-five chapters, one of which has qualified in the reading contest. It was a great pleasure to accept their invitation to Halifax in October and a picture of the guild in Halifax will appear in April Missions.

Six and a Half Years Old

This worth-while girl is a normal growing child, and provision has been made for her development along the following lines:

1. Educational.

a. Programs specially prepared by Margaret Applegarth on "The Kingdom and the Nations" and "Playing Square with Tomorrow." b. Mission study classes in addition to program meetings. c. Reading contest. Last year sixty-eight chapters qualified which meant that every member read individually five missionary books during the year. d. Theme contest. Subject "Race Prejudice." The winner in this contest will be sent to the summer school of missions nearest her home as a guest of the department of missionary education. e. Reading groups.

2. Hand Work.

White Cross work for home and foreign missionaries.

3. Recreations.

a. Missionary plays and pageants. b. W. W. G. week-end rallies, and house parties lasting several days, conducted like a summer school with classes on the Bible, mission study and story telling.

4. Family Responsibility.

By assuming the leadership of local chapters, associations, state and district, these secretaries are getting training which will fit them for greater responsibilities in the future.

5. Stewardship.

a. Tithers' leagues which are growing in numbers and popularity. b. Life service. An increasing number of girls are recognizing the claims of the Master and responding with the gift of their lives.

Loyalty

WE WILL GIVE $50,000

Each of the ten districts has hilariously accepted its share of that amount and West Virginia has voluntarily raised its quota nearly four-fold.

We are loyal supporters of our good friend Missions which is our medium of exchange and without which we could hardly do business.

Has your church a World-Wide Guild Chapter? You will have to eventually; why not now?

Where Does the Money Go?

Note the small amount proportionately for home administration.

Teaching Sanitation

In a prosperous town little Mexican children sleep in their day clothes on the bare floor of dilapidated houses. The result of some practical Christianity applied where most needed.

By MRS. C. T. ILLSLEY

LATE one raw November afternoon, when the prairie wind was tearing clothes-lines into shreds, snapping off dead tree branches, slamming loose doors and whistling through every crevice, Senora Jimenez was reported sick. The Sunday-school superintendent had found her lying upon a bare mattress with only a coat for covering, and apparently suffering from cold and fever. There was need of a woman's care and the woman closest by was notified. There was no time for telephoning for other helpers. The quickest way to relieve the situation was to go, even though the family was a new one and there had not yet been any acquaintances formed. Putting a thermometer into her pocket the good woman hurried off. A family without bedclothes! What could be done at that late hour? All the extra home supplies had already gone into missionary boxes. But here was one big house on the way where perhaps there might be an over-supply of bedclothes. The housewife was known to be kind, but whether her heart had warmed toward the poor Mexican remained to be tested. How "sharp and sudden" the Lord answers some prayers! There was a big comforter just waiting to be given to anybody in need. What a difference it made in the poor bed which had only two thin cotton blankets as a protection from the cold. And what a relief to the cramped posture of the sick woman, curling up for warmth under the coat.

The thermometer revealed the need for a physician's services though the husband thought there might not be, for he had little money. He had been laid off from the section a few miles away and had traveled on in search of work, but so far had found none. He was not asking for help, thinking all would be well pretty soon.

"Where do Jose and Julia sleep?" asked the visitor, seeing but one bed where baby Sarita claimed her share of the room.

"Down here," replied the father, indicating the bare floor, still damp from a recent scrubbing, and no doubt responsible for the mother's condition. "We give them one of the blankets."

Think of a town so prosperous that scarce a chore-woman must toil for her daily bread, yet little Mexican children must sleep in their day clothes on the bare floor of dilapidated houses!

There were some women who could not sleep that night till this distress was relieved, and though the next day was the Sabbath other women patched up worn bed quilts and made another bed comfortable so that Jose and Julia might feel like real Americans.

Why couldn't some of the other Mexicans take that baby and keep it till the mother got well, or why couldn't they lend the family bedclothes enough to tide them over misfortunes? That was what several people wanted to know. Bless you, friend, there weren't at that particular minute enough bedclothes in all Little Mexico, all piled in one heap, sufficient to equal the supply in your grandmother's company room!

A late inspection had revealed that state of affairs. The Mexicans were all setting up heating stoves close to their beds. It was so cold at night, they said. One man declared that he seldom had a good night's sleep all winter for he had to replenish the fires so frequently. Examination of beds revealed not a single quilt, usually one heavy blanket to a bed, sometimes not that much.

It was useless to talk about cold bedrooms and abundance of cover without some concrete example. A young matrons' class in one of the Sunday schools was to meet that very week for a social afternoon. Why not use them?

It was no difficulty to collect a number of badly worn comforters. Torn blankets were also requisitioned. A shower of flour-sacks was requested and one good soul offered to color the whole batch a beautiful rose.

God Bless the Mothers

OUR FATHER who art in heaven yet who hast reserved the first and best of all thy blessings for the earthly home, we pray thee for the mothers whom they hast set to light those homes for thee. Give them a vision measured to their task, give them a faith as boundless as the sea, give them a wisdom that is brave and sure, give them a patience that is firm though mild. Make them in all things steadfast, tender, calm and true.

And for their children too we pray. Grant that these perfect gifts from thee be not marred in the handling—that these tender spirits born so free yet so easily fettered, shall bear no shackles of their mothers' forging. Make them to grow to large things—God's love, man's service, world friendship.

So for the mothers of the world we pray that they may know whence is their crown and of what manner of kingdom is their rule, that they may find in their children's lives their rich reward.

—ROBERTA M. MCKINNEY.

The meeting could have been held in a church and of course would have been far less trouble to somebody, but how would the Mexican woman get all the ideas one wished to implant without being in a well ordered home? So a big house was selected, one with airy bedrooms upstairs. Notes were sent to the Mexican women to come for an afternoon and help make quilts. They are timid and do not respond so readily as one might think to such invitations. Half of them came, however. Two, it was found out afterward, remained home because it was the day for the English teacher to come.

What quizzical expressions spread over the faces of those dark-skinned women as they were ushered into the upstairs bedrooms and allowed to look about. How queer! Only one bed to a room and no stove, but two or three big, fat quilts to keep one warm. Mexican women can work as well as Americans. One of them kept the sewing machine humming all the afternoon, running the brilliant flour-sacks together. The others knelt about the old quilts on the floor, pinning the new tops to them and then sat about the table helping to tack them. Purely for the sake of showing the women how to do it, cotton was brought and one comforter put into the frames and tacked in proper fashion. Some quilts needed merely to be patched and that served another lesson.

When the comforters were all ready and everybody had been refreshed with doughnuts and sandwiches and coffee, a number was pinned on each bedcover and a corresponding number given to one of the Mexican women. The women who failed to come were represented in the contest by some of the children. Each was allowed to find her number on a quilt, and then get it and her neighbor's ready for carrying home. The procession of bundles and women and children that wound down the tracks toward Mexico town reminded one of the Israelites, with all their earthly possessions, coming up out of Egypt.

The lesson has had its good effect. In at least one home the stove has been moved out into the middle of the box-car and a bedroom made at the far end. The Mexican has not the pauper spirit. He is anxious to be like other people. Even little Jose and Julia, though their coats were but thin cotton, on the Sunday following the help given in their home, brought an offering for the Sunday-school treasury.

Greetings from Baptist Women of Finland

Another word of greeting from European Baptists has come to us through Mrs. Martha Pratt Buttrick, one of Vermont's Baptist girls who is doing Y. W. C. A. work in Reval, Finland. At Christmas time she married Mr. Paul Buttrick, who is connected with the Y. M. C. A. and who is a son of Dr. Wallace Buttrick, of the Rockefeller Foundation. This is from her letter telling of their honeymoon:

"We've just finished touring Finland and go back to Reval Wednesday. We crossed the Arctic Circle, saw real reindeer driven through the streets and only three hours of daylight. It's rather an unusual honeymoon—seeking out the Arctic Circle—but it was so full of fun and interest and everything as neat and clean as in America.

"I've gotten in touch with the Baptists in Reval. They seem very strong and earnest. My club girls still remember the time when all their meetings were held in secret.

"I addressed an auditorium crowded with about 400 women. Their interest and attention was almost tragic. The woman who translated for me spoke good English and is the wife of one of the three Baptist pastors in Reval.

"I asked the ladies if they would like to send greetings to the Baptist women in America and they were most enthusiastic so I'm sending them to you. The dear little old ladies just hung around me after the service. I was a great curiosity. They wouldn't talk to me, but cried and shook hands and looked."

For World-Wide Evangelization

By MORNAY WILLIAMS

O GOD, our Father, who didst give Thy well beloved Son to be the Saviour of the world, make us, the younger sons in Thy great family, the saviours of our generation.

O Divine Son, who didst first give thine own self as the bearer of the glad tidings of a Father's love to a loveless world, make us, we beseech thee, thy messengers to all the tribes of earth that, through us men, all may know the man, Christ Jesus.

O Holy Spirit, Illuminator of the faithful, who dost bring order out of chaos and light out of darkness, make us also to be lights in the world, stars in the darkness, that by thy light in us all men may see light.

And Thou, O Triune God, our Lord, our Life, our Light, suffer us not to fall from thee, and withholding from others that we have received from thee to darken our house of life and stumble in the path that leads to life eternal. Subdue our unbelief and grant us thy grace of faith; forgive our cowardice and grant us thy grace of hope; pardon and expel our selfishness and grant us thy grace of love; fulfill thyself in us and all men everywhere, for that thou art love. Amen.

The Baptist Missionary Training School

By CLARA D. PINKHAM

THE Baptist Missionary Training School was organized in answer to a woman's call for more adequate training along missionary lines. That call came many years ago and the answer to that first call has been the answer to similar calls all the way along.

The first class to be graduated, 1881, numbered sixteen, six of whom are still living. When the class of 1921 was graduated last June, the total enrolment of young women alumnae of the Training School was 863. The largest class ever graduated was that of 1913, with an enrolment of forty-five members. The smallest class, that of 1882, with an enrolment of seven. The average number in each graduating class for the forty-one years has been about twenty-one. This is especially true of the classes of recent years: 1918 had nineteen members; 1919, twenty-three members; 1920, eighteen members, and 1921, twenty-three members.

Graduates of the Training School are found in all parts of the world, and are engaged in all the various lines of Christian work. The foreign countries represented by Training School graduates are: India, Burma, Assam, China, Japan, Central America, South America, Africa, Norway, Russia, Denmark, Mexico, Cuba, the Philippines and Porto Rico. In the United States graduates are working among the Bohemians, Chinese, Japanese, Mexicans, Danes, Norwegians, Swedes, French, Germans, Indians, Italians, Jews, Negroes, Russians, Syrians and the Slavic races.

There are many other fields of service in which our graduates are working. We find some of them as city, church and Sunday-school missionaries among the mill and mining populations, and the American population of the West. Others are working under special appointments of the various state boards and conventions, and are secretaries, matrons, missionary supervisors, field workers, pastors' assistants or directors of religious education. Quite a number are teachers, either of grade or high-school work in our mission schools, academies and colleges. Several of our graduates are in charge of missionary training schools in foreign lands, one of the latest being that in Iloilo, Panay, Philippines, in charge of Miss Dorothy Dowell, class of 1917.

All this calls for adequate preparation. With this end in view the curriculum of the Training School is arranged to meet all requirements and is collegiate in its grade of work. It is recognized as such by the colleges and universities where our graduates have entered for the purpose of securing a degree. Added to the high standard of academic work is the specialized and supervised practice work which enables the student to become acquainted with the various types of missionary and field work. Not only is the quality of work given of exceptionally high standard, but the student body is an unusually well-equipped one. At the present time one-third are either college, normal or kindergarten college graduates. Of these, nine have B. A. degrees, and one has her M. R. E. degree. The other two-thirds are high-school graduates.

Ours is the first missionary training school in America. It has been the pioneer in progress and academic advancement. Its slogan for the future is: Leadership in rank, scholarship, equipment and output.

Why I Am to Be a Missionary

I HAVE wanted to be a missionary," says Miss Knight, "for so long that if I should tell all the reasons, I should have to relate all the points in my life where my religious experience has been most deep, intense and meaningful. As I look forward to the day, now not far distant, when I hope to enter upon the work which I have made my life purpose, I sum up my reasons for deciding upon it somewhat as follows:

"The center of my life, in my thinking and I hope in my practical living as well, is a deep and abiding faith in God and in his goodness. I believe that he has a great and good purpose for the universe which includes everybody everywhere. This purpose can be accomplished only by the efforts of men and women who are devoted to God and to their fellowmen. I have long felt that one who honestly tries to keep his heart and life in tune with God and his purpose will come to know quite definitely his place in the working out of that purpose. As I have tried so to keep myself in tune, I have found myself responding more and more to the call of the foreign field, particularly of China. So many experiences enter into this that it is impossible to relate them here. Missionary literature, historical and geographical information about oriental countries, but more than these, the atmosphere of a Christ-filled home life, the influence of men and women whose lives are devoted to missions, and the teachings of Jesus which show so clearly the way of life for all men—all these have helped to shape my purpose and make it grow. It is now the dominating desire of my life. With God's help, I hope to use all that I am or may become in his service."

(The picture of Miss Knight, used not in preference to others but merely because it is most available, represents one of the many fine young women from our schools and colleges who are continually presenting themselves to the Woman's Foreign Mission Society for service on the foreign field. The original plans of the New World Movement included the sending out of thirty-three such women this year. Owing to lack of money not more than twenty can go. The young women are ready. As many will be sent as receipts allow. Where is the money?—The Editors.)

Some Reasons for the Continuation Campaign

On the side of a mountain 4,000 feet above sea level, 106 miles from the railway in the State of Assam, is a little school of twenty-six girls. Two cottages of native materials costing $85 have been built. The missionary is using her own living-room as a class-room. There is no room for the ones and twos who come weekly from the hills seeking entrance to the circle of happy Christian girlhood.

On one of the islands of the sea is a beautiful hospital. For years it has been a great evangelizing force in the community. The nurses' training school has been sending finely trained consecrated young women. They have been living in cramped unhygienic quarters. The government now says the nurses must have a new residence. If none is provided government recognition and standardization of the hospital is lost and with it the training school.

Two missionaries of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in Burma are living two weeks' journey from the nearest mission station. The house in which they live, while not built on the sands, is built on low ground and when the floods come the floors become warped and rotten. There are so many holes in the floor that care has to be taken to keep the table legs and other things from falling in.

Obviously a new building must be built on higher ground. How is it to be done? By the successful completion of the $100,000,000 fund.

Faint Heart Ne'er Won Fair Lady

(A DENOMINATIONAL DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN.)

ON the afternoon of February 14 Miss Orchard was buttoning her spats—which, as every woman knows, is a position to cause rush of blood to the head, so that her heart was really fainter than ever as she stood upright and straightened her hat.

"Now for it!" she sighed as she went out the front door, and started down the street. "Honestly," she acknowledged to herself, "I'm frightened to pieces!" But she nobly continued on her way until she reached number 67 Esterbrook Boulevard, where she rang the polished door-bell, and was admitted. It was then that she realized how she had actually been counting on finding Pisa not at home—the day being so fine, and Pisa possessing an automobile.

While she nervously waits in the drawing-room perhaps there will be time to tell you in a whisper that Pisa is the Pillar of the old First Church. One of those ladies whose very names are imposing as presidents of societies; her real name, needless to state, was not Pisa at all, but Tower—Mrs. Weddington Everett Tower. Just to say it made people suck in their breath, it was so utterly appropriate to an appropriate lady. One wonders how Miss Orchard ever had the temerity to nickname such as she: "Pisa."

"Well, she leans, doesn't she?" said Miss Orchard briskly, "and isn't the Leaning Tower at Pisa? And don't people gaze at it, awestruck? And don't they one and all want to hang a copy on their walls? And don't successive admirers marvel anew at the way the leaning keeps right on? Then what could fit our dear Mrs. Tower better—since she leans in official grandeur on the whole ladies' aid society and the whole woman's missionary society and the whole church, for that matter, and never does another blooming thing but lean! I tell you how it is, if she's a pillar, then it isn't so much a case of her holding up the roof, as that the weight of the roof keeps her jacked upright."

It was this frank adventuresomeness that led the committee to give Mrs. Tower's name to Miss Orchard when it came time to collect. No one else dared tackle Pisa! And now, faint-hearted, the chivalrous canvasser quailed in her boots as Mrs. Tower came sailing down the stairs in all the glory of a matron whom nobody crosses.

"My dear Miss Orchard, how nice of you to come to see me. I always say that calling has gone clean out of fashion in these impolite days. Neither for duty nor for pleasure do we seek each other's company any more.... Er-er, is there something I can do for you?" she asked, neatly baiting her own trap.

Miss Orchard gleamed in that shining way she had, inwardly remarking to herself: "I won't be nervous! She's only a woman—only a woman—only a woman!" while the actual words that accompanied her smile were: "Mrs. Tower, that's lovely of you to get us right at the point of the call, straight off! For the truth of the matter is that there is a point, for I came to tell you about the most interesting thing our women are doing this month. I never was so proud of Baptist women, were you? I don't suppose that the whole world over you could find another Mrs. Montgomery, for instance."

"I'm sure you couldn't!" agreed Mrs. Tower with heartfelt conviction—she having succumbed to that lady's winsome smile at a parlor meeting during the Jubilee!

"Personally," continued the guileless caller, "I think the best thing our denomination could have done just now was to elect her president. Who else have we got with such a warm heart and such a clear vision and such a compelling fashion of getting others warmed up and visioning."

"True!" said Mrs. Tower, forcefully, "quite true! I said to Mr. Tower that now he would see what I meant in praising her to the skies."

"Y-yes," agreed Miss Orchard with the first diplomatic doubt, "of course I don't know just what spectacular moves we should expect her to make in the brief year at her disposal, though, do you? I'd do a good deal myself to keep her from being disappointed in us, wouldn't you?"

"Indeed I would," said Mrs. Tower; then, as if remembering a myriad weightier matters, added leniently: "and now suppose we get down to brass tacks, Miss Orchard."

"Oh, but that's my first tack," she cried, "just that—backing up Mrs. Montgomery!"

"Um'm!" murmured Mrs. Tower non-committally, scenting something, she knew not what, as she watched Miss Orchard rummaging in her bag for a leaflet.

"It's women who feel as you and I do who will put over this Continuation Campaign. I presume you may have heard about it."

"Yes, I have," said Mrs. Tower with profound regret, "and I must say I don't approve of it. We've had enough drives and campaigns."

Miss Orchard opened her little green campaign circular called "Standing on the Promises of God" as she smiled: "Isn't it singular that that's one of the remarks we thought might be made, so listen to this verse which the committee selected to offset it: 'Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old. Behold I will do a new thing.' Don't you want to read over the nine other objections people are sure to make and the nine other scriptural rebuttals to silence those who demur? Surely any Christian can stand safely on such promises of God as these."

Since the leaflet was dangled in front of her, Mrs. Tower took it gingerly and glanced it through: "Quite apropos, I dare say," she said, "but to be quite frank, I don't approve of missions, and I don't honestly believe in giving all this money for people I never saw and probably never will see."

"You don't believe in missions!" repeated Miss Orchard, startled, obviously. "Why, you pray, don't you? The Lord's Prayer?"

"Of course I pray—every day of my life," said Mrs. Tower.

"But I wonder how you can!" Miss Orchard ventured, "I should think you'd rather stop."

A dangerous spark came into Mrs. Tower's masterful eye: "Surely my devotions are hardly open to discussion."

"N-no; but it seems such a farce. To be so utterly out of sympathy with Christ's whole purpose and yet to go on praying every day 'Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth,' all the time saying to your money: 'Now just stay right here at home in my purse and keep that kingdom from coming!' Why, it's such a missionary prayer, Mrs. Tower. It isn't until it's gone clear around the world to bring the kingdom that it comes down to our own personal need of daily bread today. If I didn't believe in supporting missions I would certainly stop all my praying at once. And burn my Bible, too."

Mrs. Tower edged uneasily to the front of her chair: "You pain me, Miss Orchard. Certainly it is open to me to interpret my Bible in my own way. It isn't obligatory for us all to think alike. And to me, missions is just one of those things that people either do or don't support in the church life. Purely a matter of choice, some of us go in for the ladies' aid and some for the mission circle, but I'm sure it's all to the glory of God. I might remind you that the Bible expressly warns us in no uncertain tones, 'Judge not, that ye be not judged.'"

Miss Orchard would have infinitely preferred dying to continuing, but she gripped the arms of her chair and said with all the fervor of her five and thirty sunny years: "Mrs. Tower, in a matter as enormous as this it isn't a mere case of judging, it's as if I saw you drowning and it was the last chance to lend a hand. You quote the Bible, and you really seem to reverence it, yet not a page of the whole book but is missionary from its top line to its foot-notes! In the Old Testament what is there but God watching a world lost in sin, God nurturing his chosen people in preparation for saving this world, God speaking against the worship of heathen idols; and then, in the fullness of time, God so loving the world that he sent his own Son—a missionary! A missionary on whose daily life all succeeding missionaries have patterned their daily lives—healing the sick, blessing little children, teaching the multitudes who are forever like sheep without a shepherd, preaching the gospel to the poor and needy. Why, what Bible would you have left if you cast out the missionary parts, Mrs. Tower?"

Miss Orchard stopped, aghast at the enthusiasm that had carried her along. Mrs. Tower looked vastly uncomfortable as the silence grew. "W-what is it that you propose I should do?" she finally said.

Miss Orchard's eyes filled with sudden tears: "You poor dear! I have nothing to propose, although when I came here it was in my heart to ask you bitterly why you kept your name on a church roll anyhow. And I was going to quote Christ's words: 'He who is not for us, is against us.' But now I am too sorry for you to say it. More sorry than I am for any one else I know. For you have nothing—nothing. It is so utterly pitiable, I never dreamed how your very impressiveness makes the hollowness seem. . . . emptier. . . ."

Mrs. Tower twisted her hands in an agony of restraint. "I think I should like to be alone awhile," she said with a break in her voice.

Miss Orchard went over and kissed her: "I understand," she whispered gently. Then: "Who knows but that you have been called to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

And that evening, late, the best valentine that any Baptist ever had was left at Miss Orchard's door—a pledge card from Mrs. Tower, filled in; while on the other side she had written: "Feb. 14. 'For where your treasure is there will your heart be also.' Thank you for showing me the joy of lifting the Baptist load!"

Although he has a splendid back
He hasn't any head,
And though his arms are very strong
He never has been fed.
His legs are stout, yet never have
I seen him run and play,
You sit upon his lap, I think,
For hours every day. (Chair!)

This body likes to climb a tree,
Though she's but two years old—
She walks the top rail of a fence;
Was ever child so bold?
Her voice is loud, she sings at night,
She never wears a hat;
Now say the name of anything,
Her name will rhyme with "hat." (?)

He uses a pen
Every day of his life,
And yet he can't write,
And no more can his wife.
Too, like the lily, he never Will labor or toil,
And oft, like the lily,
He roots in the soil. (?)

'Tis a gay sort of lion
All dressed in yellow,
I've pulled the head off
Of many a fellow.
He stands in the grass
But he never prowls round,

When I blow off his hair
He makes never a sound. (?)

Yet it leaves in the spring;
Though I know well its bark
I don't think it can sing. (?)

He likes his bath so well
He eats his dinner in it,
I say, "Come out and take a walk,"
He won't come for a minute!
I dropped a line to him one day
Inviting him to travel,
And when he came he wouldn't walk
But laid upon the gravel. (?)

A row of little chaps in white
Attend you at your dinner,
Or if they don't, why, you must be

Upon its head all round and bald
I saw a fellow beat,
The people stood and stared at him
All up and down the street.
Now, what would be the use of food
Unless 'tis to be eaten?
And what would be the use of this
Except it should be beaten? (?)

Little yellow twins they were,
Both neatly dressed in red,
I broke into their yellow house
And took them from their bed.
I think you've done the very same,
So don't complain of me,
You've swallowed many just such twins,
Now guess what they can be! (?)

The Old Lady Who Never Had a Valentine

ALL day long she sat in a chair by the window hoping the sun would shine on her. But half the time it didn't of course, so the Old Lady Who Never Had a Valentine would shiver and complain: "There's nothing nice about winter. It's a long shivery, chilly, gloomy, endless season, with not one bright spot anywhere."

"There's Christmas," suggested Tom-the-Neighbor's-Son.

"Yes, but Christmas is at the beginning of winter and soon forgotten when the freezing weather comes on."

"But there's Valentine's Day," Tom-the-Neighbors'-Son reminded her.

"Tut! Tut!" she cried, "What have I got to do with valentines, a forlorn old lady like me? I never had one in my whole life!"

He stared at her, very much puzzled. For of course there were people who didn't keep Christmas—but they were either Jews, or heathens. And there were other people who didn't keep the Fourth of July, because they were English or French or Italian. But surely everybody had a heart; he worried over her.

"What makes old ladies cold in a warm room, mother?" he asked.

"Generally it's poor circulation, darling."

"And what is that thing called circulation?"

"Well," she smiled, "it's another way of saying that your heart isn't working quite right, I guess."

It was, you see, exactly what he had thought—she had a heart, but nobody had paid enough attention to it. Surely a valentine or two would work wonders, so he said to the cook making cookies: "Nora, could you cut me out just one cookie to look like a heart? It isn't for me, honest injun!"

"Watch me!" she cried. And in half an hour there it was. So he wrote a little verse to go with it:

"Ginger is brown, ginger is hot,
And I love you an awful lot."

Next he cut out a heart and pasted on it the gayest, happiest little children he could find in the magazine advertisements.

Indeed it was such fun making valentines for the Old Lady Who Had Never Had One that he made three others; and on February 14 he rang her doorbell at eight o'clock, right after breakfast to leave her the first valentine. At twelve-fifteen, just before luncheon, he left the second one; at two o'clock the third, and so on through the day, until the Old Lady Who Had Never Had a Valentine felt that she was the most popular belle on the block. But what she said was the nicest of all: "I've decided," she said with a smile, "that what I need to warm me up is a little son-shine beamed on me by the Tom-the-Neighbor's-Son!"

"I tell you what," said Tom. "I'll come in and beam a valentine at you on every single dark day!"

1. A false assertion. It is often asserted that the Indian race is dying out. Such is not the case. Indians have indeed, almost disappeared from the eastern states, where they were once numerous; but in many cases this is because they have been removed to reservations in the West. Some tribes have nearly died out, it is true, but many others not only maintain their numbers but are increasing.

2. Indian Locations. In New York the remnants of the once powerful Six Nations live on eight reservations. In Oklahoma, the five civilized tribes, the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw and Seminole are located. The Kiowas, Hopis, Putes, the Navahos, and the Crows sometimes called the "blanket Indians" are on reservations in the West and Southwest.

3. Indian Missions. Baptists have thirty-two missions to Indians in the United States. The oldest were established in 1894 among the Kiowas at Rainy Mountain and Elk Creek, Okla. There are now some 600 members of Kiowa Baptist churches. It was the Kiowas who conceived the idea of establishing a mission among the Hopis, which they called "God's Light Upon the Mountain," our well-known sunlight mission at the Second Mesa, Ariz.

Other missions in Oklahoma are among the Comanche, the Cheyenne, Arapahoe, Apache, and Caddo tribes. A conspicuous feature of the work in Oklahoma is Bacon College which has 233 students from twenty-three tribes.

In Montana the Crow Indian Mission, established in 1903 by Rev. W. A. Petzoldt, has six stations. There are now four Crow Indian churches, with a membership of 240. The little Crow Church at Pryor, Mont., with fifty-seven members, was allotted $1,100 in the New World Movement. It pledged $1,300.

In Arizona the Hopi missions are at First and Second Mesa, near Keams Canon. The First Mesa Hopi church subscribed double the amount allotted to it in the New World Movement. Work is also carried on among the Navahos of Arizona.

In California, the Mono tribe has been ministered to by the Home Mission Society since 1910. At that time it consisted of poor wanderers steeped in superstition, and given to the use of white man's "firewater." The Woman's Society sent Miss Schofield to work among the Monos at Auberry. Twelve years of mission work has resulted in the establishment of six Mono churches. These people are the poorest of the poor, yet they went far over their allotments in the New World Movement. The Christian Monos are now in great demand as laborers, and the bad reputation of the tribe is being lost sight of in the new spirit of Christian progress.—Adapted from Service.

Pennsylvania

Miss Marion E. Clark is editor of the B. Y. P. U. bulletin, published by the Pittsburgh Associational B. Y. P. U. "Playing the Game" quoted from the bulletin is right to the point and should be applied to the tasks of young people in the churches:

"Does it belittle our work to compare it to a game? The fact is that good sportsmanship embodies the principal virtues, and that these virtues are often more in evidence in our games than in our work.

"Playing the game means the elimination of peevishness, whining and criticism. It means cooperation to the limit, doing double where your partner shirks or shrinks, taking losses and injuries lightly, and accepting defeat cheerfully. It means honesty and straightforwardness, respects for rules, acquiescence in just decisions.

"Playing the game means staying in the game, and forwarding its progress every moment. The quitter, the obstructionist, the knocker, know nothing about playing the game. The worst of it is that their unhappy tactics keep others from playing. One perverse player can ruin a game entirely.

"A touchy, sensitive, egotistical person is also disqualified for team work. He might serve as a mascot, but he cannot play the game.

"Real playing demands strenuous training, which is the hardest kind of work. No one can play the game well who does not train vigorously and consistently."

Puget Sound Way

The New Year's rally of Western Washington young people was held at First Church, Everett. Dr. J. F. Watson served as toastmaster during the banquet. We suppose the early life of Dr. Watson must have been revealed in his subject: "Down On The Farm." He was assisted by other farmers who discussed the following topics: 1. "At Burton." 2. "Preparing the Soil." 3. "Sowing the Seed." 4. "Cultivating." 5. "Harvesting." 6. "Marketing Our Products." We understand the meeting of the "Grange" was well attended and that the farmers had a good time.

Tribal Meeting of the Oskies

"Oskie" is a name with which to charm. It is the tribal name of Illinois young people. That part of the tribe living in the vicinity of Delavan and Bloomington held a rally banquet recently. Addresses were made by several of the braves. General Secretary White participated in the festivities of the occasion.

Introducing

A "GEISTER" SPECIAL

We take great pleasure in presenting this week a cut of Miss Edna Geister, author of "Ice-Breakers and the Ice-Breaker Herself." Miss Geister has consented to serve as a contributor to our Young People's pages in THE BAPTIST. From time to time she will present programs for socials, especially adapted to meet the needs of our young people. The Young People's pages of THE BAPTIST will be open to all for the presentation of programs, etc. Have you an answer to the question, "What Shall We Play?"

YOU MUST "SHOW ME"

Some will recognize this as the characteristic expression of all Missourians. Mr. Ray Shubert, a fine young lawyer of Kansas City, and president of the City B. Y. P. U. of K. C., will report for us the doings of that great company of young people. The editor of these pages has been informed that Missouri is a good state to be from. Well!

MINNESOTA'S OWN. A RETURN ENGAGEMENT

Miss Jessie Burrall, director of religious education for Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., and Dr. W. S. Abernethy, pastor Calvary Church, Washington, D. C., have accepted important places on the program of the Thirty-first Anniversary Convention of the B. Y. P. U. of America, meeting in St. Paul, June 28 to July 2, 1922. Both are natives of Minnesota.

Iowa

Some have thought of Des Moines as the capital of the corn belt of the United States. Illinois would perhaps debate the question, taking the negative. Des Moines, without question is the home of a great group of enthusiastic Baptist young people. Note the report of C. B. Taylor:

"The first quarterly rally for 1922 of the Des Moines Young People's Union brought out nearly 350 folks to Calvary Church on Friday evening, January 20. Two silver cups and a banner were to be awarded and each of the six unions in the city had made an effort to get all their people out.

"Forest Avenue young people chartered a special street-car which brought the Des Moines University contingent and others from the west side of the river. The banner for the most effective work during the past three months along all lines, was awarded to Forest Avenue, as was also the cup for the largest attendance at the rally. The other cup, for the largest attendance at the rally in proportion to membership, was captured by Calvary.

"Dr. Cassidy, state promotion director for Iowa, brought a powerful message on the theme: "Bring One, Win One," making a telling appeal for personal bringing of the message of Christ, each to his friend.

"There was a buoyant spirit to be expected in a B. Y. P. U. rally, which found expression in songs, new and old, and in the "salute" (vocal) by which Dr. Cassidy was introduced. The city union has developed into a powerful influence for strengthening and enlarging the influence of the B. Y. P. U. in Des Moines."

The invasion of India by the American salesman is discussed at considerable length by a British official at Calcutta, who calls attention to the fact that the United States is now supplying from 10 to 12 per cent of the imports of India, whereas the share we supplied prior to the war was only 2.6 per cent. The valuation at the ports of India of American merchandise entering that country, he says, has advanced from £10,766,000 in the Indian fiscal year 1918-19 to £25,267,000 in 1920, and £35,298,000 in 1920-21, and adds, "While the American merchant houses established in India since the war are suffering from the present trade slump in common with their British rivals, they are gradually strengthening their hold, and during our cold weather season India is full of American travelers and business men studying trade facilities."

THE NEW CONFESSION OF FAITH

There has recently come to my hands from the Committee on Conferences on Baptist Fundamentals, a copy of the proposed "Confession of Faith." I cannot present it to my church with the present light I have on the subject. Would it not be well for this committee to give to our people through these columns a discussion of the merits of this proposed confession of faith, also setting forth the insufficiencies of the New Hampshire and Philadelphia Confessions?

There is one clause in the proposed confession that is very objectionable to some of our people, namely, No. 6, which states: "We believe in the church—a living spiritual body of which Christ is the head and of which all regenerated people are members." The new birth, as Jesus Christ taught, brings one into the kingdom of God, but not into the church. His church was still a matter lying in the future when he preached "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." While it is not necessary to discuss these doctrinal matters, yet we all know that the terms "visible" and "invisible" in connection with the church are but human inventions. If any one wants to believe that way, it is his privilege, but to fasten it upon us as a denominational tenet is going too far; and in this church to present the matter as it now stands would mean it would be voted down or make a division in the church. I hope that the committee will see fit to eliminate this objectionable matter, and to explain the necessity of leaving the old standards, and make clear the objectionable matter in them.

STANDARDIZE CHURCH ROLLS OF MEMBERSHIP

Can Baptists agree on some standardized roll of membership? The need is obvious, as every pastor knows.

Some churches report all names on the roll; some two lists as active or non-active, resident or non-resident; and some only contributors to the finances. This gives no equitable basis for evaluating the real strength of a church, nor any adequate basis as one of the factors in missionary apportionments. To report, as one church did recently in its yearly statistics, "only contributors," ignores those children who may have no income or others temporarily unable to pay anything. Is this just or even honest to the facts of membership? Again some non-resident members contribute while some resident members do not in probably every church. "Contributors" moreover is not the whole nor the best of life-membership, vital as that is, and as imperatively a duty and privilege for all who can.

Other churches with a centralized governing body generally have fixed standards of reporting membership. Their rules too often do not enlist vitally the membership any better than among our own self-determining churches, but this does afford a common basis for reports which is vital and understood by all concerned.

Here is a sample. A given church had on its reported list of members, when work was begun on it, seven names of those who had been dead from three to ten years, the names not having been taken off. They were, however just as "active" as many living in the place. . . . and a good deal less care! There were also nine or ten names of those who without reporting to the home church had united with other, mostly non-Baptist, churches. Others, still "active," confessed they had not been in the church building for from ten to twenty years, and contributed nothing. Some aged and with no means have nothing to give; often children have no income. Non-resident members may or may not contribute; the same is true of resident members, and what do we do about it? Some fail in pure neglect; some through indifference even with the best plans for an every member canvass; some positively refuse anyway. Yet often these are connected in families with those most faithful. It is a delicate, difficult task. Cannot the wise ones of the denomination work out a generally acceptable standard to which most churches will gladly conform? Is not this needed?

This is both "fundamental" and "modern," brethren. Go to it! Again, on investigation the writer understands that any one once a member of a church and against whom definite disciplinary action has not been actually begun, can claim, and in law demand, a letter of recommendation as in full accredited standing, though such letter may be so untrue to the facts of vital Christian living as to put Ananias to shame! May it be necessary to carry two or more lists; and then on whichever one estimates are placed, it would be alike for all who adopted the plan? Let us hear from others.

A Message from Russian Baptists

American Baptists will be glad to know that at last communication has been established between Baptist organizations in Russia and their brethren in other parts of the world. The Foreign Mission Society has just received, through Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist commissioner for Europe, the following message from the Baptist Union of all Russia.

The heartiest greetings and a holy kiss of brotherhood from all the brethren and sisters of the Baptist confession, and also from the brethren and sisters of the closely related confession known as evangelical Christians, to all our fellow-believers abroad, and their unions and associations in America, England, Germany, France, Latvia, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Roumania, Bulgaria, Italy, China, Japan, Australia, Africa, India, and also to all brothers and sisters of various peoples and races (including the three million strong Negro association of America) who are all bound with us in a common faith.

Our great homeland, to which the attention of the whole world is now directed, after all the mighty events through which it has lived, is again afflicted by a terrible disaster—famine. Hunger, following on the failure of harvest, rages throughout more than twenty governments, among them some—for example, Samar—which were once most fruitful. No fewer than 10,000,000 of our people are threatened by death from hunger.

The prevailing conditions have brought our land to a half-hungry state; all the resources of the country are exhausted, and there is no possibility by our own means to localize this new peril. We are threatened with fatalities incalculable, whatever the efforts of the government and the unselfish labor of various civil groups, which in spite of differences of political opinion have united for a common effort of relief to save millions of unhappy persons from death by famine. Even now, whilst there are still some portions of last harvest left, the picture is terrifying. People are selling their very last possessions in order to preserve life for a few days. A sewing machine is given away for 10 pounds of meal; the peasant sells his whole cottage for 3 hundredweight of meal. Parents drown their children to save them from the torture of death by hunger, or simply expose them and leave them to their fate. These abandoned children number thousands of whom hundreds die daily.

This is only the beginning of the great misfortune. Until the next harvest the danger becomes daily more terrible, accompanied by the inevitable disease that hunger brings with it, and the number of the dead is continually multiplied.

Among these unhappy persons are many of our Baptist people, who are crying for help and waiting for it.

Therefore we turn to you, dear brothers and sisters, to you for help in the name of our starving fellow-believers, and the whole suffering people. We appeal to the words, "Do good especially to them that are of the household of faith." Nevertheless we will not set bounds to the manifestation of love, but according to our power will also think of our neighbors though they belong to the Samaritans.

We Baptists have left the orthodox church of the land, and united in the brotherly union of the whole world without distinction of nationality, and as true followers of Christ we wish to obey his law of love. We are accustomed to manifold denials and severe, even bloody sacrifice. Our martyrs have besprinkled the earth with their blood. We will still sacrifice ourselves for the benefit of our hungry fellow-believers and fellowmen.

Our teaching was never that the end justifies the means. We do not believe that good is to be accomplished by unholy

ELISHA'S HEAVENLY DEFENDERS

2 Kings 6:8-23. Golden Text: Psalm 34:7

Interim

The intervening verses tell how Gehazi of the money-itching palm, followed the healed Naaman to beg from him the present and money which Elisha had refused. The angry prophet pronounced, "The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee and unto thy seed forever." And Gehazi went out a leper. Then Elisha made the iron ax-head, lost in the stream by one of the sons of the prophets, to float so that it was recovered.

Lesson Story

Guerilla warfare was being practiced by the Syrians against Israel, with designs particularly upon the life of the king. But each time Ben-hadad decided "in such and such a place shall be my camp," Elisha warned the king, "Behold thou pass not such a place, for thither the Syrians are coming." His plans were frustrated "not once nor twice," but so many times that Ben-hadad concluded there must be a traitor in his army. But one of his servants said, "Nay; but Elisha, the prophet, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber," that is, the most secret things seemed to be known to this man of God who had cured Naaman. Ben-hadad sent a great host (really a small number, but many for the taking of one man) by night to encompass the place where Elisha was—Dothan, a city on a small hill about twelve miles from Samaria. When his servant discovered the next morning that they were surrounded he said, "Alas, my master, how shall we do?" And Elisha answered, "Fear not; for they that are with us are more than they that are with them." He prayed that the young man's eyes might be opened so that he could see the heavenly defenders, and "he saw." Then Elisha called down blindness upon the enemy host and in this condition led them to Samaria before the king, when he opened their eyes. The king wished them put to death, but Elisha pointed out that this was no way to treat even prisoners of the war. So he feasted them bountifully, and thus was warfare ended between Syria and Israel.

Winter's Night College

By MRS. S. C. FULMER

The second year's session of the Winter's Night College of First Church, Indianapolis, Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, pastor, began Jan. 12. This Winter's Night College is an attempt on the part of the church to offer an educational program that will meet the needs of all classes in the church along the line of Christian education and it is the hope of the pastor to develop a Christian educational institution in connection with the church life that will offer courses of training in methods of Christian service and offer the best courses of lectures possible in Christian history and life.

Already between 250 and 300 students have enrolled, paid the enrollment fee, purchased the study books, and have begun the work. Four courses of study are offered this year. A class in Christian history taught by the Rev. O. R. McKay, who is director of religious education for the Indiana Baptist Convention. There are 225 in this class. A class in teacher training taught by E. T. Albertson, secretary of the Indiana State Sunday School Association. About sixty are enrolled in this class and it will be of great benefit to present and prospective teachers. Mr. Albertson has as his associate teacher Mr. Ellsworth Lowry, principal of the Indianapolis Normal Training School.

A class in a contemporary study of the Far East is being conducted by Mr. D. Lawrence Chambers and Mr. Allen J. Boesel. These men are especially adapted to teach this class, as Mr. Chambers is the teacher of the Agoga class and has specialized in teaching large men's classes; Mr. Boesel has given much thought and study to the missionary work. The text book for this class is "The Social Aspects of Foreign Missions," by President Faunce of Brown University. The Bible study class which numbers 225 is taught by the Rev. R. L. Van Deman, who is conducting an epochal study of the Scriptures, including the Old and New Testaments.

All of the classes meet on Thursday evening for supper, then go to the classrooms. All classes close at 8 o'clock. The regular prayer meeting service then begins with song and prayer, but instead of the usual testimony service, Dr. Taylor is teaching Dr. Fosdick's book, "The Meaning of Service," to a group numbering about 300.

Great enthusiasm is manifested in the work and this second year of the Winter's Night College is sure of success.

methods; but we also do not believe that our good work can have ill consequences. Therefore, we will do our duty quite apart from all human prejudices or political calculations; we will only think of one thing—how to help a hungering humanity.

Industrial Building, Hoopeston, Illinois

HERE IS A PICTURE of the industrial building, pupils and workers of the First Baptist Church at Hoopeston. This work was begun five years ago amongst the foreign population, at first on a very small scale in one room of the high school building. It has grown until now the church has its own building. The hall was built two years ago with a five-room modern flat above. Miss Daisy E. Clouse has been the superintendent ever since the organization of the school; it is largely due to her efforts that the work has prospered as it has. The boys have outgrown the women, and have been organized into a scout troop with Willis J. Loyd as leader.

Our Own Folks

Sunny Southern California

By FRANK DURHAM

However limited the vocabulary of the Californian may be, it is sure to contain the word "unusual," a very good word indeed, though it is somewhat stooped-shouldered from overwork. And it must be pressed into service again in giving an account of the meeting of the Southern California Baptist Convention, held January 16 in First Church, Los Angeles. This is the first time a mid-year meeting of the convention has ever been called, for never before have we faced so serious a situation regarding our entire denominational program. And our churches have probably never met together with a deeper sense of responsibility. At the very opening of the first hour the delegates and many others were present to hear the message from the Word, given by Dr. O. P. Gifford as he sketched the achievements of Caleb, a man who "wholly followed the Lord his God," a man who made the most of that great gift of God—an opportunity.

Genl. Secy. W. F. Harper, in speaking on "Why we are here," said it was because the local churches are the authority in the state convention, and have the right to know all the facts; because the gravity of the situation requires that we call upon God; and because the churches desire to do their part. Dr. Harper said the churches of Southern California might have taken the attitude of self-complacency: they might have pointed to the fact that over 95 per cent of our churches are cooperating in the New World Movement; that they have pledged 95 per cent of their apportionment; and that they have given $26 per capita. Instead of that, our churches cannot rest until the great purpose of the denomination is accomplished.

Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, director of the General Board of Promotion, gave a full and frank statement of the situation, declaring it to be a crisis, but asserting that we can meet a crisis in Christ's name, and that it is in reality not financial, but spiritual. Dr. Aitchison mentioned some of the things that have brought the crisis upon us: 1. Criticism that has included too many blanket statements, thus leading many to regard the whole movement with suspicion, whereas wise criticism would have pointed out the particular instances of weakness or error. 2. Last year the payments were made on pledges that were fresh, while this year the facts have not been brought before the people in the same informing way, so much inspiration has been lost. 3. The financial depression of the last few months has slackened the payments. "Yet," said Dr. Aitchison, "there has never been such a record of giving on the part of any of the great denominations; and there are constant and recurring evidences that Christ is leading on, and that the rank and file of the Northern Baptists ring true to the faith."

Dr. F. G. Davies stated that now in Southern California our collections are within 1 per cent of what they were at a similar date last year.

Mrs. M. Grant Edmonds, in discussing the women's share of the plan, explained that the women are not raising the money for the women, but for the whole denomination; and Mrs. A. W. Rider, speaking of the need of enlisting our boys and girls and the W. W. G., emphasized the fact that the task is one, and that all our forces are concentrating upon it.

Both women and the laymen had meetings at the dinner hour to discuss their particular tasks. The women gave special attention to their new undertaking of raising $6,000,000. The men organized a state laymen's council, electing Mr. Robert Scott as president. The purpose of the council is to encourage the organization of the men in each local church, and to secure the cooperation of all laymen in the great undertakings of the denomination.

A deep and quiet spirit of prayer was felt in all the sessions. Rev. E. E. Ford conducted the prayer period in the morning, and Dr. F. O. Belden the period in the afternoon. Certainly our "crisis" will come to bear a different name if such periods of waiting upon God become general and are continued into the coming months.

At the evening session Dr. John M. Dean, the new pastor of Pasadena First Church, addressed the convention, illustrating his message with an account of the relation between Elijah and Elisha, and suggesting the spiritual resources which are ours as we take up the unfinished task.

Dr. James A. Francis, summing up the meaning of our one-day convention, sounded forth Christ's call for a sacrifice such as we have not made before. Dr. Francis then read the resolutions which had been prepared by the committee previously appointed. These, in part, are:

1. That we, the delegates to this convention, reaffirm our faith in and loyalty to the great task of the New World Movement.
2. That we undertake to raise, if possible, in cash, by April 30, $606,000; said amount representing the amount $286,000 then due in pledges already made, plus an additional sum of $320,000.
3. That we urge every church in the convention, irrespective of whether it has previously subscribed its full quota or not, to make a new and sustained effort to reach in an adequate way every person within its membership; and also to present intelligently the claims of this movement to every new member coming into the church.
4. Recognizing that the present crisis is such that nothing short of a real sacrifice will meet the conditions of this tremendous hour, we ask our people, in making their gifts, to think upon a new plane higher than we have before.
5. We recommend that an Easter offering be received in every department of every church, after very careful preparation and instruction.
6. That we send a suitable message embodying the substance of these resolutions to every state promotion director within the bounds of the N. B. C. suggesting the advisability of calling a special session of each state convention, in order that the churches of every state may cooperate in a convention-wide movement.

So our special session of the convention closed, having tightened our grip on the source of power, and strengthened our loyalty to the cause we love, and deepened our devotion to the One we follow.

Los Angeles.

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. COON

Nebraska Baptists are just now making a united effort to meet the financial crisis. The state is divided into a score of districts in each of which a pastor is appointed to visit and press upon the churches the necessity of making increased pledges for the national work or paying promptly pledges already made. Good results are promised from these efforts.

Missionary Study Classes

In many churches new interest has come to the mid-week devotional meeting. This is the plan for that service: 6:00 to 6:30, simple fellowship supper; 6:30 to 7:00, social program; 7:00 to 7:15, pageants or dialogues; 7:15 to 8:00, mission study in groups with topics to suit the different classes, old and young; 8:00 to 8:30, devotional meeting for all; 8:30 choir practice, committee meeting, etc. This plan is to last six weeks. Its variety and character is calling in many not regular attendants at the mid-week meeting. Try it.

Grand Island College

For ten years, or more, we have been calling this "the best asset of Nebraska Baptists." Though rather questioned formerly we are glad others are now thinking our way. The very location of the school gives it ideal opportunity. North, east, or south it is nearly 400 miles distant from any Baptist college; while west we must go to the Pacific slope to find a regular denominational college. For the first time in its history, we believe, it enrolls 100 in the college classes. May it keep steadily in mind the true purposes of a college. Too often today the tendency is strong to emphasize the incidental and minimize the fundamental. A critical writer thus puts it: "The doer rather than the thinker is the hero of the college of today. Unfortunately brains do not count as much as legs." The present growing condition and the present administration of our college point to large development.

Called Higher

A few weeks ago the wife of one of our active pastors was suddenly called from earthly service, Mrs. B. F. Farrar, of Wellfleet. Now we must mention the going to the better home of Mrs. Frieda Peterson Jackson, wife of Rev. E. H. Jackson, of Gibbon, Jan. 19, 1922. She had enjoyed unusual privileges of preparation for life; a graduate of the high school, of Grand Island College, some postgraduate work and a year of study and travel in Europe with her husband and brother. Mr. Jackson has been pastor at Dell Rapids, S. D., Stromsburg, Grand Island and Gibbon, Nebr., where Mrs. Jackson is held in warm esteem by many friends. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon in Gibbon, conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. George Sutherland and the local pastors. The community, the church, the home have suffered a loss that cannot be expressed. The husband and three children remain.

The Fremont Meeting-house

This was burned Sunday morning, Jan. 22, before the hour of service, a passerby announcing it when too late to prevent its total destruction. The loss is $35,000 with insurance of $15,000. It is supposed the fire originated near the furnace. In zero weather supervision of trustees and faithfulness of janitor are very important. From a recent daily we learn the church is planning to rebuild at once.

Merited Approval

Miss Clara F. Cooper, principal of Webster school, Omaha, has just finished thirty-six years of continuous instruction in that city. An Omaha daily in an editorial makes favorable mention of "the number of men and women risen to prominence who have been pupils of Miss Cooper during this generation of work." The interesting thing seems to be that her permanency of service there is an element of efficiency. We wonder if permanency in the pastorate, so similar to that of the teacher in influence, would not secure greater results for good. In fact, we do not wonder at all. Must churches and ministers go on "at this poor dying rate" with pastorate averages twenty-two months? Shall the words of the great Teacher and great Preacher always be true: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light"?

Revival Notes

At Scotts Bluff over thirty have recently joined the church. The pastor, J. S. Bunch, and people have a mind to work. In the church at Hastings baptisms are occurring nearly every Sunday. The churches of the city are uniting in evangelistic services. T. S. Kesterson is pastor at New England and Herman, rural fields, where there are frequent baptisms. Rev. Harry Wolcott has begun constructive work at Smithfield and neighborhood adjoining. May he duplicate the good work done at Sumner during thirteen years pastorate, a type of work needed on many fields. Sumner is at present well supplied by Rev. E. E. Barkay, of Grand Island College. New members moving in have added to the force of workers. At Wahoo Pastor A. M. Horan and people are alive to needs and opportunities. Conversions are occurring and special meetings are planned. The First and other Omaha churches have received additions, the result of the Gypsy Smith meeting. This evangelist reminds one of the work of D. L. Moody, orderly and solid. The Calvary Church is making special efforts to bring into church fellowship many of the congregation. Olivet is now in shape to start the building enterprise with the promised help of the Home Missionary Society. Baptisms at the Immanuel Church seem the beginning of large ingathering in the months following. Seven were recently baptized at the Grace Church. Special appeals are being made to bring in non-church goers. Trinity is pushing an aggressive evangelistic campaign during the winter months. Congregations are taxing the capacity of the church at Benson. A new building is needed and hoped for in the coming year. Twenty-six have been added to the church recently, nine by baptism. Dr. Elmore has just finished three years as pastor of First Church of Lincoln, during which time 380 have united with the church, a net gain of 246. A strong program is announced for the future. Rev. H. G. Smith finds a responsive membership in the East Lincoln Church. There has been almost ideal growth since the organization; its opportunity is great. Pastor F. W. Ainslie is leading an efficient force at the Lincoln Temple Church. A new meeting house is its pressing need.

Nebraska to Illinois

Some of our good pastors are making this change. Rev. R. B. Favoright moved from Fremont to Jerseyville, Ill., a while ago. A result of special meetings led by Dr. L. D. Lamkin is 93 additional members, the majority by baptism. Now Rev. R. H. Pratt leaves Wayne becoming pastor at Carroll, Ill., a strong church in a college town. Both of these brethren were members of the state board. Their going occasions general regret.

Wisconsin News and Notes

Eau Claire Association

Pastor C. E. O'Beirne, who has an entire county for his parish covering several preaching points, has recently received about thirty persons into the church at Knapp. A few months ago the membership had fallen to only five, and the church was thinking of disbanding. It now goes forward with courage.

A special committee is planning for special simultaneous evangelistic meetings among the churches of the association during this spring.

At Bethel Church, of Eau Claire, pastor J. W. Bell is busy. A recent meeting brought in a dozen members; a young people's society was recently organized; and efforts are being made to bring up the missionary interest and offerings.

Pastor E. R. MacKinney, of First Church, at Eau Claire, steadily pushes things along. A new manual and directory has recently been put out; new members are being received; the educational departments of the church are being pushed forward; and special sermons are being preached by the pastor. On Nov. 15, friends and members of the church presented the pastor with a fine Hampden watch, it being the fourth anniversary of his pastorate. At Christmas a check for $100 made the pastor's heart glad.

Preaching to Farmers

Pastor H. E. Mansfield, of Wild Rose and Saxville, has recently given a series of sermons to the farmers of his parish, on such topics as, "The Farmer, Peasant or Prince," "The Farmer's Capital—Soil" and others on seed, livestock, homes, family, community and religious life. These sermons have attracted large congregations and the pastor writes, "I never preached more effectively on the authority of God than I did Sunday night, though of course the sermon was agricultural in its atmosphere, instead of urban." To make a long story short a group of men approached Mr. Mansfield with the proposition of a farmer's institute, to be organized in connection with the church. The church is to be the center of the community life from now on. Pastor Mansfield is happy in his work as a preacher to farmers.

Lacrosse Anniversary

On Jan. 22, the First Church of Lacrosse, celebrated its seventieth anniversary. The services continued for three days. Dr. A. LeGrand gave the anniversary sermon, on Sunday morning, using as his text the words, "In the name of the Lord we will set up our banner," the same text which was used on the Sunday the church was organized. At night a pageant representing the seven decades of the church was given, and the costumes were the actual costumes worn during those decades and borrowed for the occasion.

The church began its membership with fourteen members, and at present has 282 members. It gave one of its pastors, Rev. W. S. Sweet, to the missionary fields, and he was the one who organized Wayland Academy at Hang Chow, China. It has a modern departmental Sunday school; an energetic missionary spirit; and three life service recruits. Its program calls for a new edifice within five years, and a membership of one thousand members. Pastor W. S. Stewart, is on his second year, and has done a wonderful work with these people.

Racine Annual Meeting

The First Church, of Racine, recently held its annual meeting. A number of matters of supreme importance were brought before the church. The resignation of Dr. Henry Clark which had been refused by the church, was at his urgent request accepted. He has made no plans for the future. A committee has been appointed to find his successor, but it intends to do the seeking, and hopes to find the man for this important church, considered the best church of our denomination in Wisconsin. The church has pledged about 80 per cent of its New World Movement quota, and keeps its pledges paid up as well as can be expected. It expects to finish the job before the five year period is up.

Other Items

Rev. W. C. Osborn has been called to the pastorate of the church at Bangor. Both pastor and people seem to be happy in the new relationship.

Dr. D. W. Hulbert is supplying the church at Beaver Dam until a pastor can be located. This is a strategic field and only a man of vision is desired by both the church and the academy.

Rev. I. E. Bill, of Beloit, has just issued a book from the Judson Press on "Constructive Evangelism." Every pastor interested in evangelism should read this book, as Mr. Bill takes a very sane view of the type of work to be done in our churches.

Pastor Kelley, of Delavan, assisted Pastor Drake, of Waukesha, in a weekend meeting recently. The results were far-reaching in their effects.

Detroit Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

Dr. John Y. Aitchison visited Detroit on Saturday, Jan. 21, and remained over the Sabbath occupying the pulpit of the Woodward Avenue Church in the morning and of the First Church in the evening. Although his coming was on very short notice, on Saturday evening there was a representative body of pastors, laymen and women to greet him at the Woodward Avenue Church. Dr. Aitchison presented the facts as to our denominational financial crisis in a very effective manner, after which a hearty vote of confidence and support was taken, both as to the payment on old-time pledges and a sincere determination to do everything possible on the new objectives of the present year.

The Detroit Baptist Bulletin, a mimeographed letter, sent out weekly from the educational department of the Detroit Baptist Union to pastors, Sunday-school superintendents and others, is creating quite remarkable interest, especially among the Bible Schools. Here is the relative showing of the schools on a recent Sunday in actual attendance, although several schools did not get their reports in in time to be included in the list: Temple, 1,005; Woodward Avenue, 930; Highland Park, 506; First, 504; Birkett Memorial, 459; Jefferson, 378; Immanuel, 287; Maranatha, 276; Springwells, 257; Hudson Avenue, 252; Ebenezer, 242; Conley Memorial, 240; Stanton Park, 217; First German, 214; Burns Avenue, 211; Warren Avenue, 209; Ferndale, 169; Second Roumanian, 162; Scotten Avenue, 160; Polish, 153; Calvary, 140; Wyandotte, 114; Second German, 90; Monnier, 56; First Hungarian, 55; Swedish, 50; Bohemian, 30; Serbo-Croatian, 29; Ford Mission, 13.

Temple Church leads. Some one asked a leading member, "How do you do it?" "Well, there is our pastor, Rev. Llewellyn Brown, he is always on the job. Then there is his assistant, Magnus Burgess, who for several years headed our state Sunday-school work and last, and by no means least, is Charles T. Kingston, the superintendent. He is a big business man who carries the same wisdom and zeal into the Sunday-school work." Backing them all up is a wonderful corps of teachers, a fine plant in a choice residential district. Temple Church is a consolidation of the Grand River and Fourteenth Avenue churches.

Pastor Steinkraus, of Scotten Avenue Church, has baptized twenty-three since the two weeks of special meetings in December and others will follow. On Feb. 7 a reception to members received during the present pastorate will be given. The church building has recently been greatly improved by workmen.

For many years it has been the wonder of visiting and even local Baptists why the Birmingham Church was located in such an out-of-the-way place. Well, it cannot be said much longer because a new site has already been purchased in a strategic location and recently the Bible school evidenced its interest in the new venture by contributing $1,000 in one day. Rev. Peter MacKay is the pastor. Birmingham is now in the area of the Detroit Baptist Union. It is a beautiful residential suburb and growing rapidly.

Rev. H. H. Ford has recently held a series of meetings at Wyandotte where over twenty confessions were made. Rev. W. F. B. Brown is pastor. Brother Ford is now leading Bethel Church in special meetings.

Notwithstanding several of our local churches are laboring under recent building obligations and still others are building or getting ready to build, which operations are outside the New World Movement budget, yet all these churches are endeavoring to be loyal to the larger work of our denomination.

Immanuel Church, Fort St., West, under the leadership of Pastor Walter J.

Meade, has just closed the best year in its history; forty-six members were received, most of these by baptism. Financial reports from the various departments were most gratifying, with a balance in each treasury, showing $8,500 raised from all sources, of which $2,000 was for benevolences. The Bible school also had a record year, the average attendance being near the 300 mark. The school gave $1,000 for the work at home and abroad. Rev. and Mrs. Meade were generously remembered by the congregation at Christmas. Remembering that Immanuel is located in an industrial district and also what 1921 was as a business year, the showing is most encouraging.

ing. Brother Mead has been pastor of Immanuel Church nearly three years.

Mt. Clemens is now within the metropolitan area of the Detroit Baptist Union. The Gilbert Memorial Church held its annual meeting Jan. 4 with a six o'clock dinner. It was a happy occasion. The financial reports showed $5,776.50 raised during the past year; a gain in the Bible school of 89 per cent and a net gain in the church membership of fifty-three. The pastor, Rev. E. Bond Griffith was given an increase in salary and his good wife a beautiful evidence of love and appreciation. The Sunday school is calling for larger equipment and plans are being laid to that end.

His expert knowledge of church architecture enabled him to render a valuable contribution to these churches which are planning to erect new buildings at an early date.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

JEFFERSON AVENUE CHURCH, Los Angeles, has adopted a 1922 platform to cover the following: An adequate church building; a Bible class to meet once a week; an evangelistic campaign before Easter; a goal of 100 new members; a daily vacation Bible school during the summer; a subdivision of the church roll, making deacons and deaconesses responsible for the attendance of certain members; appointment of a Welcoming Committee; more emphasis on music; line up members to boost the Sunday school; organization of a brotherhood (already started); a Boy Scout organization; every member to boost the church and never say anything hurtful concerning it. February 7 was the date set for a great mass meeting of the church with a view to making plans for new church building adequate to the needs of the field.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING of First Church, of Selma, was held in the new tabernacle the evening of Jan. 4. During the year a total of $19,550.23 was raised by the church for general expenses and missionary work. $10,796.31 has been paid to the New World Movement out of a total pledge of $35,848.49. San Francisco Bay Association

The annual institute and quarterly of the San Francisco Bay Association of B. Y. P. U. was held January 13-15, at the Twenty-third Avenue Church of Oakland, Calif. There were 225 registrations and interest and enthusiasm ran high at every session. All the addresses and conferences hinged on the keynote of the institute, "Life," and were very impressive. At the middle of the long afternoon program on Saturday, members of the Service Legion of Oakland First Church furnished tea and wafers which brightened the spirits of all and better prepared them for the remaining conferences.

Two hundred and ten young people attended the "stunt supper" and the original, comic stunts staged by some of the unions were among the best ever witnessed in Northern California. The Pageant which followed depicting the origin, growth and development of the B. Y. P. U. of A., was educational throughout and was given by sixty-five of the young people under the direction of the author, Mrs. M. L. Thomas. This was the first association to present this pageant since its original presentation at Asilomar last August at the Northern California B. Y. P. U. assembly.

The following officers were elected for the year 1922: President, Harold K. Langdon, Oakland (re-elected); five vice-presidents, C. D. Moore of San Pablo, Irene Reid and E. J. Wooley of Oakland, Oliver Dawson and Edith McKircher of San Francisco; recording secretary, Harriet Holmes, Oakland; corresponding secretary, Harold Ring, Oakland; treasurer, Lawrence Taylor, Alameda; intermediate superintendent, Mrs. E. J. Wooley, Oakland; junior superintendent, Mrs. Sallie Burgess, San Francisco. In President Langdon's annual report, he recommended "4 E's" as the slogan for the following year—"Education, Evangelism, Enlistment, Extension." The association is complying with the national "standard" by having the territory divided into five districts with a vice-president supervising each. The future is bright with promise and when the time comes for the next annual institute, still more progress will be reported.—Mrs. H. K. Langdon.

The text book for the Thursday session was "With Christ After the Lost."

Dayton Association

The pastors held the January meeting at First Church, Dayton, Jan. 4. It was with regret that the resignation of Pres. Albert Read was accepted. After more than twenty years as pastor of Xenia Church, Bro. Read leaves for Van Wert. Dr. J. B. Slocum, of First Church was made president. Pastor Hall led the devotional service.

Pastor Brandt of Troy finds his work growing. The report of the annual meeting revealed thirty-two new members, four times more given for missions, a good balance in treasury. Four baptized. Special meeting before Easter. Pastor Cosby at Tippecanoe City, finds a little reaction of the strenuous holiday activities. The unemployed situation is affecting his work.

Pastor Copeland closed his first year at Clifton Street and has baptized thirty. Sees a manifestation of spiritual life. Many of his members are out of work. Pastor Fenner of Piqua, is receiving many new members. Baptized thirty-five and received some by letter. He is finding the non-affiliated Baptists in the city. Pastor Bagby, Colorado Ave., baptized three. The churches adopt Wednesday as church day when all organizations will hold their sessions. Pastor Johnson, Linden Ave., is leading his people in a week of prayer. The purpose is to pray—little talking and lecturing, but praying. It is bringing real spiritual life. Received three by letter and two by baptism. Pastor Patt, Sidney, has a standard Sunday school, teacher training and an interesting work among the young people. Pastor Hall, Summit St., received five by letter, two by experience and four by baptism. God has granted a marvelous answer of prayer in healing a child which all medical aid had given up. Pastor Scruby, Haynes St., received one by baptism, one by experience. Twenty-six Bibles were given to scholars who had not missed a Sunday during the year. Pastor Slocum, First, baptized two and received one by letter. The young people are using the group system for meetings. Dr. Slocum presented a soul-stirring paper on the homiletic value of the teaching of Jesus as found in the Synoptic Gospels. Why rummage around in empty mines when material so rich, so abounding is in the Word of God?—PHILIP BAUER.

JAN. 8-15 FIRST CHURCH of Morrill had consecration and enlistment week during which time the pastor, Rev. C. C. Overeem preached eight sermons on "Are You in Touch with Christ?" An evangelist campaign followed Jan. 15-22, the pastor preaching and assisted in the services by Fred T. Elliott, singer, of Effingham. There were nine professions of faith, four of whom have been received for baptism. Two were received by letter. The success attained was a result of the deep interest and cooperation of the church members.

IOWA

CORYDON, a town of 2,000, is experiencing a gracious revival. Baptist, Methodist and Christian churches are cooperating, local pastors are preaching, and the music is in charge of a local dentist. There were eighty conversions one night, mostly high school students. To date there have been about 150 conversions and reconsecrations. Rev. C. W. Fogg is pastor of Corydon Baptist Church and also president of its ministerial alliance.

REV. C. G. WRIGHT, of Mt. Ayr, has accepted a call to the church at Manchester.

MICHIGAN

SUNDAY, DEC. 18, was a red-letter day for the Ganges Church. A re-dedication service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Priest, and the state evangelistic director, Rev. F. L. Currey. A magnificent choir furnished appropriate music and the pastor gave a statement of the work that had been accomplished in the remodeling of the church, providing for class rooms for the Sunday school and the re-decorating of the walls and installing of a new furnace, amounting in all to $1,400, all of which has been practically provided for in pledges and cash, and the pledges are practically paid. This is a great achievement for this little struggling church out in the open country.

REV. A. N. FIELDS OF REED CITY, just closed an evangelistic campaign in Avondale Church with thirty conversions and reconsecrations. Twenty-one have applied for membership, fourteen of whom wish to be baptized. A business meeting was called and an every-member canvas started; a young people's meeting and prayer meeting also started.

BELDING: Congregations and Sunday school continue to increase. Two hundred in Sunday school is the objective. Christmas offering was $30 for European Relief. At a recent Sunday-morning service in response to the pastor's invitation one came to Christ. Two Bible classes are conducted through the week. Several accessions by letter and baptism.

BIRKETT MEMORIAL CHURCH, DETROIT, has been greatly blessed during the past year, and a spirit of cooperation permeates the entire body. The average Sunday-school attendance is 355, with a high-water mark of 535. The year has seen eighty-nine converts, with fifty-four received by letter and experience. Finances are in fine shape. Wednesday, Jan. 3, was the annual meeting and election of officers.

AT HILLSDALE, the College and First Church, united in a simultaneous campaign from Jan. 8 to 22, the services being held in the First Church. Closest harmony and cooperation exist between the pastors of these two churches. There were not many conversions, five boys and girls, and four heads of families, but a great spiritual uplift was realized by the church membership.

FOR SIX WEEKS BEFORE THE HOLIDAYS the Coldwater Church, Rev. C. R. Osborn pastor, conducted a school of missions with an average attendance of 125. Out of this was launched a general program of community service extending over the whole year reaching the country people as well. The dramatization of Bible stories was a feature of the work with the children; also on each of the mid-week evenings were shown stereopticon slides of missionary information and value.

ILLINOIS

RIDGEWOOD CHURCH, Joliet, has been disappointed in that Mr. W. L. Donnelly who was to have taken charge January 9, asked to be released to take a church at South Haven, Mich. Ridgewood church is in need of an evangelistic pastor who is a field worker.

MR. ALBERT P. HALL was ordained at Mt. Vernon, January 16, upon the recommendation of a council convened by Second Church of that city, of which Brother Hall is a member.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS have recently been held in Orion Church, Rev. F. F. Shields, pastor, with Miss Amy Lee Stockton, evangelist, and Mr. A. H. Lovett, soloist. Nineteen members have just been received, thirteen coming by baptism. Others will soon be baptized. The men's Bible class has an enrollment of fifty-five, is a live organization and stands with the church for the best things in the community.

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Belden Avenue Church, Chicago, held Jan. 12, reports from all departments showed progress. One hundred and forty new members have been added since Jan. 11, 1921. The financial condition of the church has never been so encouraging, the treasury showing that $25,000 was raised from all departments during the year, and a balance on hand of $1,376.78, with no liabilities. The New World Movement pledges amount to $8,000, of which $7,965 has been met. There have been a few arrearages in payment of original pledges, but new members have made up this deficiency. Another cheerful note was sounded in the Sunday-school report, which showed a weekly average attendance for 1921 of more than 100 over that of 1920. A committee of twenty, with the pastor, Dr. J. W. Hoyt, as chairman, was appointed to consider plans for modernizing and enlarging the church plant, a report to be brought back to the church within sixty days. An increased budget has been subscribed, and this year a good part of the increase will be used for the redecoration of the church auditorium. The spirit of Belden is shown by the unanimous adoption of the following: A resolution to accept the confession of faith, which was adopted by the Fundamentals Conference at Des Moines, in June, 1921. Delegates from Belden to the Northern Baptist Convention were instructed to vote according to this action. The second action sustained the Home Mission Society in accepting the gift with creedal conditions.

REV. WM. L. SANDERS, who had been preaching for over fifty years, over twenty-five of these in Cambridge, Moline, Aurora and Kankakee, died at his home in Bloomington Jan. 26 at the age of seventy-six. Funeral services were held in First Church of Bloomington, the sermon being preached by the pastor, Dr. J. L. Jackson, assisted by Rev. F. E. Vernon, of First Presbyterian Church, and Rev. F. L. Breen, of the Congregational Church.

REV. JUDSON MACINTOSH closed his work with Roseland Church, Chicago, Sunday, Jan. 29, to accept a call to First Church of Plainwell, Mich. His pastorate at Roseland has been one of faithful service. Both Mr. and Mrs. Macintosh have given themselves to the field wholeheartedly. In his letter to the Roseland Church, Mr. Macintosh said: "The Plainwell Church has had a long record of steady growth and usefulness and a promising future. It has had only two pastors in fifty-seven years, one being pastor fifty years. It is an opportunity coming to me for which my life has been prepared—to help reach the fields so carefully sown, and now 'white unto harvest.' The call was entirely unsolicited." Mr. and Mrs. Macintosh begin their work in their new field Feb. 10.

OLNEY CHURCH, Rev. L. D. Lamkin, pastor, is having enthusiastic revival services. The meetings were to have closed at the end of two weeks, but the interest was so keen that it was decided to continue them. The spiritual life of the church has been awakened and many have been saved. The pastor is doing his own preaching with no outside help.

NEW YORK

A NEW TRIUMPH OF THE GOSPEL has been realized at Strong Place Church, Brooklyn, in the conversion of a number of Italians, formerly Roman Catholics. Strong Place Church was founded over seventy years ago in what was then a fashionable section of the city, but the church is now surrounded by 100,000 Italians. In the midst of these dwells the American pastor, Rev. Floyd H. Adams, with his family. An industrial school, daily kindergarten, playground, daily vacation Bible school, community night, a gymnasium, troops of boy and girl scouts and various other neighborhood activities have prepared the way for the gospel message. The Italian pastor, Rev. Louis Zibelli, has conducted classes in English, American history and civics and thus opened an avenue of approach. Last summer he conducted gospel services on the street. The attendance was good and many accepted the invitation to come to the church. Twenty-six have been baptized, and as many more are receiving instruction for baptism. This beautiful Gothic structure was once thronged with native Americans. It will henceforth be thronged with new Americans.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE First Church, Jamestown, was held Jan. 9. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Guy L. Brown, reported more than 1,200 calls, forty-eight weddings and twenty-six funeral services. The church has expended for all purposes during the year more than $30,000, $15,000 of which was for benevolences, the larger portion of this amount going to the New World Movement. The object of the church is "as much raised for world-wide kingdom extension as for current expenses." There was a gain during the year of sixty-six persons, making the present membership 954. Every department of the church is thoroughly organized and busily engaged in the Master's work. A tithe band of more than 100 members has been organized, with new additions almost weekly; a personal worker's league, operating through twenty-six inner circles, promises well for the evangelistic work. Congregations are large, the church auditorium not having capacity to accommodate the evening crowds, frequently hundreds of people are turned away.

NEW JERSEY

AT A MEETING OF THE PERMANENT Council of the Camden Association held in the First Church, Camden, Jan. 23, for the purpose of considering the advisability of recognizing the Fairview Community Church of Camden, and of receiving said church into the fellowship of the Camden Association, the Council voted to recognize the Fairview Community Church, as a Baptist church, and to recommend that said church be received into the fellowship of the Camden Association. Recognition services will be held at the Fairview Church, Monday evening, Feb. 13, at 8 o'clock. Rev. J. W. Lyell of Camden, Rev. W. S. Booth of Collingswood, and Rev. F. N. Martin the pastor of the Fairview Church are the committee of arrangements. A good field for the new church, led by a devoted and energetic pastor.

RHODE ISLAND

REV. F. A. AGAR has been in Providence and vicinity doing intensive training work among our church officers and workers. He has spoken in Central, First, Calvary, Broadway, Providence, and the First Pawtucket. All the churches of Providence and vicinity have sent their officers to these conferences and already there is a demand for more of the kind of training which Dr. Agar gives. There are plans for classes in which special training will be given by Dr. Agar.

REV. WILLIAM LAUGHTON, formerly pastor of Oak Bluff's Church, accepted a call to Crompton Church, and began his pastorate Jan. 29.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REV. ORRIN ROBBINS HUNT was ordained to the Christian ministry fifty years ago. The Baptist church at Lebanon held a special service Jan. 19, in recognition of this event in his life. On the previous Sunday Mr. Hunt gave to a large audience reminiscences of his fifty years in the ministry. He held two pastorates in New Hampshire, at Rumney and Plainfield. While pastor at Rumney he served for four years on the board of trustees of the convention. Since the close of his pastorate at Plainfield he has not been engaged in active pastoral work but has occasionally supplied pulpits. All the churches which Mr. Hunt had served as pastor sent letters to this anniversary occasion. At the recognition service jubilee greetings were given by the pastor of the Lebanon church, Rev. C. L. Chamberlain; by Mr. C. E. Clough, a prominent business man and member of the church; by Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the state convention; and by pastors of the local churches. The address of the evening was given by Pres. George E. Horr, of the Newton Theological Institution, who spoke on, "The Function of the Christian Minister." Arrangements for the service and reception were made by Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Chamberlain and were well carried out.

UNDER PASTOR W. G. HUBBARD the church at Meriden is taking on new life. A Christian Endeavor Society was formed in the fall and is having a wholesome effect upon church work. On two Sundays the audience of the Congregational church met with the Baptist church because of the illness of its pastor. Judging from generous Christmas gifts and efforts to install modern comforts in the parsonage, Mr. Hubbard is in favor with his people.

REV. C. M. MILLER has served Salem church less than a year but already has met with encouraging results on this difficult field. Fifteen new members have been received, seven of these by baptism.

MAINE

PITTSFIELD: Pastor Converse is providing for his people a number of Sunday evening addresses giving the application of Christianity to the need and conditions of the time. Addresses will be given by teachers in the Maine Central Institute, business and professional men and the pastor. Secretaries Henderson and Whittemore have already had part in these programs. A volunteer choir and orchestra have prominent part in the services. Maine Central Institute is having a very prosperous year under Principal Verrill. Over 250 pupils have been enrolled and high standards of work are maintained. The school renders a very important service to a large group of towns that could not afford high schools of their own; it also serves as the high school of Pittsfield, giving to that thriving community a quality of work that it could not attain otherwise.

VERMONT

FRIENDS OF REV. JOSEPH S. BROWN for many years the faithful and efficient pastor at Manchester, will regret to learn that upon the advice of his physician he has tendered his resignation to take effect June 1. The Manchester Church is arranging to care for the pulpit and pay Pastor Brown his salary in full the same as if he were at work. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have gone to Portland, Maine, to visit Mr. Brown's brother, who is a physician. Here he hopes by rest and medical treatment soon to regain his health and strength.

REV. E. W. JOHNSON, pastor at East Wallingford, has a mimeograph which he uses to send a monthly letter to members of the church and congregation, and with the letter his subjects for the Sunday and mid-week meetings. Pastor Johnson is also holding mid-week meetings at Cuttingsville, five miles from his church.

I have heard sweet
Chimes a-ringing.

But the sweetest, purest,

Dringing angel faces

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

His extraordinary vitality, his defiance of the years that make most of us heavy-footed, his teeming activities, his undiminished mental power, and keen relish of life make his passing difficult to realize and fraught with deep sorrow.

Prof. Beman was born at Southington, Conn., May 28, 1850, but as youth and man has spent most of his life in the city he has honored as a citizen.

As a young man he was fortunate in not being pampered by plenty, for ambition dies on a diet of dainties, but he proved the truth that hard schools teach great lessons.

Prof. Beman attended school at Valparaiso, Ind., and entered the University of Michigan in 1866, from which he was graduated in 1870, when barely twenty years old. After serving for a year as instructor in Greek and mathematics in Kalamazoo College, he returned to Ann Arbor to become an instructor in mathematics in the University of Michigan. And during his first two years as instructor he earned the degree of Master of Arts.

Marked ability in his chosen field soon gained for him merited promotion, and since 1887 he has been head of the department of mathematics, and for more than fifty years (a period of continuous service unequalled by any man on the faculty of Michigan) he has given time, talent, and untiring devotion to this work.

In addition to his comprehensive work in the class-room, Prof. Beman found time to make valuable contributions to both foreign and American journals, devoted to the subject of mathematics. He gained a national reputation as a writer on the history and teaching of mathematics and was joint author of a number of text books, widely used.

He was a member of the American mathematical society, the London mathematical society, Deutsche Mathematiker Vereinigung, Circolo Matematico di Palermo, and of Phi Beta Kappa.

For many years he has been prominently identified with civic matters of the city, always promoting the public welfare. He was last year a member of a commission to draw up a new charter and devoted much time and thought in preparing a document likely to benefit the community. It was to him a righteous cause and that a majority of voters failed to establish the work of the commission was a bitter disappointment.

Prof. Beman was always deeply interested in the First Church of Ann Arbor and in the affairs of the denomination everywhere. For fifteen years he was treasurer of the Michigan Baptist Convention; for six years a member of the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention; and for a long period he has been a trustee of Kalamazoo College, which, in 1908, conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D.

He was married on Sept. 4, 1877, to Helen Elizabeth Burton, daughter of Dr. N. S. Burton, for a number of years pastor of the First Church of Ann Arbor. His widow and two children, Mrs. Winifred Lange and Ralph Beman, both of Cleveland, survive him.

Last summer Prof. Beman suffered an attack of acute arthritis. Serious complications developed in November, which resulted in his sudden and unexpected death.

It is not easy to phrase an appreciation of Mr. Beman, whose work was his life and is more eloquent than the highest eulogium. In the final analysis, what one does that makes mankind wiser and better is immortal. Mr. Beman was so modest about his own attainments that fulsome praise would be far from his liking, but a few words, prompted by the esteem and affection of an old student, of whose reunions during a period of 44 years he has been a pleasant part, may be pardoned.

Prof. Beman was a scholar and a Christian gentleman. "He was greater than he that taketh a city," for with domineering hand he ruled his own spirit, so that he was always found treading life's highways.

He possessed a symmetrical balance of the cardinal virtues and was gifted with a clairvoyance of mind that saw directly to the point. Few have been so brilliantly equipped for educational work and none could have used his gifts more industriously.

A profound study of the Bible led him into a broad understanding of eternal truths, so that he lived above dogma and creed, and was bound by no narrow theory or man-made interpretation.

Though given to the calculation tables of an exact science, Prof. Beman did not demand that the test tube, the microscope, or philosophy prove all things, for with the telescope of an unflinching faith he saw beyond the mists that obscure the promise of hereafter.

Building a Successful Sunday School, by P. E. Burroughs. New York; F. H. Revell Co. $1.50 net

This is a book of methods for a large Sunday school. Written out of a large experience and covering all topics from the organization of the school to such matters as building, advertising, teacher training, special days, and the like, it is certain to be suggestive to all workers.

Vigils, by Aline Kilmer. New York; George H. Doran Co., $1.25 net.

A booklet of simply-worded poems, entrancing in their clarity of utterance and simplicity of thought. Most of the lyrics are cast in the older, more conservative meters, only one or two approaching the metrical freedom of the new schools of poetry. These are poems of personal experience not of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox school—rather a personal reflex to what has gone and is yet to be in the cycle of a lifetime full of great human experiences. The wife of the late Joyce Kilmer has stepped out from the cape of her poet-husband; she is now able to stand on her own feet. A few more such volumes and a new voice will sound in American poetry.

The Gift of Tongues, by Rev. Alexander Mackie. New York; George H. Doran Co.

The contents of this volume consist of historical sketches of religious groups which appear in different ages of Christian history characterized by abnormalities and extravagances of doctrine and life in forms of worship and conduct. Beginning with the "Gift of Tongues" in Apostolic times, he finds traces of the phenomena in the patristic ages and in feudal times, also in the Camisards, Shakers, Irvingites, Mormons and other types even to the present day. The gift of tongues, ancient or modern, he considers only one symptom of a general condition. Kin to the tongue-gift have been the "jerks," the "falling," "trances," miracle healing and various other forms of religious self-intoxication. The author pronounces those phenomena often frauds as in the case of Joe Smith and others. When not "framed up" he attributes them to pathological conditions of mind or body. The lives of the leaders he discovers to have been usually psychically or physiologically perverted until they were more or less degenerates. Social irregularities and immoralities have been often associated with those frenzies. Historic illustrations are quoted in support of the averment. Objections will be made to the implication of the author that the gift of tongues of Apostolic days is to be classed with the varying types that have appeared in all ages. The volume closes with this sentence: "Christendom has waited long and patiently to see whether this thing—the 'gift of tongues'—is of God. It is of sickness, of poverty, of disease, of crime. It is not of God." The book is of fascinating interest aside from its objective.

The Hall and the Grange; Peter Binney, by Archibald Marshall. New York; Dodd, Mead & Co., $2.00 per vol.

For several years this author has been winning an ever-increasing public to a recognition of his place in the field of English letters. Such men as William Lyon Phelps and William Dean Howell have accorded him welcome as a worthy successor to the great novelists of the past century, and have pointed out his skill in character-portrayal and his Trollope-like faculty for creating intense interest in every-day doings of ordinary people. His works depend more upon a shrewd analysis and presentation of the foibles of all of us than upon any particular dramatic thrills of situation or climax. The two novels listed bear out these statements. The first is the more important; the second, a youthful work freshly reissued, is perhaps of more general interest. Both are books to be re-read.

"It Is to Laugh"

At the recent session of the Indiana Conference, Bishop E. H. Hughes was reading the appointments. The church was crowded. Interest and expectation intense. Silence was ominous.

An elderly brother on the front seat produced a sneeze that clashed upon the decorum of the moment.

The bishop stopped, took off his glasses, looking at the brother with a twinkle in his eye, said, "My brother, I want you to know these appointments are not to be sneezed at."—Western Christian Advocate.

Jack and Mary had just been to the grown-ups' church for the first time. A day or two afterward they were found in the nursery whispering audibly to each other:

"What are you children doing?" their nurse asked.

"We're playing church," replied Jack.

"But you shouldn't whisper in church," admonished nurse.

"O," spoke up Mary, "we're the choir."

—Exchange.

The other day Roger Babson, the statistician, sent out to his customers a leaflet entitled "Essentials of Business Success." They consisted entirely of the Ten Commandments plus the "New Commandment" given by Jesus. Among the letters of acknowledgment that soon poured in from all parts of the country was one from a Western business man whose enthusiasm could hardly be restrained. "I have never seen," he wrote, "such a fine statement of the essentials for success. Where did you get it?" That beats the famous story of the Glasgow merchants, one of whom wagered that the other could not say the Lord's Prayer; and when the man challenged began to quote, "Now I lay me down to sleep," the challenger said, "All right. Here's your money."—Congregationalist.

A correspondent sends us the following little anecdote illustrating Lloyd George's ready wit. On one occasion when he was to address a meeting in South Wales, the chairman, thinking to be funny at the speaker's expense, said in introducing him, "I had heard so much about Mr. Lloyd George that I naturally expected to meet a big man in every sense; but, as you can see, he is very small in stature."

Lloyd George arose. "I am grieved to find," he said, "that your chairman is disappointed in my size, but this is owing to the way you have here of measuring a man. In North Wales we measure a man from his chin up, but you evidently measure him from his chin down."

After that the chairman made no more personal remarks.—Boston Transcript.

Obituary

EMILY CLARK STEVENS

Died, January 21, at her home in Granville, Ohio, Emily Clarke Stevens, aged 82, widow of the late George E. Stevens, long resident in Cincinnati and a member of the 9th St. Church. Mrs. Stevens was born in Springfield, Ohio, and always remained a member of the Congregationalist Church there. She leaves two daughters, Caroline Clarke Stevens, of Granville, Ohio, and Mrs. Franklin W. Sweet, wife of the pastor of the Baptist Church of the Master, Cleveland, Ohio.

MARY SUSAN WILLIS

Mrs. Mary Susan Willis, wife of Rev. George T. Willis, died at Hoopeston, Ill., December 23, 1921. She was born in Todd County, Kentucky, June 15, 1842. Her father dying in her childhood, the mother later removed to Indiana, settling near Crawfordsville. Mary graduated from the Ladoga Female Seminary, near Crawfordsville, in 1861, completing a four years' course of study. On December 31, 1863, she was united in marriage with Rev. George Thomas Willis. Ten children were born to them, of whom eight survive. From 1873 to 1886 their residence was at Hoopeston, from 1886 to 1901 in Nebraska, at Gibbon, Kearney and vicinity, and for the twenty years thereafter again at Hoopeston. She and her husband were among those uniting to form the First Baptist Church of Hoopeston, in August 1873.

Her life was largely devoted to teaching, a calling for which, besides an alert and well-trained mind, she had the special gifts of sympathy, kindness and patience. In earlier years Mr. Willis held pastorates in Missouri and Illinois and later in Nebraska. In every place Mrs. Willis' ability was recognized and her services sought for the public schools. She taught for many years at Hoopeston. Her fine character, no less than her teaching skill, left its impress upon hundreds of young people.

The range of her Christian interests was wide. Uniting with the Baptist church at Crawfordsville in 1856, at the age of fourteen, her whole life was nobly consistent with her early ideals. She was an efficient counsellor and teacher in the Sunday school, a vital and enthusiastic force in women's missionary work, always well informed on denominational affairs, a loyal supporter of the W. C. T. U. and kindred organizations. She loved to persuade young people "concerning Jesus." As wife, mother, teacher, friend and neighbor, she left a sacred and enduring influence.

Funeral services were conducted in the auditorium of her own church at Hoopeston, on December 30, by Rev. Howard R. Chapman of Ann Arbor, Michigan, an old friend, and Rev. J. R. Very, her pastor.

Word has been received of the death of Rev. G. T. Willis, the husband, on January 19, at Hoopeston.

The Refugee

By JEANNETTE EMBRICH

SHE sat crouched on the ground in the refugee camp at Malatia in the year of our Lord 1920, one of that great huddled mass of misery. Around her women moaned or whispered to each other their stories as if the horror and shame of it all might not be spoken aloud. The loose, ragged garment drawn closely around her showed the youthful lines of her body, but the face was lined and old with suffering. It was the eyes of the Armenian girl that held one; great black depths that had in them not only pain but wonder and joy such as the eyes of Mary must have held as she looked upon her Christ.

Near her a baby wailed and the girl reached over and gathered it into her arms, wincing with evident pain as her cloak drew across her back.

"Whose child is it?" she asked of the woman beside her.

"I know not. I took it crying from the breast of its mother dead by the road just this side of the spring."

"It will die soon, I think," the girl said quietly as the crying ceased.

"It will be gathered to the breast of God," the woman answered wearily. "There are thousands like this one. Can a mother live without food and still have milk for her child? Rest against me as you hold the little one," she added gently.

The girl shook her head. "I cannot lean—yet," she whispered.

"Were you beaten?" questioned the older woman.

Again came the slow shake of the head and the look of awe in the girl's eyes.

"No," she said softly. "It was given to me to understand the suffering of Christ."

The American nurse coming upon the group a few hours later lifted the little cold body from the arms of the refugee.

"Yours?" she asked.

"No, but I held it as it died." As the girl's face lifted and the relief worker saw the eyes she exclaimed aloud.

"But you are in pain—your sufferings must have been—"

"No," the Armenian girl interrupted softly. "Only it was given to me to know the cross with Christ."

"She is quite mad," muttered the older woman as she listened.

"What do you mean?" asked the American with a quick glance at the hands and the bare feet of the girl. She had looked upon unbelievable things before.

Again came the patient explanation and the mingled look of joy and wonder in the eyes—"It has been given to me to know the cross with Christ."

Taking her hand the nurse lifted her to her feet, searching her clear, dark eyes. There was no madness there, only a questioning wonder.

"Calvary, Christ and the cross," the girl slowly repeated. "You shall see."

Turning, she slipped back the one loose garment she wore and there, branded deep into the flesh of the back, was a perfect cross.

"Tell me about it," the American said, as she drew the covering carefully back into place.

"There is nothing to tell—only—not all at once was my cross given me. Each day for one week the Moslems of my village said to me, 'Mohammed or Christ?' and I had but one answer—'Christ' and each day there was added a piece to my cross."

"The last day they said to me, 'Mohammed and you live—Christ and tomorrow you die,' and I said, 'I shall have died knowing the cross with Christ.' That night some of us escaped, for we had heard that Americans were near and there was hope for us. So great a thing is not given to many," she added simply.

"What is this case?" asked the relief doctor as the nurse brought the refugee in. And the American woman explained it—her eyes reflecting the wonder of the sacrifice that shone in the eyes of the Armenian girl.

"It was given to her to know the cross with Christ."—The Christian Work.

Linfield College

By WILLIAM R. FRERICHS

I.

SIXTY-FIVE years have now passed since Oregon Baptists began to maintain an institution of higher education at McMinnville. This school has for many years been known as McMinnville College, whose high ideals of scholarship and spiritual attainment are well known throughout the country, and whose graduates are exerting a helpful influence in many parts of the world today. The history of McMinnville College abounds with illustrations of noble endeavor, heroic sacrifice, and undaunted purpose. There have been hours of great discouragement; at times the closing of its doors has seemed inevitable, and the persistence of a few faithful, courageous workers has seemed to the world the border line of folly. But the faith of the few has always been honored by Him in whose name and for whose glory the institution was brought into existence. Progress has been made slowly, it is true, but there has been progress all along the line, even during those periods when conditions were most hopeless. Because of the very struggles and obstacles for six long decades, the college has dug down to more solid rock to make firmer the superstructure which is being built at the present time. Within the past eight years the endowment has been raised from a bare $50,000 to above $250,000. During the summer just past a handsome, well-equipped gymnasium has been erected; an older building has been renovated and converted into an adequate science hall, and the other buildings have been repainted and redecorated throughout. All of these improvements greatly cheered the hearts of all who serve and love the institution, and a student body, the largest as far as college enrollment is concerned, entered last fall upon its work with an enthusiasm which has continued to express itself in many ways up to the present time. It is the true "spirit of Old Mac."

God says to us, "You do those things which are plain, and see how easily, how wisely and how benevolently I can direct those that are difficult and to you impossible."—From Life and Letters of Rev. Justin Edwards, by Wm. A. Hallock.

II.

But we shall speak no longer of "Old Mac" or of McMinnville College. Our thoughts are arrested by the experiences and life purposes of two noble lives, of a covenant and the consummation of that covenant. In 1877 a young minister, Rev. George Fisher Linfield, and his bride, Frances Eleanor Ross, entered upon the work of the Christian ministry together, with pastorates at Moline, Ill., and Muscatine, Iowa, until the year 1884, when Mr. Linfield was called to the principalship of Wayland Academy at Beaver Dam, Wis. Mrs. Linfield herself, who before her marriage had been a successful teacher and preceptress in other educational institutions, became one of the instructors in the academy. At that time the Wayland Academy was a struggling school, and both gave themselves with absolute devotion to their new work. Much was accomplished, but after six years of labor there Mr. Linfield was called home; he had laid down his life for the sake of Christian education. Wayland Academy is today a well established school, and on its campus Linfield Hall testifies to the large part which Mr. Linfield had in its success.

During the years of their labor together at Wayland, Mr. and Mrs. Linfield made a covenant that, if the Lord would prosper them, they would some day make a generous contribution to Christian education. Inasmuch as both were drawing salaries it was decided that one year one of them should pay all expenses and that the other should make some investment, and that the next year this plan should be reversed. Under this plan Mr. Linfield invested $2,300 in a lot in Spokane, Wash. Other investments were made by Mrs. Linfield and her father. All of these investments were carefully nurtured by Mrs. Linfield, who later, in order to be with her parents, made Spokane her residence. While here she continued her services as teacher in the Lewis and Clark high school. Although her business interests made large demands upon her time and strength, yet she soon became recognized as one of the most valuable members of the teaching staff. Because of her interest in Christian work and philanthropic enterprises her counsels were highly valued in denominational and other circles, and for many years she was vice-president of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society. With all these responsibilities she kept aglow her interest in Christian education and watched especially the work of President Leonard W. Riley in behalf of McMinnville College.

III.

For many years a friend of our college, she became one of its trustees in 1917. Since that time she has made several trips to the institution, and during her visits she has acquainted herself with every phase of its work, and has become not only a wise counselor to the administrative officers, but a friend as well to every member of the faculty and student body. In the fall of 1921 she manifested in a special manner her devotion in assuming the responsibilities of dean of women, in which capacity she is now serving.

But what had been in her heart all these years and what she had only begun to manifest by her services for our college, she made fully known when at the recent meeting of the board of trustees she announced through President Riley that she purposed to give to the college several pieces of property in Spokane, valued net at about $250,000, on condition that the name of the institution be changed to Linfield College as a memorial to her husband, Rev. George Fisher Linfield. In this way, she felt, she was fulfilling the covenant made by her and her husband many years ago. In great gratitude to her and to God, who had so singularly blessed her life and her labors, the board accepted the magnificent gift and voted unanimously that the institution in the future be known as Linfield College. Fresh from the Field

There will be a meeting of the finance committee of the Northern Baptist Convention in room 105, Hotel La Salle, Chicago, Wednesday, March 8, at 10 a. m.

The First Church, La Crosse, Wis., celebrated its seventieth anniversary January 22-25 with special exercises, including a pageant which portrayed the outstanding events of the seventy years. During the eighteen months of the pastorate of Rev. W. S. Stewart, 100 new members have been added to the church.

In the first two weeks of February Gipsy Smith, Jr., conducted evangelistic meetings with the West End Presbyterian Church, New York City, one of the largest and most aggressive churches on the West Side. The attendance was large, the spiritual life of the members was quickened and many were brought to newness of life. Mr. Smith, since his graduation from Crozer in 1915, has given himself to evangelistic work with eminent success, conducting many large union meetings in the South as well as in the Central and Eastern states. He is a preacher of power, with a warm, heart-appealing message. He possesses much of the charm of his widely-esteemed father, Gipsy Smith, honored throughout England and America. He will break out into song in a sermon or close an appeal with a hymn that will melt all hearts. From New York he goes to the First Presbyterian Church, Lewiston, Pa., from February 19 to March 12; then to the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C., from March 19 to April 2. His subsequent engagements are Albany, Ga., union meetings, April 5-30; Jackson, Ga., city movement, May 3-June 4. After vacation he will conduct a city movement in Seneca, S. C., during September, and in Savannah, Ga., during October.

The Home Mission Society recently appointed Rev. J. R. Inke as its general missionary among the Russians. Mr. Inke's brother is the pastor of the Lettish Baptist Church in Riga, Latvia. Mr. Inke is a graduate of Newton Theological Seminary and for several years he has been in Rio Janeiro as a professor in the theological seminary there. For two years the Home Mission Society has been endeavoring to induce him to come to this country to accept the position of a general missionary among the Russians. At the same time Newton was offering him a fellowship for graduate study and he is now studying there and pursuing a course in Russian at Harvard University while spending a part of his time studying the Russian situation in New England. When he finishes his studies next June he will devote his entire time to the Russian work over the country. Mr. Inke's wife is a Russian of Petrograd and she is of the greatest assistance to him in his work. He also has a command of Portuguese and is in demand among Portuguese churches in this country as a preacher. Mr. Inke is a man of very fine spirit combined with high intellectual attainments and with a fine evangelistic spirit. His field of course will be the entire field of the Home Mission Society in the United States. The Russian work is in great need of a wise and constructive leadership. Bolshevism has taken deep root in our Russian colonies in America and it is startling to learn how many Bolshevistic clubs and "Sunday schools" are organized to disseminate Bolshevistic propaganda in our various large centers of foreign population. Our Russian Baptist brethren are very keenly concerned for this and are eager to stress this work and increase its efficiency as the only means of offsetting this sinister influence.

Rev. W. F. Bostick, formerly pastor at Freeport, Ill., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, has accepted a unanimous call to become pastor of the First Church, La Porte, Ind., and began his work on February 1. During the last four years he has been engaged in boy's welfare work under the Y. M. C. A. and Boy Scout organizations and comes to his new field with special experiences in young people's organization work. He has recently been Boy Scout executive at Oshkosh, Wis., where he doubled the enrolment of the troops and assisted the community in building on Lake Winnebago the finest Boy Scout hut in Wisconsin. The church at La Porte is at once to remodel the parsonage at an expense of $1000.

Dr. C. S. Brown, president, and Dr. A. A. Graham, secretary, of the Lott Carey Foreign Mission Convention, as they said good-bye to Dr. C. L. White, of the Home Mission Society, just before sailing for Liberia and the Transvaal where the Negroes of America maintain flourishing mission stations.

Rev. E. S. Stucker of Ottawa, Kans., spent two weeks recently with the West Park Church, St. Louis, 109 persons coming forward, seventy-seven being received for baptism and fifteen by letters. The evangelist and his song leader, Lee Lewis, will go from a meeting at the First Church, Colorado Springs, Colo., to the First Church, Fort Collins, closing at the latter place March 5.

Rev. Charles A. McAlpine has recently given courses of lectures on Religious Publicity before the students of Rochester and Colgate Theological Seminaries. Both students and neighboring pastors testify to the value of the suggestions given. Practically every phase of religious publicity was covered in a clear, concise and suggestive manner.

The First Church, Dallas, Texas, has added to its equipment a wireless outfit so that Dr. Geo. W. Truett's sermons can and are being heard by thousands of people through the hundreds of radio stations within a radius of 1000 miles of Dallas. The church has requested, however, that no wireless equipment be installed in any church house for the sake of receiving these sermons. "We are," the announcement says, "under sacred obligations to Christ's preachers everywhere."

Even the importers of luxuries are reducing materially the sums of money which they are sending out of the country for the classes of articles which may be properly included under that term "luxuries." Taking fifty principal imported articles or groups of articles usually included under that general title, it appears that their value in 1921 totals only $330,000,000 as against $525,000,000 in 1920, an apparent reduction of about 37 per cent in the amount of money sent out of the country for luxuries in 1921 when compared with 1920.

The Chinese Students Christian Association in North America has about 1500 members. The student Y. M. C. A. in China has 174 associations and 19,000 members.

Cash prizes for the best original essays by foreign students in attendance at American colleges and universities are offered through the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association by Fred N. Dow of Portland, Me. The subject matter is limited to the alcohol problem and measures for its solution, but the widest possible latitude is given to the choice of subject and the method of development. Length is to be between 2000 and 3000 words. First prize is $100, second prize, $50, and third prize, $25. Rules may be obtained by writing to the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, 14 W. Washington St., Chicago.

American universities which have completed athletic stadiums within the decade, or have provided for their construction, include California, Ohio State, Yale, Illinois, Stanford, Chicago, Washington, Princeton, Kansas, Pittsburgh, and the City College of New York. Of these, Yale's stadium cost $400,000 and seats 70,000; Washington spent $600,000 and can seat 60,000; California is spending $900,000 to seat 60,000; Illinois is planning a combined stadium and amphitheater to cost $2,500,000; and Ohio State raised $1,250,000. No stadium yet completed has been large enough to meet the immediate demand for seats. These facts, together with the recent discussion by President Lowell of Harvard University, on the relationship of intercollegiate athletics to the university, indicate two opposite trends.

Dr. John Marvin Dean, Pastor of the First Church of Pasadena, Cal., is in receipt of a letter from Hon. Joseph Fordney, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, in which Mr. Fordney states: "I do not know the source of the very persistent rumor that this committee is contemplating a tax on beverages for the purpose of raising revenue with which to pay a soldier bonus. The matter has not been discussed in committee nor has the Secretary of the Treasury spoken to me about it. There is some propaganda for and against it in the press, but further than that I do not know of any activity in connection with such a proposal."

Foreign Secretary James H. Franklin of the Foreign Mission Society, on Feb. 3, received a registered letter from the Baptists of Russia, postmarked Petrograd.

And Philadelphia—

Philadelphia has been called "slow" by somebody. It is a rank slander, if the activity of our churches is any index. Rev. P. Vanis Slawter of the Olney Church on Feb. 1 sent in a list of sixty-three new annual subscriptions to THE BAPTIST, with a check in full payment. Let the "hustling" cities take notice. We do not know the method used by the Olney Church to bring about this result but the man whose name would look good at the head of this Kollum could doubtless tell us.

Mail Lost

THE BAPTIST regrets to announce that the first mail on Thursday morning, Feb. 9, was lost. The sub-carrier placed the mail outside the office door instead of through the mail chute. When the office was opened, the mail had disappeared. We dislike to inconvenience our subscribers, but would greatly appreciate it if all those who sent in subscriptions and other communications which should have reached our office about February 9, would notify us at once in case full credit is not shown on your date label, or other acknowledgment made.

Don't Start Something You Can't Stop

This may be good advice in the case of a fire which may become a conflagration. It is, however, impossible of general application. We start something we can't stop every day. Our influence for weal or woe works out in ever widening circles and its shores no man knows. We should not forget that the law applies to the beginnings of good as well as of evil. When you become the instrument of placing THE BAPTIST and Missions in the homes of our people you are starting influences for good that you can't stop.

New Food

In our seminary days, as steward, in an unguarded moment we permitted outside influences to persuade us to change our bill of fare. A large order was sent to a mid-western food city for protose, nutose and glucose. It was supposed to relieve certain pressure on the digestive organs and add to the mental processes. It didn't. We were convinced then that no food can make up for the lack of common sense. A good substantial diet is for the average person, best. THE BAPTIST and Missions should be on the bill of fare of every Baptist home.

A Fitting Text

"And he set out not knowing where he was going." (Heb. 11:8, Twentieth Century Version.) How much Abraham was like us modern preachers. Again and again we "set out" in our sermon not knowing where we are going. This is one of the reasons that a number of persons keep awake during the sermon. They become interested in our "wanderings" in the wilderness. Pastor Terrell of Haddonfield, N. J., on a recent Sunday morning set out and knew exactly where he was going. He took as his text the denominational newspaper and the application was made for the hearers. Watch the Haddonfield list of subscribers!

On the envelope were fifteen stamps issued by the Bolshevik government, each stamp being of 1,000 ruble denomination, making a total of 15,000 rubles for the postage on this single letter. The letter is unique not only in that it indicates the restoration of postal communication between Russia and the United States, but it gives further evidence of the fearful depreciation of Russian currency. At the rate of exchange prevailing before the war 1000 Russian rubles were equivalent in value to $515. At this same rate the postage on the letter would have a value of $7,725 instead of ten or fifteen cents.

Rev. Samuel G. Neil, the Bible and Field Secretary of our Publication Society, was the preacher at the Moody Tabernacle, Chicago, February 12. He addressed the students of the Moody School on Monday morning, February 13, on "Present-Day Evangelism," and on Monday evening he gave his illustrated lecture on "Scotland and the Scotch" before the student body and the friends of the Bible Institute. Dr. Neil also planned to attend the annual meetings of the Sunday School Council and the Executive Committee meetings of the International Sunday School Associations, which met in Chicago the week following.

The Foreign Mission Society has distributed several thousand copies of the Annual Report and Guide Book, in response to requests from pastors. Copies are still available, and pastors who have not yet forwarded their applications are requested to do so as soon as possible in order that copies may be received as long as the supply is available. Address, American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Copies may also be secured from the state promotion directors.

In the months of October, November and December, 1921, the Stereopticon Division of the General Board of Promotion through its New York office alone, sent out more stereopticon lectures to Baptist churches than were used by the entire denomination the year previous to the organization of The Board of Promotion. The Boston depository and the Philadelphia depository sent almost as many and there are fifteen depositories in all.

Because of the evacuation by France of Cilicia, terror-stricken Christians, fearing new massacres in the Holy Land by the Mohammedans have fled from their homes and farms and are now helpless, hopeless unwanted refugees, according to a letter received at the Illinois headquarters of the Near East Relief, from Constantinople. The Near East Relief, which has been incorporated by the United States Congress to operate in the Bible lands is authorized to raise $15,000,000 this year for its work, which is limited to women and children. Of this amount, Illinois is expected to raise $1,000,000 before June 30. City and town people are being asked for cash while farmers are asked to contribute of their surplus grain which will be credited to the respective county quotas for its full cash value at the point of shipment. This value will be greater than its market value because the railroads are carrying gift grain free until Feb. 28. Cash contributions may be sent to the treasurer of the Near East Relief in each county or to the Illinois headquarters at 19 South La Salle Street, Chicago.

A Seafarer's Sketch Book

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

NO. 4. FELLOW SEAFARERS

A DELIGHTFUL comradeship that is doubtless not found anywhere else on earth exists among fellow passengers on an ocean steamship. It begins almost immediately after the ship leaves her pier and certainly not later than the customary introductions and the seating at the tables in the dining room. This comradeship is inevitable, for when spending fifteen long stormy days on a trip from New York to Russia a man must either get acquainted with his fellow seafarers or else retire to his cabin and remain in seclusion.

On the voyage of the "Estonia" with her immense cargo of relief supplies contributed by Baptists for distribution in Europe there were only three cabin passengers including myself. These three, together with the captain, the first officer, the chief engineer and the ship's physician, made a delightful family group of seven who gathered three times a day in the dining room—and sometimes four since tea and delicious pastry were served every afternoon—and who spent the evenings in the tiny ship's parlor to listen to a victrola concert or some stirring sea stories told by the captain. One of the three passengers was a typical American world traveler. He represented a half-dozen business interests and commercial enterprises and for twenty years had journeyed from America to Europe, from Europe to South America and from South America back to the United States. His passport was one of the most fascinating documents I have ever seen. Several additional pages had to be sealed on in order to provide space for the excessive number of consular visas which all countries have required since the beginning of the war.

The other cabin passenger was a Polish young woman returning to her home in Warsaw. She had been working in one of the Polish government offices in the United States for nearly two years and was therefore looking forward with the greatest anticipation to her arrival home. Before the war her father was an aristocratic Polish nobleman, a descendant of one of the proud and ancient families of Poland. Today he is an ordinary citizen, although holding a responsible position as head of one of the government executive departments. The war has done away with all titular aristocracy and nobility in Poland. Thus no matter where one travels on this earth today it is apparently impossible to avoid meeting the effects and the far-reaching results of the war.

Interesting as these persons were, however, my chief interest was more in that large group of passengers known as the steerage passengers. Twice each day I visited the steerage. Always there would be something different to see and something new to learn. It was fascinating to study humanity and absorbingly interesting to talk to those who conversed in English or German. In this lower region of the ship were congregated a vast mass of people representing all types, races, nations and ages. There were infants in arms and long-bearded, venerable patriarchs; aged women, their wrinkled faces and curved backs testifying mutely to the long, relentless struggle for existence which life had meant to them; vigorous young men in superb physical condition for life's battles and any number of sullen-looking older men, evidently disappointed with an unrealized opportunity in America and wondering what lay before them in Europe. Among the ship's passengers were four Russians, Bolshevik in spirit and purpose who were being deported by the United States government because of their propaganda activities during the war. They had already spent nearly two years in a federal prison. I had several long talks with these people, for they spoke excellent English, trying to get their point of view and to understand their principles. One must admit that, however misguided they may be, they are at least sincere, for only allegiance to what a man believes to be a great cause would persuade him to forego an economic opportunity in America and willingly accept an inevitable disillusionment in Russia with conditions as they are at present.

One young Polish fellow proved to be an unusually interesting talker. In characteristic broken English he told me of his arrival in America nine years ago with his bride, the work he had done during these years and the modest sum he had placed in the savings bank. A baby arrived and then two years ago his wife became ill. Threatened with tuberculosis, the American physician ordered her back to Poland. Today she is fully restored and it was decidedly amusing to hear him describe the change in her condition. When she left America two years ago she weighed 117 pounds and looked, as he described her, "like a little rose bush"; and now she weighs more than 200 pounds and looks, as he described her, "like a big tree." The eagerness with which he looked forward to his reunion with his family was indescribable; yet I knew exactly how he felt for I was already looking forward to a similar meeting with my own family several months later.

There is one other passenger whom I must mention in this brief sketch. Two days after leaving New York the stokers discovered a stowaway hiding in the coal bunkers. How he got aboard nobody knows. It is astounding to me that any man, especially a young Russian, for such was his nationality, should take such desperate measures to leave America with all its privilege and opportunity and go to Russia with its unknown future. The poor fellow was half starved when discovered. The captain must either have been a stowaway himself at some time in his career or else he has a big heart. An extra man was needed to peel potatoes in the steerage, and so after giving him a good meal the captain offered the stowaway a chance to earn his passage to Russia which he gladly accepted. Several times have I seen him sitting mournfully in the galley peeling potatoes. Since the voyage to Russia means fifteen days, and since there are nearly 200 steerage passengers, and since the steerage consumes potatoes at three meals each day, the reader by a simple process of arithmetic can figure for himself how many potatoes this poor stowaway will have peeled in order to earn his passage to Russia.

The Lost Sense of God

THE Puritans of old New England have left an indelible mark on the United States. New England itself has been over-run by an alien invasion but the Puritan conscience and the Puritan attitude has in some way been impressed upon the very hills so that, despite all, it endures. Recent studies of these men and women have made it clear that they were very human and far from being immune to the common frailties of mankind. But it also becomes increasingly clear that they had a vivid sense of God. As has more than once been said of others, they lived as if God had his headquarters in the next block.

Jonathan Edwards had a theology which to many sensitive moderns is unlovely. But no Christian preacher can fail to envy him his power to make the fact and presence of God vivid to his hearers. When Whitefield went, like a flame of fire, northwards from Philadelphia through New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts and into New Hampshire, it was before a living God that his hearers prostrated themselves. Men who never heard Dwight L. Moody and who have only read his printed sermons often wonder at his power. It may be put in one word: "He made God real to men."

Every time of real faith has been a time of living faith in a living God. The church has been strong when it spoke in no uncertain voice of a God in whom its own members believed. When his love constrained them to service and to sacrifice, there was no withholding of testimony and no lack of results.

The great trouble with our time is a lost sense of God. Men dreamed for a moment that the war was to restore what had been mislaid. But too often the reaction to the strain of that upheaval has been in exactly the opposite direction. The fire in our churches is at last beginning to burn more brightly, but we have yet to hear any general outcry, "O, that I knew where I might find Him!"

The diagnosis seems to be fairly clear. Ex-President Eliot of Harvard University said that the one great cause of the world war was the failure of the churches in Europe and America to put before the world an adequate conception of God. One of our exchanges a few weeks ago quoted "a leading jurist, a member of the supreme court of his state," who when asked why crime had increased to such colossal proportions replied, "I can tell you in one sentence: Men have lost the consciousness of God."

In his recent Yale Lectures on Preaching, Bishop Williams of Michigan said: "It was not the rationalistic philosophies of the nineteenth century with their mechanistic interpretations of life and the universe that most deeply and surely undermined Christian faith.

Those were passing phases of thought, already obsolescent. It was not the perpetual warfare between science and theology. Above all, it was not the new science of Biblical criticism. That has proved a servant of faith, incalculably enriching her treasure house. It was the practical materialism of the age. It was the dominant commercial consciousness. It was the business man's rule with his business standard and judgment. It was that which created a sordid, mephitic atmosphere in which the soul could not breathe. Above all, it was the accumulating horrors of human misery, wrongs and injustice that grew out of our social and industrial system, and the apparent indifference of conventional religion thereto, which made multitudes give up their faith in a good God, a God who cared—aye, in any rationality in the universe. It was that also which made it a desperate struggle for all who felt and thought to keep their grip on any faith in a heavenly Father." In other words, men kept up the forms of religion but had lost real contact with God and every domain of life suffered.

The great task of the present-day pulpit is to restore to men this lost sense of God. Men and women need to see God not as an abstraction but as a living, dominating presence. They need a God who is a providence, a father, to whom they can pray and from whom they can confidently expect an answer.

Rev. John A. Hutton, of Glasgow, said recently: "We are, all of us, about to make a discovery. At times it seems to me we are on the edge and moment of a world-shaking revolution in thought and mood. . . . I sometimes think that we are on the point of making the discovery that our Christianity is true, and that for men to oppose it or neglect it is for mankind in the long run—and a long run is needed for the testing of principle—to rush down a steep place and perish."

The central fact in that discovery, if it is made, is God, a God who "so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." It is the rediscovery of the God of the Bible to which Hutton looks forward with prophetic hope. It is the rediscovery of that God which is the hope of the church and of the modern world. The preacher who has learned for himself the "secret of his presence," and who can come from that holy place with his heart aflame will be making his contribution towards the only solution there is of our present unhappiness. The layman who changes a theoretical to a lively faith in God and who marches with that God into the days that are ahead will be a herald of a new era. We must all of us get back that lost sense of God if our life and work is to have anything more than a passing significance.

Editorial Comment

THE MESSAGE OF THE POSTER

It takes money to keep missionaries, teachers, doctors and nurses on the home and foreign field—shall we call them back? It takes money to run kindergarten schools, hospitals and dispensaries—shall we close them? Many young men and women are offering themselves for life service—must we refuse them or may we prepare them for His work and send them out? It all depends upon you.

Northern Baptists have given so far only half the money needed for the immediate work on our home and foreign fields. Shall we plow on, or stop now? Have you pledged? Are your back pledges all paid up? Can you not increase the amount you had thought to give? Has your giving meant any sacrifice? He sacrificed for you, and this is his work. The field is ready, but unless your hand is on the plow the work stops.

Christ bade the disciples "Go ye into all the world" and he knows just how great the field is, and that the work can be accomplished only in his strength. He also knows the blessing that comes to him who undertakes great things in his name. Are you satisfied with what you are doing in this field? Every member of every Baptist church working and giving, spells success. He is watching. We must not fail him. (Suggested by the poster reproduced on the cover page.)

ASSOCIATE SECRETARY W. H. MAIN

A news item on another page carries the announcement of the election of Dr. W. H. Main, pastor of the Memorial Church, Philadelphia, to the position of Associate Secretary of the Publication Society together with an indication of the work he will be expected to perform in this new position. There is no need of commending Dr. Main to the goodwill of the denomination, for that is already his. As a successful pastor, a wise counsellor on some of our denominational boards and a man among men, he is widely and very favorably known. We may expect that in his new position he will not only bring an ability which will greatly relieve Dr. Brink, who is now over-burdened, but will also contribute in marked measure to increased efficiency in this great denominational enterprise. Welcome to the new Associate Secretary!

IS THE BIBLE SECTARIAN?

Keep your eye on a lawsuit now under way in California, growing out of the action of the school board of Fresno in ordering that the Bible should be in the public school library. The matter was taken into the court by opponents of this action and the court ruled that inasmuch as the Bible is one of the world's masterpieces it belonged in the library. The court also held that reading the Bible without comment is perfectly legal. The case has been appealed and may go to the supreme court of the state.

Manifestly there are men and women, themselves irreligious, who are desperately afraid of the effect of the reading of the Bible. The literature of every other religion in the world is in their opinion suitable reading for school children, if they choose to look into it. Indeed, high school scholars will probably be compelled to give some attention to Greek and Roman myths. But they would at the same time keep the children from a knowledge of the well-spring of pure wisdom. Isn't it about time that we had a decision that, while the Bible may be used for sectarian purposes, it is not in itself sectarian and that as a people we cannot afford not to make it as easy as possible for all the children of our schools to acquire a first-hand knowledge of a book which, whatever else you may say of it, is certainly the most inspiring bit of literature the world knows?

THE SENATE SHOULD RATIFY

By common consent the achievements of the armament conference are among the most encouraging of all international, post-war doings. There has been brought about agreement for a limitation of naval armaments, the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance and an arrangement for aid to China more liberal than was supposed possible. Treaties embodying these and the other accomplishments have been signed, but have yet to run the gauntlet of the Senate. Will they be ratified? Christian people naturally assume that they will be especially since the Democratic leader, Senator Underwood, had part in their making. But already there have appeared signs of a disposition to play politics. The people of the churches who furnished the public sentiment which made possible the success of this great conference must not lay down the work until they have brought to bear upon their senators the influence which may be needed in order to secure prompt ratification. The sooner action is taken, the greater will be the moral effect on the world.

A REVIVAL IN SCOTLAND

Dundee, Scotland, is in a powerful religious awakening. Rev. John McConnachie, writing in the British Weekly, says of it: "It has been like Galilean days again to have those young fishermen coming amongst us, with the roll of the dorie and the tang of the sea on their tongues, and telling the old, old story with the joy of a new discovery. 'Eureka! We have found the Christ.'" Mr. McConnachie says that never did young evangelists arrive in the big city to assault the strongholds of sin more slenderly equipped in knowledge and experience, and with a finer courage and daring. It was David with his sling and a few smooth stones from the brook over again. The sketch of the leader of these young men is suggestive.

"But Jock Troup, the Wick cooper, is the undoubted leader and spiritual father of the others. He is a young man of splendid physique, born to lead. With his shock of black hair, ruddy complexion, gray eyes and winning smile, he takes possession of a gathering. He makes us think of the Apostle Peter in his early Galilean days, even to his ready tongue and impulsive nature.

"The secret of Jock Troup's power lies in his rock-fast certainty of his own conversion and call and his complete surrender to God, that he may use him, where and how he will. He has absolutely committed himself to the guidance of God. He does not know where he will be a month hence, or even whether God means him to continue as a preacher.

"Troup is no scholar, but he makes up for the want by his homely thrusts and mother wit. 'God winna be kept in a corner.' He does not strive for emotional effects. He says he has seen them, and they mean nothing. But he has seen strong men crying out under stress of conviction of sin, and he knows how to distinguish."

Whether these young men can do in a strange city environment what they have already done in their own town and proper surrounding is questioned by some. But events thus far have fully substantiated the faith that there is power from God in the hands of men who, with souls aflame, will tell what mighty things God has done for them.

MONEY WITHOUT CHARACTER

Money without character is a dangerous thing to the man or woman who possesses it. This seems to be the lesson of the exposure of the manner of life of certain film stars at Hollywood.

Listen to this summing up by a newspaper writer: "Movieland, so far as the players are concerned, is the natural consequence of raising to sudden riches a colony of young people who for the most part were and are ungrounded in values, unschooled in the refinement of simple pleasures, hopelessly incapable of satisfying themselves save by indulgence of appetites, by flings in gross materialism."

Sudden wealth is a temptation even to men and women who are well balanced; it is likely to be fatal to those who know no enjoyments except those of the senses and have no balance wheel within themselves.

Once it was said, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom of heaven." Now it should be said, "How hardly shall they who have riches thrust upon them avoid the descent to hell."

THE NEW POPE

Cardinal Achille Ratti, archbishop of Milan, has been elected pope in succession to late Benedict XV, and has assumed the name of Pius XI. He is an Italian, thus ensuring the continuance of the provincialism which has marked the government of the church, a scholar and diplomat, and is credited with being a liberal in his attitude towards the Italian government. He was a compromise candidate, the more outspoken men on either side of current controversies in the church being considered impossible. His accomplishments are, of course, all in the womb of time, but it is to be noted again that considerations of religion, of social good and of world service were not dominant in the election of the man who by his followers is thought to be the leader of the Christian world. To what a pass have we come!

DOES THE CHURCH REFUSE TO LISTEN?

A group of socially-minded Christians requested Bernard Shaw to write some message to the church in America. He declined in the following words: "I feel highly flattered that you should think the church will listen to Bernard Shaw when it refuses to listen to Jesus Christ."

Striking words glibly uttered! Are they true or false? Is it true that the churches refuse to listen to Christ? Do they disregard his teaching on non-resistance and love, on brotherhood, on individual sacrifice? Is the old jibe that Christianity has as yet never been tried justified? No harm will result if men and women and churches will open the Bible, read over again the words of the Master, and think and pray and act.

SOWING DRAGON'S TEETH

Some weeks ago the judicial section of the American Bar Association unanimously adopted the following declaration:

"The judicial section of the American Bar Association, venturing to speak for all the judges, wishes to express this warning to the American people: Reverence for law and enforcement of law depend mainly upon the ideals and customs of those who occupy the vantage ground of life in business and society. The people of the United States, by solemn constitutional and statutory enactment, have undertaken to suppress the age-long evil of the liquor traffic. When, for the gratification of their appetites or the promotion of their interests, lawyers, bankers, great merchants and manufacturers, and social leaders, both men and women, disobey and scoff at this law, or any other law, they are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting mob violence, robbery and homicide; they are sowing dragon's teeth, and they need not be surprised when they find that no judicial or police authority can save our country or humanity from reaping the harvest."

The present lawlessness, so far as any exists, is the direct result of the work of the liquor traffic and those men and women who either sympathize with the business or have been deceived by specious arguments. That prohibition works and is fast becoming more instead of less effective is made clear by the great volume of evidence. But entirely apart from this, unless educated, well-meaning citizens support laws which the majority of the people have adopted, not only is democracy a failure but the very foundations of civilized society are undermined. Every person who plays the liquor game in these days or who makes light of the eighteenth amendment is knowingly or ignorantly sowing a seed from which there is bound to come an increasingly disastrous harvest.

CONVENTION MEETS AT INDIANAPOLIS

Because of the denominational emergency and the necessity for a large and representative attendance at the next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, the Seattle brethren have graciously although reluctantly released their acknowledged claim for the convention meeting. The invitation to meet in Indianapolis from June 14 to 20 inclusive has been accepted by the executive committee and approved by the officers of the societies and boards. The date was fixed by the possibility of hotel accommodations and meeting place.

Few, if any, meetings of the convention since its organization exceed in importance that which will be held in June. Now that the uncertainty as to time and place is removed and it is known that the meeting will be in a central and easily accessible place, all of our churches should begin to make their arrangements to be represented. In our present denominational situation a church can make no finer investment of its money than to see to it that the pastor and at least one other delegate is present at this meeting. What is done at Indianapolis will bear fruit in our denominational life for many years to come.

What is Baptist Liberty?

To be responsible one must be free. But when one seeks to align himself with an organized body of worshipers his primal individual rights find a limitation.

By FRED W. FREEMAN

AS the result of a brief discussion of the above subject before the Missouri conference, I was requested to prepare my remarks and elaborate them for our denominational press. This is my apology for offering this paper for publication.

Liberty in any realm is a thing apart from unrestrained license; it always operates under law. Soul liberty carries with it not only the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience but also the right of one to refuse to worship God at all. This operates under the primal laws of man's creation in the likeness and image of God and is covered by the Baptist conception of axiomatic truth that "to be responsible one must be free." On this principle it was perfectly natural that our Baptist forefathers in their fight for soul liberty found sympathetic and natural allies in the free thinkers and skeptics headed by Tom Paine. The one group wanted the unrestrained right to worship God devoutly in the manner directed by the word of God as they understood it, and the other wanted the unrestrained right to refuse to worship God and to dethrone the word of God. Both groups, under the law of liberty of the soul, were equally entitled to the protection of the law of the land in the profession and practice of their diametrically opposite views on the subject and were natural allies in their advocacy of soul liberty.

Among Worshipers

Every one is entitled to the fullest and most unrestrained liberty of adopting any form of worship or no form at all, ranging from simple nature worship to the most elaborate ritualistic or sacerdotal form of worship, but this liberty finds a vital and basic modification when one undertakes to join in social or group expression of his religious worship and service. So long as one remains apart no individual or body, either civil or ecclesiastical, has the right to apply even the weight of a feather in the matter of force or compulsion in the way of curtailing in the slightest degree the unqualified right of a man to worship as he pleases. This liberty is a thing apart from and not akin in the remotest degree to religious toleration. The one proceeds upon liberty received from God and cannot be properly modified or restrained by state or ecclesiastical authority. The full and only duty of the state is to protect one in the full enjoyment of his God-given liberty, limited only by the inherent right of other people to enjoy the same privilege. Tolerance proceeds on the assumption that some body, either state or ecclesiastical, has the proper power to measure liberally or sparingly the privileges one may have. Tolerance in this sense is wholly inconsistent with full religious liberty. The right to grant tolerance implies the power to practice tyranny, and is itself inadmissible.

But when one in the field of worship seeks to align himself with an organized body of worshipers his primal individual rights find a proper limitation as he enters the body by the law and liberty of the body. His unrestrained individual liberty finds its full exercise and natural limitation in his uncoerced decision to enter the organized body of worshipers, so that it follows if one in the free exercise of his unrestrained liberty seeks membership in a Baptist church it is inherent in the very process of seeking such admission that his individual liberty is to be exercised within the limits and in respect of the rules and forms of the church, and he must per force waive any individual course of conduct inconsistent therewith. Any other course would involve not only the most fundamental and vital principle of comity and fraternity but also the soundest rules of ethics and morals. This does not violate any personal liberty of conscience but preserves it both for the individual and the church, and without the application of this principle no church could preserve its own integrity. If this fundamental limitation proves irksome to the individual he can find his unrestrained personal freedom exactly where he left it, to wit, on the outside.

This principle is clearly recognized in any other realm of life by people of normal mind and moral fiber, and it seems strange beyond words that in the realm of religion one should claim immunity from the application of sound ethical principle, and stranger still that this immunity should be claimed as a product of the splendid and glorious principle of Baptist liberty.

Liberty in Cooperative Organizations

Another place wherein the principle of Baptist liberty finds application and limitation is in the field of cooperative denominational activities, such as our scheme of cooperation presents in our associations and conventions, local and state-wide, and in our great conventions such as our Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions, and the boards and societies operating in affiliation with these.

These all present differing and varying problems, but the principle is clear and sound even though the application of the principle may present real problems.

The basic principle among Baptists is that each church is a sovereign, independent and self-governing body. The sovereignty and independence of such body cannot extend itself beyond its own constituency. "There are no strings on a Baptist church and nowhere to put any strings." It follows that a church can, in the exercise of its sovereignty solely within its own affairs, do pretty much anything it pleases in the matter of receiving and retaining people in its membership and ordaining ministers, but in the exercise of such power it cannot extend its sovereignty into the territory and jurisdiction of equally sovereign and independent churches.

If one church so exercises its sovereign privileges as to shock and outrage the sister churches, they, in the exercise of their sovereign power and without in any way denying the offending church any of its power, can refuse to recognize or fraternize with people who repudiate what one group of churches regards as basic and fundamental faith and scriptural practice. Sovereignty, independence and liberty work both ways and all ways, and in cooperative efforts are modified by the laws of comity, fraternity and unity of faith and practice.

So it may, and sometimes does, happen that a public man in denominational service, in the exercise of his individual liberty as modified by his social or group relationship in his own church; still pursues a course of conduct or promulgates a line of teaching or a method of procedure which, judged by his own church, raises no question of his relation to that particular church, and yet be wholly unacceptable to the larger cooperating constituency. In such case the cooperating constituency may, in the preservation of its own rights and in perfect consonance with preservation of Baptist liberty, insist on the retirement of the public servant from the service of the constituency, and this without in any way violating any of the individual rights of the man in question or the sovereign rights of the church to which he belongs. The church would still be free to retain the man in its membership and in no way would the action of the cooperating constituency bind the church or impair the relationship of the man and the church. If the man be an ordained minister of the church he would continue so to be, and the action of the cooperating constituency would not affect his status in any way.

This procedure is an illustration of the principle that all the sovereignty of a church is exercised within the limits of the church and cannot be extended to cooperative relationships. The principle of liberty within the realm of Baptist cooperation extends to the organizations and agencies of cooperation which are made up of individuals, not churches, and cannot bind the churches, and can get the approval of the churches only by doing things approved by the churches and by methods approved by them. No body among Baptists can issue a sovereign order to any body with any binding force, but any body among Baptists can lay down a rule of conduct, within the limits of the principles herein discussed, and insist upon principles of ethics, morality, fraternity and stewardship affecting cooperation in the Kingdom as a condition precedent to joining or continuing in a cooperative effort, without violation of the principles of Baptist liberty.

It is recognized that this principle makes possible great confusion, and in the hands of unintelligent, unspiritual and unfraternal people, great harm may be done to any great scheme of cooperation. The answer is that the principle was designed for and should be applied by intelligent, spiritual and fraternal people. Baptists will have made their greatest contribution to the world when this, their great basic principle, has had its fullest recognition and application.

There are no greater sinners against this principle than those who seek license unrestrained rather than liberty under the law of ethics, stewardship and fraternity. "O, Liberty! How many crimes have been committed in thy name!" Another class of great sinners in this matter is a group who claim the right to limit the freedom of one class in the field of cooperation without themselves actually performing in the field, and again by making the foundations too narrow, rigid and inflexible.

In all cooperative effort the spirit of broad fraternity, and large liberty in the matters allowable, limited only by strict adherence to vital and fundamental things, is the only way in which large groups can make a worth-while contribution to the progress of the Kingdom.

Another and final remark. The principle of Baptist liberty finds its recognition and proper application as fully and freely in its exercise in favor of agreement and cooperation with our brethren as it does in protest and disagreement, a thing many brethren seem to overlook.

Tired Mothers

A little elbow leans upon your knee—

Your tired knee that has so much to bear;

A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly

From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.

Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch

Of warm, moist fingers, folding yours so tight;

You do not prize this blessing overmuch—

You almost are too tired to pray tonight.

But it is blessedness. A year ago

I did not see it as I do today—

We are so dull and thankless, and too slow

To catch the sunshine till it slips away.

And now it seems surpassing strange to me

That, while I wore the badge of motherhood,

I did not kiss more oft and tenderly

The little child that brought me only good.

And if, some night when you sit down to rest,

You miss this elbow from your tired knee,

This restless, curly head from off your breast,

This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;

If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped,

And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;

If the white feet into the grave had tripped,

I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret

At little children clinging to their gown;

Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,

Are ever black enough to make them frown.

If I could find a little muddy boot,

Or cap, or jacket on my chamber floor;

If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,

And hear its patter in my home once more;

If I could mend a broken cart today,

Tomorrow make a kite to reach the sky—

There is no woman in God's world could say

She was more blissfully content than I.

But ah! the dainty pillow next my own

Is never rumpled by a shining head;

My singing birdling from its nest is flown;

The little boy I used to kiss is dead!

The Rising Baptist Democracies of Europe

Faith thrives in the midst of persecution. Privation makes American Baptist brotherhood more precious. Laying educational foundations. As always, a spiritual religion startles the formalism of state churches.

Ministering to Christ in Esthonia

By ADAM PODIN

THE world war with its destructive power has not been able to destroy one thing at least, that is the fellowship of the saints. How little you knew of Esthonia and the true children of God in Esthonia before the war! And we did not know much of American Baptists, with the exception of myself. As you have been asking me to write something of our united faith, I do so gladly.

Your younger brethren as Baptists in Esthonia are only forty-one years old. About that time there was a revival, brought about not by a Baptist but through the means of a simple Swedish brother. Our people were all Lutherans or Greek Orthodox church members. The revival convicted people of their sins so that they could not stand upon their feet but fell down and asked God for mercy. Then our people commenced to read the Bible. They soon came to the conclusion that the sacramental teaching was not biblical. They studied more and decided that the practice of infant sprinkling was quite false as they knew that a child could not believe. So they separated from the rest and sprinkled each other in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and celebrated the Lord's Supper only with believers.

Then there broke out a fearful persecution led by the Lutheran and Greek Orthodox churches. You will find scarcely any brother among our first Baptists who has not been often imprisoned and punished in various ways. After a time they heard of Baptists in Petrograd, who came and instructed them in the word of God and some twenty persons were baptized in the sea. Then and under these circumstances sprang up our present Baptist church. The Baptists have not been free from oppression and persecution much of the time, but the more they were afflicted the more they multiplied. We have at the present time thirty-eight churches, with nearly 4,000 Baptist church members, besides children and adherents. There are thirty-five Sunday schools with some 2,000 children.

War-Time Persecutions

During the war the Greek Orthodox Church closed our churches and banished our members—some to Siberia, some elsewhere. Our church buildings were used for many purposes. My own was turned into a barracks where one hundred soldiers lodged. Later it was turned into a Greek Orthodox church, filled with holy pictures, shrines and icons. When the Germans occupied our land, the Roman Catholics had their superstitious and mysterious services in this building. All of this time our people kept together until the resolution came that brought freedom to the Baptists. It would take too long to describe the awful times during the rule of the Bolsheviks, so I will only tell how conditions are now. The Baptists enjoy full freedom at present. We can proclaim the divine truth openly. Our men and brethren go everywhere and preach the gospel and are received with open arms. The people in many places are so ignorant in biblical matters that they have never heard the name of Abraham, Isaac and so on. The Greek Orthodox church kept them in darkness purposely, as did also the Lutheran. But now all their ecclesiastical power is broken and they are in a deplorable state indeed.

Our present government has not given any rights to any church, so we are all on the same platform. We are used to denying ourselves and living simply but a great deal more is needed now. Shall I give you a picture of my own life and work, which is what each one of our pastors could do were not their hands and feet bound by some kind of work necessary that they may keep body and soul together and care for their families.

Lepers Hear the Gospel

I have a document which gives me entrance to any prison at any time to preach the gospel and give away New Testaments and other books. I have been preaching for some years to our lepers. We have 160 of them in two Asyls. The Lord has so blessed my labors that when on January 6 I had the Lord's Supper there were ten of us together. You would be glad to be with me in these meetings. The lepers are in a very sad condition. Fifteen or twenty of them had nothing to cover their bodies full of wounds. They were hungry and suffering desperately. Some friends in England had sent me money for them and I bought material for them to make shirts. The American Baptist relief arrived at just the right time—some days before Christmas. So I forwarded the clothes, shoes and soap which your kind hearts had put together. The joy was above every description. Ten days ago the same poor things were in rags, and now they were sitting like American ladies, finely dressed, and through the ugly destroyed skin shone a bright light of happiness. They cannot shake hands to show their gratitude, but they made up a choir! One leper who has still a good voice and some knowledge of music instructed them in singing. Brethren, I am sure I am much richer in experience than many of you who have heard fine singing, for a leper choir is something that one seldom hears! I was surprised to see that some who were singing were quite blind. Upon inquiry, they explained: "We taught them the text by heart and then the music."

The Lord was very gracious to us and your leper brethren and sisters were quite proud when they heard of your love and kindness in the new world. After the service was over they would not disperse as each one wished to express his thanks for the warm clothes he had received, and those were the clothes which you had sent to us—the clothes that I received in Libau from the Ship That Was Filled in Fellowship and brought over by Dr. W. B. Lippard.

O, our elder brethren and sisters in America, allow me here to express the heartiest thanks to all of you who have taken part in this great work of love, in the name of our poor children, poor people, poor lepers and in the name of all our pastors who each received something for themselves and families. When the parcels were brought home in some cases all of the family knelt down on your clothes and thanked God with tears. A great many children could not come to Sunday school as they had no clothes, but now my church is full of Sunday-school children. Some day you will be amazed. These clothes, boots, toys and soap you sent to Esthonia, you will find in the hands of our King. He will say, "Ye gave me." You will say, "We sent those to Esthonia," but the King will stick to his word, saying, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

May the Lord bless our brethren in the new world and recompense each one is the prayer of our churches, poor, needy lepers, and others.

Vegel, Esthonia.

A Chat About Baptist Work in Roumania

By REV. BENJ. SCHLIF

BAPTISTS in Roumania are of four nationalities and make use of four languages: Roumanian, Hungarian, Russian and German. And in these four tongues thanks are ascending to our heavenly Father for the widespread and practical interest Baptists in other and larger countries are taking in the welfare of their brethren living in this kingdom. The least we can do in return is to keep our kind friends informed about the progress of the gospel in our midst. This the writer of this article will attempt to do, trusting that the readers will be interested enough in the things reported to be indulgent in overlooking errors in style and expression.

For information's sake be it stated that in round numbers there are 14,000 Roumanian, 6223 Hungarian, 300 Bulgarian and Russian and 670 German Baptists living under the scepter of King Ferdinand at present. These numbers are sure to increase greatly in the next few years, as persecution resulting in wide-spread publicity through newspaper articles and discussions in Parliament have made us known farther and faster than we would otherwise have become and curiosity has led many people to visit the services who would otherwise not have come. So here once more God has turned evil into good.

A Turning Towards Religion

Then, too, we see clearly that a reaction is setting in. During the war many people turned from religion. The great and exciting events took all their interest, and the fact that so-called Christian nations were engaged in a war bloodier than any ever had been bore the fruit of skepticism. Now men seem to turn more and more to religion and our chapels are filling up again with people anxious for a satisfactory solution of the question: What must I do to be saved? In a small church in Bessarabia ninety-five people were converted in six weeks last winter. The writer of this conducted services there for three weeks and the pastor continued them three weeks more. Judging from the spirit of inquiry now to be noticed, hundreds will be saved during the next four months. Will the readers of THE BAPTIST remember this when they are before the throne of grace?

I regret to have to report that persecutions are still going on. The German congregations have received permission to assemble, but many Roumanian chapels still are closed, meetings are disturbed and dispersed, people are beaten, etc. The Hungarian brethren have to complain of similar mistreatment. Drs. Rushbrooke and Gill will be here in a few weeks and renewed intervention may bring the relief our brethren have so long prayed for.

A Baptist Union Formed

A step forward has been taken in the formation of a Baptist Union of Roumania including all the Baptist churches in this country. The four groups will, of course, continue holding their conferences separately, as the four languages make meetings in common quite out of the question, but two brethren from each of the four groups have been chosen and these eight together are to represent the entire Baptist brotherhood before the authorities, discuss things of mutual interest and disburse the funds given to further the work of our churches in this country. So a united front has been achieved, and united we shall stand!

One great need of our churches is a trained and an educated body of ministers. The secretary for control of the sects in the Ministry of Ecclesiastical Affairs with whom I had to do in obtaining liberty for our German churches said to me: "Why don't you people get educated ministers? A few days ago some farmers came to see me from Transylvania. I asked them what they wanted and they replied, 'Recognition as preachers.' I asked further, 'Who is your bishop?' and one of these farmers laid his hand on his chest and said, 'I am bishop.' What do you think of that! I am doctor of theology and still I would need much preparation before venturing to preach, and these farmers one night dream they should go forth and preach the gospel, and next morning off they go. You can imagine of what quality their preaching is!"

Better Trained Preachers Wanted

One can readily understand such reasoning from a man grown up in a church which has an unspiritual view of the ministry. With him and all of his kind, the ministry is a profession, not a calling. I'd pit hundreds of the Roumanian Baptist helpers against a similar number of orthodox priests and be absolutely sure of having an easy time in proving our men more spiritual, better preachers and having 95 per cent more results from their work in uplifting humanity than the orthodox priests could show. And yet—I plead for a trained and educated body of preachers! The more thoroughly trained, the better. And so I, and with me thousands of Baptists in Roumania are happy in the thought that funds have been provided to found a seminary in Bucharest. Perhaps my next chat will contain news that a suitable building has been bought and work begun!

From Sept. 29 to Oct. 2 the German Association met in annual conference with the Bucharist Church. Among the measures adopted, the most important were the decision to publish a small paper to appear every two weeks. This was decided on as a means of cementing the relations of the churches to each other. In it matters of general interest for the German brotherhood will appear and as it is planned to bring articles of interest for others as well, we hope to obtain a sufficient number of subscribers to make the new paper a paying affair.

We also made our first sociological venture in founding a society to aid our poorer members when the angel of death comes into their homes. This was adopted with much enthusiasm and free-will gifts amounting to over 500 Lei were given as a fund to start the society. As crops have been a total failure in some parts of our country, we look for beneficial workings of the society soon. While writing these lines I have thought that perhaps some American friends might wish to help us in this venture and so carry out the great apostle's injunction in Gal. 6:2: "Bear of Roumania extend to our brethren of the same faith in America greetings in Jesus' name!"

[The writer of this letter has been for twelve years pastor of the German Baptist Church of Bucharest. He is an American by birth but of German extraction.—The Editor.]

Experiences in Hungary

By ATTILA CSOPJAK

WHEN Hungary was great and strong it was little known among foreign countries; now that neighbors have taken away two-thirds and Hungary is a small land, it has become well known because of its misfortunes. We should like it to be known for the intellectual and spiritual light that fills us, so that it will be the hope of the people of southeast Europe where evangelism is unknown to many million souls. The moral tone in Hungary was spoiled through the world war, but there at once awoke in many souls a desire to recognize the truth. The spiritual awakening during the last year has been ever increasing. Even places have been affected where formerly, because of the indifference, nothing could be done. Especially is this true beyond the Danube, where there is noticeable a great interest in the gospel. Concern filled America and we received money from two places to send missionaries beyond the Danube. We have few missionaries. The pupils of our theological school will be ready in two and one-half years, but we cannot wait that long. We must get capable mental and spiritual workmen. We hope our Lord will let us find such men. We have baptized in our land approximately 900. Much is to be hoped from this beginning.

Woman's Work

Our women and girls have begun to work through associations so that the sick are visited and the poor and orphans supported. In this way many sorrowful hearts are comforted. I will give an episode of the visits among the sick:

During the last months of the war there came to Hungary a seventeen-year-old girl, Rose, and her twin brother. They came from German Bohemia to visit a sick brother who was a soldier. They found the hospital where their brother had been staying, but he was already dead. They intended going home to Bohemia at once, but at that time the line of demarcation barred them and they were told they must remain in Hungary. Rose's twin brother dressed in a Bohemian soldier's uniform and smuggled himself across the boundary with the intention of helping his sister. Rose remained alone in the foreign country. She found employment. When she heard nothing from home for many months she resolved also to cross the boundary. She might have done it had not the Bohemian frontier soldiers captured her and mistreated her. To save herself, Rose jumped, injuring both legs, but she escaped to the forest. At last she got back to Hungary and was given work by a Jewish woman. She was sad and ill during these months when she heard no news from home. After two years of this loneliness she was disposed to suicide. She decided to die and took poison. She was sent to the hospital, but her throat was ruined. In this hospital our Baptist women visited and found the miserable girl. They have given her hope and support and she was removed to Budapest.

My Preference

"I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day;

I'd rather one would walk with me than merely tell the way.

The eye's a better pupil and more willing than the ear;

Fine counsel is confusing, but example's always clear.

The best of all the preachers are the men who live their creeds,

For to see good put in action is what everybody needs.

I soon can learn to do it, if you'll let me see it done.

I can watch your hands in action, but your tongue too fast may run.

The lectures you deliver may be very wise and true;

But I'd rather get my lessons by observing what you do.

I may misunderstand the high advice you give;

But there's no misunderstanding how you act and how you live.

When I see a deed of kindness, I am eager to be kind—

When a weaker brother stumbles, and a strong man stays behind

Just to see if he can help him; then the wish grows strong in me

To become as big and thoughtful as I know that friend to be.

All travelers can witness that the best of guides to-day

Is not the one who tells them, but the one who shows the way.

One good man teaches many; men believe what they behold.

One deed of kindness noticed is worth forty that are told.

Who stands with men of honor, learns to hold his honor dear;

For right living speaks a language which to every one is clear.

Though an able speaker charms me with his eloquence, I say

I'd rather see a sermon than to hear one any day."

ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ!"

Then, in order to do all in our power to spread the gospel, a laymen's movement was inaugurated and four young men were appointed to work for several months during the winter. We could place five men on our field to advantage, but not being able to get trained workers from Germany or America, we did the next best thing in appointing these workers who have already some experience in preaching and believe that, as the churches will sustain them in their efforts by believing prayer, the Lord will bless them and the people to whom they will minister.

And now I will close for this time, and in the name of the Baptist brotherhood

Rose is now twenty years old. She can eat only by means of a tube, but she is strong and healthy. The greatest thing is that she has found Christ and joy in the many brothers and sisters. She is grateful to our Lord that her soul is saved from the horrible night. We hope that through the woman's work we will have many great experiences. We see that the joy message has an effectual meaning.

The Sunday School

During the war our schools were neglected. Now we must begin the work with new force. In this connection I will also tell an episode. In the large town of R. there lives a believing man whose trade is that of shearing horses and goats. After the death of his wife he was willing to marry again, notwithstanding his age. But because of his bad manners he did not easily find a woman his equal. He proposed to one, then to a second, a third, a fourth, a fifth, but no one would be his wife. So he married an unbeliever from the metropolis, and the Baptist meeting dropped him from the membership. But in a few months his wife was reclaimed and became an eager member. Then the man was restored to his place. He was happy about the pardon and decided he would do something. He started a Sunday school in a private place. Seeing its success, he founded in another house a second Sunday school. He was not contented with this and established a third and a fourth. He secured a few work-mates and was industrious among the little people. Through this the parents of the children became acquainted with the work, they came into our meetings and many of them were reclaimed. The chapel also is visited by them. From this we learn two things: That the Sunday school is a proper institution for winning souls; that a simple man who is a horse and goat shearer can also do a good work for the kingdom of God.

The Baptists in Sweden

By C. E. BENANDER

THE readers of THE BAPTIST may know something about Baptists and Baptist work in Sweden. We are, however, under the impression that further information will be appreciated by many, and so we venture to send a message from our country to the brotherhood of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The history of our churches in Sweden is comparatively young. The first church was organized in the year 1848 with six members. It was against the law to embrace Baptist principles and still more so to propagate them. The little flock of baptized believers had therefore to encounter bitter opposition and persecution, as is ever the case in countries where state "churchism" is trying to fetter human souls in perpetual bondage. Paul tells us that the weak things from God are stronger than men, and this truth has been amply illustrated in Swedish Baptist history. The work has survived and spread in spite of all the hostility and the severe measures through which the authorities sought to suppress it. After seventy-four years of mission work our statistics are as follows: Churches 675; membership 61,120; ministers, missionaries and lay preachers 1,273; Sunday schools 1,335; teachers 5,314; scholars 64,716; young people's societies 666; members 29,245; houses of worship 749.

Third Baptist World Congress in Stockholm 1923

Several places have been proposed as suitable localities for the next Baptist World Congress to be held in 1923. Then Stockholm also came under consideration, and intelligence reached our leaders that the brethren of the executive committee of the Baptist World Alliance in the United States and Great Britain, were of the opinion that the capital of Sweden might prove a good place for the convention. The question was brought before the executive committee of the Swedish Baptist Union and after some calculation and deliberation the committee unanimously resolved to advise our Mission Board to extend a formal invitation to the Baptist brotherhood in all the world to meet and hold the third congress in Stockholm. When the Board met in October, the members were unanimous in adopting the resolution proposed by the executive committee. And so a formal invitation was sent to the secretary of the World Alliance, Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, in London, England, and through him it has been extended to the Baptist unions of the different countries in all parts of the world. The date proposed is July 14-19, 1923.

The Baptists in Stockholm are fully aware of the responsibilities and obligations they have taken upon themselves in venturing to invite the congress to be held in their city. But they are intent on doing their very best. Of course there are not such conveniences and accommodations at hand as those available in London and Philadelphia. Still we hope for ways and means to be found so that the delegates from countries near and distant shall obtain tolerable accommodations during their stay in our city. So let our brothers and sisters of the Northern Baptist Convention begin to plan for their journey to Stockholm in July, 1923.

Stockholm and Local Baptist Churches

The city of Stockholm is considered to be one of the finest and most beautifully situated cities in the world. Its five main sections are mostly surrounded by water, and the scenery is quite picturesque. The city has about 420,000 inhabitants. There are a number of good hotels and restaurants. The street-car service is well developed, and taxis can be had at moderate prices.

In the city there are seven Baptist churches with a total membership of 4,595. Then there are four suburban churches numbering in all 285 members. There is no Baptist church building large enough to accommodate the sessions of the proposed congress but we are confident that our Congregational neighbors will place their largest church at the disposal of the congress. This church, "Emanuelskyrkan," has seats for 2,400 people.

Historical Relation Between the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Baptists in Sweden

Ever since the American Baptist Missionary Union took up mission work in Sweden in the year 1866, there has been a close and most brotherly relation between the Northern Baptists in the United States and their brethren in Sweden. Substantial aid was given by the former to the few and weak churches in our country, which were then struggling for their existence under adverse circumstances of every kind. A number of evangelists were supported who went with the gospel to the various provinces, and the Spirit of God worked through the word to the conversion of thousands of men and women. The converts were baptized in great numbers, and new churches were organized, not a few every year.

Baptist work in Sweden would not have spread and developed so well and soundly as has been the case, however, if our American brothers in the faith had not through their missionary zeal and generosity undertaken to establish and support a theological seminary in Stockholm as early as in 1866. From this one Bethel Seminary upwards of 600 young men have gone out properly educated for their vocation as pastors, missionaries, and evangelists.

The veteran missionary, Rev. K. O. Broady, who has been the able and faithful servant of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society ever since he was sent from Boston to his native country in 1866, is now in his ninetieth year. For forty years he was the talented and successful president of the Bethel Seminary, and during the succeeding sixteen years he has lectured to the students as health and strength have permitted him. In spite of his age he has taught a class once a week during the last fall term. The students have gathered in his room every Thursday at one o'clock. And with remarkable vigor of mind he has imparted instruction from memory, his eyesight being entirely gone.

Foreign Mission Work

The general work gradually became self-supporting, and has been so for over twenty years. Not only that, but the Baptist Union of Sweden is carrying on foreign work in China, the Congo, Finland and up to this year, in Spain. This last mentioned field has now been handed over to the Southern Baptist Convention of the United States. Besides, there is an independent mission society, organized about twenty-five years ago in Orebro, which has sent missionaries to India, Brazil, China, and the Congo. This society too draws contributions from our churches. It has also started a school of its own for the training of preachers and missionaries.

The Bethel Seminary is still to a certain extent dependent on the support of the A. B. F. M. S., and we are exceedingly thankful for being sustained till we can have all the needed funds provided by our churches.

Being so largely the fruit of American missionary efforts and offerings, it is but natural that the Baptists in Sweden should feel themselves one with their brethren in America. And our experience is that mutual contact deepens our interest in each other and tightens the bond of fellowship.

In August, 1920, President Emory Hunt, and Secretary J. H. Franklin, honored us with a visit shortly after the conference of the Baptist World Alliance Committee in London. The visit of these two worthy representatives of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society gave us much encouragement, and did much to intensify the close relations already existing between Baptists in America and Sweden. A few days before last Christmas Secretary Lippard favored us with a brief visit. He too cheered us by his presence, and manifested the same spirit of devotion to Christ and his cause and of love to the brethren which we are wont to find in the representatives from the headquarters of the A. B. F. M. S.

Laymen's Activity

By FRED W. FREEMAN

General Chairman Laymen's Council, N. B. C.

AS I interpret this movement the laymen are recognizing anew their responsibility in the matter of our denomination and are trying to find a way to meet the responsibility and make a worthwhile contribution to the Kingdom, consisting not only of money but of time, personality and service.

Basic Principles

1. Our service is to be strictly voluntary.
2. We will seek to cooperate with and through the approved organization and machinery of the denomination.
3. The laymen's organization, as such, will not seek to control the policies of the churches or the denomination in the realm of controversy. Each man will be free to express his own judgment and conviction on all such matters, as an individual, without prejudice or embarrassment to his relations to the laymen's organization.

Objectives

1. Our immediate objective is to put our whole force behind the movement to pay our debts.
2. Our permanent objective will be to get our men to recognize and practice Christian stewardship of life, talent, time, opportunity and money, and to express that stewardship in money by setting apart as a minimum a tithe of their incomes for the extension of the Kingdom through the churches, and to organize in each church a stewardship league for the study of the subject in all its phases.

Our Method

1. For the present campaign we will seek to parallel the general program of the Board of Promotion by enlisting volunteer laymen in each church, association or district, and state, who will work in cooperation with the Promotion organization and Continuation Campaign Organization of the women, to the end that every member in every church shall be reached, and it will also be our purpose and hope to present the urgency of the present crisis so as to get the largest possible return.
2. After the waging of the present campaign is over we should take up the whole matter of permanent policy and method and find a way to serve our day and generation according to the will of God, so as not to compete with or overlap any plan now in force in the way of brotherhoods or other men's organizations which are bearing fruit in the same general field.

Our Difficulties and Necessities

1. To reach all of our constituency, but we must do it in spite of our difficulty. WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.
2. The indifference of those people when we reach them. We must remove the indifference. WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.
3. There are disagreements. We must agree to disagree on some points, but WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.
4. Mistakes have been made. Granted that is so. WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.
5. Some want a change of policy. This may be wise or otherwise, but WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS before we reach that question.

6. We do not agree on all points as to all the objects. There is plenty of room for each man to find his own object to support, but WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.

7. It is possible that disagreements arise more from want of understanding than otherwise, but, whatever may be the fact, WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS and then find out the basis of our misunderstanding.

8. All questions must be properly related to the main point and that is, Baptists, the fact, WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS THEIR DEBTS.

9. Times are hard and sacrifices will be necessary. Granted, but it is the greater reason why WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.

10. The integrity of our denomination is at stake and can be vindicated only by PAYING OUR DEBTS.

11. The finest expression of fraternity and brotherhood will be made in meeting this supreme challenge of the hour. WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.

12. The demonstration of a free democracy to function cooperatively and successfully is involved in this campaign. WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.

13. The integrity of our people to our Lord, who "paid it all" for us, is involved. WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.

14. "We are able, let us go up and possess the land." WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.

15. "We can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us." WE MUST PAY OUR DEBTS.

To the Laymen of the Churches of The Northern Baptist Convention:

The principles, purposes and program for which Baptists stand, and for the propagation of which our churches stand, represent the wisdom and authority of our Lord as expressed in his great commission and final word to his followers.

To these principles we have given our consent and pledged our loyalty and devotion by the very act of joining our churches, and have renewed our vows of loyalty on every occasion in which we have participated in a covenant meeting. One of the plainest teachings in the New Testament covers the subject of stewardship.

The crisis now confronting our denomination, which is real and overshadowing, is traceable directly to the failure of our laymen to fairly face their obligation and do their duty, even approximately, under the most primary teaching of the New Testament, or as governed by the simplest demands of fraternity of sharing in the common tasks and obligations of our churches, individually and cooperatively, through our denominational boards and societies. The seriousness of the situation is such as to call for the immediate and hearty response of our laymen in all our churches.

The Laymen's Council has been called into being by some of our laymen who have been in positions where they could not avoid seeing and feeling the urgency of the situation. The pressure of the present situation calls for devoted spirit and heroic action by us no less emphatically than did the issues of the world war call for the patriotic and heroic action of all true-hearted Americans. Only by such attitude and action can we protect the good name of our denomination and continue the work committed to us. Shall we in an hour like this prove by our actions and our failure to act that we are better Americans than we are Christians, and that we are more loyal to our country than to our Lord?

I am enclosing a brief interpretation of the principles, objectives, methods and difficulties, and the present and permanent objectives of the Laymen's Council. May we not have your vital interest and cordial support in these plans?

Sincerely and fraternally,
FRED W. FREEMAN,
General Chairman.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE CHURCHES OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION:

The Laymen's Council of Northern Baptists is set for the reviving of a sense of responsibility of laymen in things vital in the affairs of the churches and the denomination generally. We recognize that in all such matters the pastor is God's man for leadership.

The layman, when he is alive to the situation, ought to be the pastor's natural ally and comrade. The fellowship between the right sort of a pastor and the right sort of a layman is one of the tenderest and most vital in the affairs of men. The Laymen's Council hopes to help develop the right sort of laymen and rightly relate them to the right sort of pastors, and thus develop together the right sort of program in all the churches. In this way we hope "to be blessed and to become a blessing" to every pastor and church, and consequently to everything for which the churches stand and ought to stand, individually and cooperatively.

I am handing you a copy of a brief statement, in which I have tried to interpret the spirit, purpose and program of the Laymen's Council of Northern Baptists in relation to our present denominational crisis. We covet your sympathetic interest and hearty cooperation in this effort to revive, develop and direct the use of the time, talent, money and personality of our men in this period of great need and great opportunity and consequent great responsibility, in the affairs of the Kingdom of our Lord.

Sincerely and fraternally,

FRED W. FREEMAN,
General Chairman.

In different parts of the world Christian people use various kinds of currency with which to pay their church dues. In Africa brass rods are used. The most unique currency is that used in Alaska. The natives in Stephen's Village gave this past year one muskrat per member for the support of the mission. At the prevailing price of fur this was generous giving. They also gave one fish per member to help the missionary on his journey. The fish were donated as dog food.—Presbyterian Magazine.

Are We Measuring Up?

A letter recently received at the headquarters of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society in New York says: "We've got to count on the home folks, under God, to measure up."

IN THE grave financial situation that confronts Northern Baptists at the present time, are we doing our utmost as individuals to lead the denomination on to victory? Are we, the Northern Baptists of the United States, keeping pace in this campaign with our missionaries on foreign fields, those who are giving their lives, as well as their financial offerings?

Are we measuring up to the following standards, set by our missionaries:

Each missionary in Rangoon, Burma, is giving one month's salary to this campaign.

A letter from F. D. Phinney, their mission treasurer, tells how simply and wholeheartedly the action came about as soon as the great need was known. On Sunday morning, Nov. 27, before daybreak, a cablegram was received in Rangoon from the New York headquarters, telling the missionaries that during the first six months of the fiscal year, the receipts of the societies had been but one-half of the receipts of the previous year, and that, if no improvement took place, a most serious retrenchment would have to be made after May 1. On Tuesday evening, at the mission prayer meeting, after much prayer:

"It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us" to give from our salaries a self-denial donation to the debts of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, equal to one month's basal salary for each missionary present, which donation might be spread over two years. The action was spontaneous and unanimous."

Missionary Contributes $650

This note comes from a missionary who has given thirty-three years of service to the society, and who, during that time, has been constantly putting not only herself, but her money, into the work:

"I wonder if the yearly accounts from our field are in your hands. If so, you will see that we were obliged to use more money by about $650 than we had, for the chapel. I have advanced this, and will contribute it."

The following is from one of our missionaries who has seen but three years of service:

"Since the cable telling of the approaching financial crisis came, we have all been very thoughtful and prayerful over it, and I believe much personal heart searching has been the result.

"I for one want to make some personal sacrifice and am ready to do this to the limit, if only our work may go on unimpaired. I asked our mission treasurer if he would place my salary at the old figure again. He said he thought at the next conference many would doubtless voluntarily give up the last increase granted to us. Things are not going down—such things as food, servants' wages, railroad fares, etc.—but we can be comfortable with a smaller allowance.

"We must prove to ourselves that we are capable of sacrifice, thus retaining our spiritual self respect, and giving our souls a chance to grow. I believe that the vast majority of us here would be willing to suffer any personal discomforts, provided that our work may not suffer. Our sincere sympathy and prayer is with and for you who are in the 'high places' at home."

The following note from a missionary wife accompanied a gift of $900, for the Jubilee Fund:

"For more than a month I have been trying to find time to write you about our desire to add Rs 3,000 ($900) to the Jubilee Fund of the Woman's Society, asking that it may be used in building a hostel for the girls of the A. B. M. School in Taunggyi. The women's committee and committee of reference have just recommended the building of such a hostel, provided it can be financed from the field out here.

"My husband and I talked of making this gift for about a year, and I am sorry that we did not write earlier so that you might have had this bit of encouragement from the field during the time of your Jubilee meetings."

Some Typical Brotherhoods

Calvary Brotherhood, Washington

By ROBERT H. McNEILL

THE Brotherhood of Calvary Church, Washington, D. C., has seized opportunities to fill in where other agencies of the church have been deficient. It has complemented other organizations. In a sense it has been an agency for things which had to be done but which the other organizations of the church did not properly perform.

To instance some of the things done by the Brotherhood, I would make special reference to the celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Samuel H. Greene, now deceased. Distinguished guests addressed this meeting, and no person present will ever forget the uplift of it. It revived the church and put a new spirit of civic and religious service into every man present.

The Calvary Brotherhood has specialized in great annual meetings attended by the men of the church, at which United States senators, members of the House and members of the Cabinet have spoken on the outstanding subjects of the day.

Among the distinguished men who have addressed the Brotherhood meetings within the last two years may be mentioned Dr. John Timothy Stone of Chicago, Dr. Aitchison, Director of the General Board of Promotion, Dr. J. Foster Wilcox, the president of our national Baptist brotherhood, Senator Herrold of Ohio, Brigadier-general Sawyer, the president's physician and others equally distinguished.

Calvary Church has the honor of having as members of the church and congregation, the president of the United States and the secretary of state. This has crowded the church so that the present auditorium lacks capacity to seat the throngs who would come to hear Dr. Wm. S. Abernethy, the beloved pastor who came to us from the First Church of Kansas City, and whose sermons are attracting national attention by reason of their profound thought, fine spirit and effective delivery.

A great duty is on the men of Calvary Church to aid effectively in taking care of the crowds seeking to hear our pastor, and this duty requires the men to do everything possible to make the church more useful to the capital of the nation and to the nation itself. We are planning great things for the future, and the Brotherhood will aid effectively.

At a recent meeting of the Brotherhood, the writer, when retiring as its president, proposed the following things as objectives for the Brotherhood for the ensuing year:

1. A public reception to be tendered our Brothers Harding and Hughes, the president of the United States and secretary of state, respectively, as a recognition of our appreciation of their signal services to the peoples of the world since they assumed national power.

2. Consideration of the question of aiding the trustees in completing the church budget.

3. The creation of a compact organization of our men, inclusive of the Vaughn and Kinnear Classes, to stand behind the pastor in his ambition to see our new auditorium built this year.

4. To aid all the other agencies of the church in bringing into closer and more fraternal intercourse a great number of our men of the church and congregation, who are now not much more than names on our church rolls or seeming strangers to most of us, to the end that we may have, not only a bigger church, but one whose spirit of brotherhood will help to comfort and heal the broken hearts of men and women wherever the gladness of our Christianity does not now prevail.

One other vital thing should be mentioned. The Brotherhood at Calvary, as well as the brotherhoods all over the country, should learn more about the splendid service rendered last summer by Dr. J. Foster Wilcox in establishing on Cranberry Lake in New York State, "Camp Oswegatchie" for Baptist boys. The writer of this article was present at this camp and had a son at it during last summer, and can speak with personal knowledge. May not other camps of a similar kind be provided in other parts of the country in order that this essential service in building the character of our boys, and their bodies also, may be more widespread in its results?

The Morse Brotherhood, Malden, Mass.

THE Morse Brotherhood of the First Church of Malden, Mass., has been in existence for a number of years and is one of the most productive organizations of the church. Its main feature is the Bible class which is an integral part of the Bible school of the church, meeting at the noon hour on Sundays, the time of the meeting of the school. The attendance of men is running about 200, but the attendance is just now responding to a campaign of advertising so that there is an increase every Sunday. The advertising consists of attractive cards mailed each week to a large number of men in and out of the church. These cards are made as striking in matter and in printing as possible and a new one is prepared each week. The men are active in soliciting the attendance of others. We shall doubtless double the present attendance in a few weeks. Just now the pastor is the teacher, usually the best plan.

The Brotherhood has a full complement of committees through which various lines of activity are maintained. There is a monthly gathering with a supper. Each year there is a large supper at which the boys of the two troupes of Boy Scouts of the church and other boys are the guests of the brotherhood. The annual Ladies' Night supper and entertainment is always a largely attended and successful affair. The Brotherhood backs boys' work in the church with money and workers. It also has gospel teams which go out to various churches and other places, holding evangelistic services. There is a bowling team representing the Brotherhood in the inter-church league. The Brotherhood also lends valuable aid to the Y. M. C. A. During the present season of widespread unemployment the Brotherhood has found work for many men out of work. We are about to fit up a large club room in the Parish House with a weekly meeting which will combine a short talk on some subject of practical interest or a concert with games and informal social intercourse.

Tremont Temple Brotherhood

By D. M. LOCKROW

ONE of the leading forces for righteousness in Boston is the great Brotherhood in Tremont Temple Church. It is under the leadership of Rev. David M. Lockrow, who has been connected with it for nearly eleven years. It was founded by him under the direction of Rev. Cortland Myers. Mr. Lockrow devotes all of his time to this great enterprise and so far as known he is the only man engaged by a single church as director of men's work. This Brotherhood is composed of men from all walks of life representing nearly all the professions and trades, business men and students. It is made up of men eighteen years and upwards. It is an interesting thing to see the men gather in the main temple at the noon hour to engage in the study of the Bible. This is the principal activity of the class. Some great Bible theme is discussed, the men readily taking part in questions and answers. It does not discuss current topics nor every-day themes except as they are related to some Bible truth. Occasionally, for about fifteen minutes, some one presents state or national affairs as a prelude to the lesson. A great song service, lasting about fifteen minutes, is conducted by Mr. Nelson Raymond of the Lotus Male Quartet.

The Brotherhood takes an active part in all church activities. During the revival conducted by Dr. J. Frank Norris it furnished ushers and personal workers and is conducting a vigorous "follow-up" campaign. Conversions occur in its midst. This year it has a goal of at least 100 men for Christ and his church. It takes an active part in the general reforms being carried on in the city of Boston—anti-saloon league, Sabbath observance, suppression of vice, state and national reform bureau. It contributes to all of

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

TO GATHER a few representative Baptists together from the North and the South and to let them discuss in an atmosphere of simple friendliness some of the big questions now before Baptists, was the idea of Dr. James M. Wood, President of Stephens College, Columbia, Mo. You have all read the admirable accounts of the conference given in THE BAPTIST. My purpose in this paper is to discuss briefly some of the high lights in one of the most fruitful and delightful conferences ever held.

The public meetings were all delightful, but I can mention only one, that by common consent set the high water mark for the conference—the evening session when before a student audience of 700 young men and women, Dean Shailer Mathews and Dr. George M. Truett were the two speakers. Dr. Mathews spoke with convincing sincerity on the conviction of his soul regarding the deity of Jesus Christ. He spoke with the authority of a scholar and out of the life experiences of a Christian. Following him, Dr. Truett gave a poignantly powerful presentation of the claims of Christ to the lordship of their lives. At the close of the two addresses, which were listened to with breathless attention, three young men from the law school of the university sought personal interviews with the speakers.

The conclusions reached after the discussion on educational matters deserve special notice. It was urged that we "encourage confidence in these schools when they are loyal to Christ and his truth, not condemning them on unfounded rumors and uninformed accusations, but only on established facts ascertained in an orderly and Christian way, and then correct them. Our schools constitute a most vital part of our most precious machinery in carrying out our Saviour's world-will. They are worth correcting when they are wrong and are worth saving to the best equipment, to the largest confidence, patronage and support of our people. We need a Baptist conscience on education as true to form and as deep in conviction as the Baptist conscience on our distinctive doctrines. We must educationalize our evangelism and evangelize our education, and put them both over for Christ in the same great spirit and fashion."

The report further recommends that we preach on education, talk up our schools, publish their merits, advantages and products. We hope very soon to publish a list of teachers, the men who are leading our denomination, and show how these men are the products of our denominational schools.

Why can we not take the suggestion about preaching about education seriously and have a Sunday set apart in which each pastor shall earnestly seek to implant an ambition for education in the hearts of his girls and boys? One Baptist layman has helped over 500 boys to secure a college training. There are men and women in every congregation who will furnish the necessary aid to poor but ambitious and worth-while boys and girls.

Personal evangelism is stressed in the report. Surely nothing is more needed than that each saved soul shall seek out others to whom to tell the Gospel. If all were to do this, the walls of our churches would not contain the multitudes who would be drawn to them.

Perhaps the keenest interest in the conference centered in the discussion regarding the need of a new confession of faith. Dr. Mullins' statement in opening the discussion was both clear and masterly. He said that any group of Baptists had a right at any time to formulate a confession of faith, but that no group had the right to impose it as a test or creedal statement upon other Baptists. He held that the historic position of Baptists regarding voluntary action held in regard to confessions of faith. Within these limits he recognized the need of restatements whenever conditions seemed to demand it.

After spirited and harmonious discussion it was voted upon motion by Judge Freeman that:

Whereas, in the discussion of the subject, "What Is the Proper Purpose of a Baptist Confession, and Should Baptists Have One?" in addresses made by President E. Y. Mullins of the Southern Baptist Convention and President Helen E. Montgomery of the Northern Baptist Convention, and discussion following said addresses, it was discovered that there appeared to be approximate and substantial agreement on the doctrines and polity as set out in the fraternal address of Southern Baptists signed by E. Y. Mullins, J. B. Gambrell, Z. T. Cody, L. R. Scarborough and William Ellyson, and whereas it is believed by us that a statement of Baptist doctrine and polity setting forth briefly the fundamentals of our faith and the peculiar beliefs and observances which characterize and distinguish us is both timely and desirable and will make for clarity of understanding among the different groups of Baptists and will serve to promote unity of thought and feeling and foster fraternal relations between the groups of Baptists everywhere, and especially between the constituency of the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions, and also serve to place ourselves properly before other Christian bodies as to the doctrine and polity we hold;

Therefore be it resolved by this conference that the presidents respectively of the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions be requested to bring this resolution to the attention of each convention at its next meeting, with the suggestion that a joint committee of eighteen (nine from each convention) be appointed, who shall be charged with the duty of preparing a statement of faith and polity briefly embodying the basic and fundamental principles and beliefs of Baptists, and further that we suggest that the presidents of the conventions be ex officio members of the committee in addition to the eighteen above suggested."

This brings the question of a joint confession of faith in an orderly way before the two conventions. If they so choose, such a committee may be appointed and may bring in a report which would be in a real sense representative of the general beliefs that are widely held by Baptists the country over. Such a committee ought to be truly representative. It should include in its membership the conservative and the man of liberal views, the middle of the road man and the man of passionate convictions. By the blessing of God such a committee, meeting in personal fellowship, in prayer and earnest purpose to do the will of God, might work out a confession of faith that should adequately represent the denomination.

The imagination kindles at the thought of a great statement recommended to the churches for adoption by both conventions. It might well be that Canadian and English Baptists and the struggling Baptist democracies of Europe would also concur, and that we might have the statement of our faith made in our own time for our own generation.

Englewood Church, Chicago, Celebrates Golden Jubilee

FEW churches in the Middle West have had a richer history than the Englewood Church of Chicago which was organized on Feb. 8, 1872, and which celebrated its golden jubilee in a series of notable services lasting from Feb. 5 to Feb. 8. The addresses were all of an unusually fine order, the attendance uniformly large and there was developed, in the words of Pastor Geo. R. Stair, "a wonderfully fine spirit for service which makes all hopeful for the next fifty years."

The formal services began on Sunday morning, Feb. 5, with a sermon by the pastor on the subject, "The Story of the Years," although there had preceded this on Wednesday evening a prayer meeting of remarkable power. In connection with the Sunday-morning service eighteen were baptized and the hand of fellowship extended to sixty-five. The total number of new members received during the jubilee will be over eighty. There were present at the Sunday-school session, which had an attendance of 1,431, many who had attended in the earlier years and from among these Mr. E. R. Lewis, the first superintendent, and others made addresses. The school is now in charge of Mr. W. G. Brimson, who has been superintendent for a period of twenty-eight years, a service longer than that of all his predecessors combined. An afternoon mass meeting for men was addressed by Mr. T. P. Day, of Marblehead, Mass., a former secretary of the Englewood Y. M. C. A. and founder of Class 17, a notable men's class. The past presidents had charge of the B. Y. P. U. service. In the evening, to a congregation which almost taxed the capacity of the building, Dr. Myron W. Haynes, pastor when the present building was erected, spoke on the subject, "The Message of the Church."

On Monday evening a historical pageant "Scribe, Father Time and Twelve Golden Hours," written for the occasion by Mrs. Edw. Harner, a member of the Sunday school, was presented by over 100 members of the church and Sunday school, the aim being to show graphically the entire history of the church.

Thursday evening was Community and Denominational Night when, after Scripture reading by Rev. Chas. T. Holman, prayer by Dr. R. N. Van Doren, and felicitations from Dr. C. Claud Travis, pastor of the Englewood Methodist Church, who spoke for the community churches, and Dr. Benj. Otto, who spoke for the Baptists of Chicago, there was an address by Dr. H. Francis Perry on the subject, "The Church we Need."

The women of the church arranged a program for Wednesday afternoon and provided one of the pleasantest meetings of the jubilee. Mrs. Julius A. Johnson gave a "Backward Look," and this was illustrated by living tableaux. Mrs. C. D. Eulette and Mrs. Washington Laycock spoke on the subject, "Look Around," and Mrs. R. P. Fales gave a "Forward Look."

In the evening the Golden Jubilee service proper was held. After prayer by Dr. J. F. Bartlett, there were reminiscences by Mr. E. R. Lewis, the only surviving charter member, and Mr. J. C. Denison, representing other early members, after which there were read by Mr. Brimson, chairman of the committee in charge of the jubilee, letters and greetings from other absent members. The speaker of the evening was to have been Dr. Smith Thomas Ford, for fifteen years the beloved pastor. Illness prevented his being there, but he was most ably represented by Mrs. Ford, who spoke in his place. The service closed with baptism and a reception.

The Englewood Church was organized at the home of E. R. Lewis on Feb. 8, 1872, with seven charter members. On Feb. 29 the Sunday school was organized, and in July provision made for the regular financial support of the church. On Dec. 18 the first Ladies' Aid Society was established with Mrs. I. J. Nicholes as president. At the end of a year, the members numbered twenty; at the end of the second year seventy-three; in 1888 there were 278 on the roll which number had grown to 533 in 1890, to 646 in 1891 and to 1,617 at the present time. The Sunday school has now an active membership of 1,426 and there has recently been purchased ground west of the main building on which it is planned to erect a suitable structure for Sunday-school and other church purposes. The two houses now on this land are in constant use. On April 16, 1916, the church bought the chapel at 4412 Wentworth Avenue, where it conducts a mission. The first church building was erected in 1873 and the present stone building, of which a picture will appear in THE BAPTIST of next week, in Sept., 1890. During its fifty years, the church has been served by nine pastors and the school by thirteen superintendents. "The fifty years since 1872," says the jubilee booklet, "have made of the handful of organizers a multitude. No one can measure the influence which this church has had for Christ. No field of Christian endeavor but has been aided by members. From this church have gone forth ministers and missionaries who have ably presented the Master's cause. Indeed its name is known and honored wherever Baptists gather, in this land, and in many lands across the seas."

WHO KILLED LOVE

Who killed Love?

"I," said Slander.

"I," said Bitterness.

"I," said Scorn.

"I," said Hate.

"I," said Revenge.

"Not so," spoke Criticism, in a sharp, cutting voice. "I am the slayer of Love. I, Criticism, killed Love.

"Whether you doubt it, or whether you believe it, you are only my creatures. You sprang from me. I placed in the hands of mortals my arrows and though they aimed them at others, I directed the aim against Love enthroned within themselves; these poisoned arrows sometimes grow into the hideous creatures that you are, with which, finally, I kill Love.

"Strange beings—these humans," soliloquized Criticism; "with Love enthroned in them, they destroy her with my weapons. As they aim these darts at fellow-humans they wreck Love's beautiful self within themselves; for the darts strike not so much the object at which they are aimed, as that they return as a destructive boomerang.

"Strangest of beings, too," Criticism continued in his soliloquy, "are those who are born of the Spirit. Now it is beyond my comprehension how these Spirit-filled mortals so readily accept from my hand the arrows I direct against them by their own hand, and which slay their most precious possession! Whe-e-wee! How those arrows do fly! I have filled the world thick with them. The air is black with their crossing and criss-crossing. They bend and twist and break in their mad flight to reach their object; and hardest of all to understand, these Spirit-filled mortals seem to relish the flinging. Not knowing the Spirit myself, I cannot fathom where he abides when those whom he fills with his presence use my weapons. He surely must absent himself when I, or these hideous creatures of mine, Scorn and Hate and Bitterness, creep in. I have heard it said he has nothing in common with us. This Spirit has formed the creatures he fills with his presence into a body of believers he calls his church. This is the 'apple of his eye.' This is where I love best to work. Against this structure I use my most poisonous darts. If I can get these believers to use my arrows against each other, and against this living structure being builded, I can slay Love within them, and change this living structure into a cold, dead, lifeless thing.

"But who comes here? Some of these very same humans. Look! they are mourning the prostrate form of Love, the most beautiful of all the graces given them. They are weeping over her; now they lift their hands in prayer for help for her restoration upon her throne.

And look again! there must be an unseen presence—this same Spirit, no doubt—for see! Love stirs—she arises and rules again within the humans!

"Come, foul brood of mine, let us depart,—we cannot touch Love when these mortals call upon the Spirit to make invulnerable her throne in their hearts."

MORE ON REVIVAL CAMPAIGNS

With the report of the Federated Council of Churches of Pittsburgh expressing disapproval of the Billy Sunday and Gipsy Smith type of revival campaigns, it seems timely that a few words be added in support of church revival campaigns.

It is quite generally agreed among our pastors that each church is in need of a revival campaign as part of the year's program. It is also recognized that this campaign may take on different forms, and be led by pastor, evangelist or layman. One church can enter such a campaign whenever local conditions warrant it. Other churches can cooperate, or all the churches can unite and make a union effort. A campaign should not be entered into with simply a view to having a successful campaign, but with a view of accomplishing for the church and community that for which it was inaugurated.

I firmly believe in church campaigns. If the church is good enough to worship in all during the year, why then is it not good enough for the campaign itself? If the church building is too small to hold the crowds, nothing will build it quicker than having so many people that you cannot get them into the church.

Nothing will revive and encourage your church folks or bring in the unsaved quicker than such signs of life, and such working of the Spirit of God in the church and congregation. Any nearby church will be glad to throw open its doors to accommodate the overflow meetings. And what if the meetings continue to overflow from church to church until the revival campaign overflows the whole town? Isn't that the kind of a revival that the church wants?

The brass-band, the big chorus choir and the crowds may not be so large, but since none of these conditions exist in normal times, what will they lend to the actual work of the church when the campaign is over, especially when staged in a building remote and apart from the church?

In a church campaign prayer can be offered, heard and answered just the same; songs of praise can give as much expression of the soul, and the Gospel preaching will be the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Then, when the campaign is over, the revival fires can be kept burning in the same church building, with the same pastor preaching from the same pulpit the same old Gospel message. The same chorus can continue to sing with the same music. The church members and the converts will be surrounded by the same friends and enjoy the same Christian fellowship that started in the revival campaign.

HOW MEET THE SITUATION

We have reached a crisis in our missionary work, and it must be met. Our faithful brethren across the water have sensed the seriousness of the situation and in a truly sacrificial manner responded by a voluntary reduction of their all too meager stipends. We brethren in the ministry on this side, who often must set the pace before our people when special demands are upon us, can in a way answer the call and help to relieve the burden that rests upon our society, so keeping our cherished missionary forces intact. The writer has a proposition to make. It is of something not easy, but by God's grace some may feel it can be done. He would like to be one of a hundred or more of our home pastors—we be brethren all—who will give at once and to obviate borrowing money from the banks to meet our obligations abroad one week's salary, whatever it may be. The pastor's wife—she should always be consulted—says, "Do it now." Very well, herewith follows one contribution, to start it going. To the aid of His cause and the glory of his name.

The Bible Self-Authoritative

Dr. E. Y. Mullins says: "The Scriptures speak with authority, as does no other literature in the world. This authoritative note which rings so clear in the Bible is not due to anything external to itself. No court made it authoritative by decree. No church council made it so by decision. No pope made it so by hurling anathemas at those who denied it. The early church councils in the second, third and fourth centuries did not make the Bible authoritative. They simply recognized the authority of the Book itself. The canon of Scripture under God took care of itself. It was inevitable that this dynamic and mighty literature would come together in a vital and organic unity since it was all created by one common life and power of God. Behind this sufficiency and authoritativeness of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments is their inspiration."

The Chimney Corner

What's in a Name?

EVIDENTLY a great deal more than the editor of the Chimney Corner innocently supposed! For in the morning's mail comes a letter from a Mrs. Taft who most assuredly is not the Mrs. Taft whom we unceremoniously clapped into our poem of January 21 because she happened to rhyme with "daft."

*There was a lady—Mrs. Taft—
Thought Baptist women had gone daft:
How can they raise two million dollars
From housewives and from youthful scholars?"*

*Give her the answer she deserves
In clever poems, O Young Reserves!*

Doubtless you recall the delectable rhymes from our Young Reserves which this "poem" evoked; but lest any of you think that the mythological Mrs. Taft invented for poesy's sake is Mrs. George Wheaton Taft of the Central District Board or her sister-in-law or any other Mrs. Baptist Taft we hereby break forth into print to assure all their friends that the Continuation Campaign has no more ardent supporters than ladies by the name of Taft! See what a dangerous thing it is to be a poet! And how nearly we ruined the missionary standing of these good ladies and imperiled the smooth progress of the Continuation Campaign champions—yet, suppose we had dubbed our poetical divinity with one of the following pictorial names that rhyme with "daft," who knows but that all over the map astounded matrons bearing these very appellations would have raised their hands in shocked protest at such public versification? Lest we blunder again we leave it to your judgment to substitute the proper cognomen, for example:

1. "Mrs. Graft"—which would have shown so plainly how this sister was inclined to hold back more than any Christian should that all good Baptists would have cried: "That must be Sapphira Graft, my dear; such a tightwad! Always declaring she's given every cent she has to give! You'll recall she married Ananias, and he's just like her." (Let us hope that in April, 1922, these namesakes of an earlier couple will not parallel their sad fate. We fancy there might not be undertakers enough to go around.)

2. "Mrs. Raft"—people living on rafts resent having others climb on board out of the water; it upsets a nicely balanced condition; one gets an instant picture of a raft cautiously tied up to some bank (a capital way to get interest, by the way!) to see how they stand. We suggest that if a tenth of the cargo were given to those floundering in dire straits all around them, not only could they float very safely, but the "rafters" themselves need not worry about adjustments.

3. "Mrs. Waft"—Here we would have one of those spicy, breezy souls, who, on reading the Young Reserve jingles in THE BAPTIST for January 21 would have begun practicing the third verse of "Greenland's Icy Mountains"—"Waft, waft ye winds his story"—by giving the where-withal for this wafting until the Continuation Campaign had spread the King's highway from pole to pole.

4. "Mrs. Shaft"—a deep lady! whose very name would continually remind her of William Carey's remark that underneath heathendom lay a gold mine: "I will go down if you will hold the ropes." Mrs. Baptist Shaft would see how she could be a channel of world blessing in 1922.

5. "Mrs. Draft"—and this is our favorite choice of name for the lady to rhyme with the word daft. For she would, we think, read the children's poems and the little article preceding them called "They Have Faith in Her" and then she would draw a "sight draft" so that our mission boards, home and foreign, could send the money to work for her in the neediest field. (We have a notion that she is related by marriage to the Unknown-Man-Who-Gave - Money - To - Be - Used - Wherever - It - Was - Needed. You read about him on page 644 of December Missions didn't you?)

The Other Half of a Christian

I AM the Other Half of a Christian. Yet when men handle me I seem to be only a bit of green paper or a circle of shining metal—

Nevertheless, I am the Christian's Alter Ego;

For do I not represent all the hours of the days in which he worked?

Do I not represent the muscles that plied the task which was set him?

Do I not represent the brain that directed his task?

Do I not represent the skill that made both his brain and his muscles merit higher and still higher payment?

Ah, yes, I am that Alter Ego which the toiler calls wages the employe calls salary
the professional calls fee
the stay-at-home calls allowance—

I am the Christian's daily duties transmuted into money:

So many dollars of me representing so many hours-days-and-weeks of "him!"

And lo, I show you a strange sight,
For when the Christian goes up to the house of the Lord to worship

Should he leave his Other Half at home? Should he fervently he quotes the verse:

"Thou shalt love the Lord Thy God with all thy heart (consecrate your affections) with all thy soul (consecrate your aspirations) with all thy strength (consecrate your employments) with all thy mind (consecrate your education)

And thy neighbor as thyself" (demonstrate your practical Christianity)

And I am the Other Half of this Christian. When men handle me I seem to be only a bit of green paper and a circle of shining metal:

Wages, salary, fees, allowance—mere money;

Time, energy, skill made tangible and pleasant for the use of man.

So how can he love God with all his heart if he does not share his Alter Ego, affectionately?

How can he love God with all his soul if one half of him aspires while the Other Half lurks evasively in some safe deposit box?

How can he love God with all his strength if his energies are bent in piling up and spending still more Alter Egos for his own enjoyment only?

Lifters and Leaners

THERE are two kinds of people on earth today,

Just two kinds of people, no more, I say;
Not the rich and the poor, for to count a man's wealth

You must first know the state of his conscience and health.

Not the humble and proud, for in life's little span

Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.

Not the happy and sad, for the swift-flying years

Bring each man his laughter and each man his tears.

No; the two kinds of people on earth I mean

Are the people who lift and the people who lean.

Wherever you go you will find the world's masses

Are always divided in just the two classes.
And oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,

There is always one lifter to twenty who lean.

In which class are you? Are you easing the load

Of overtaxed lifters who toll down God's road?

Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?

How can he love God with all his mind if he evades the skillful planning of a budget that would tithe his Alter Ego with enthusiasm?

How can he love his neighbor as himself if he does not see the New World Movement as his Alter Ego going into all the world, preaching the Gospel to every creature?

My Lady of The Million Airts

PERHAPS she even lives in the same house with you, this Lady of a Million Airts. Anyhow you know her, for it is she who is always saying: "Oh, if I only had a million dollars, what gifts I would give! Think of it—a tenth of a million dollars would be a hundred thousand dollars! Oh, the New World Movement would go up by leaps and bounds if I had my way!"

And I think she means it.

Nevertheless she makes us recall the interesting banter between Sandy and Mac Gregor:

"Sandy," said Mac Gregor, "if ye had ten cows, wad ye gie ane o' them to the Laird?"

"Aye, that I wad!" cried Sandy with conviction.

"And if ye had ten horses, wad ye gie ane o' them to the Laird?"

"Ah, Mac Gregor mon, that I wad!"

"And if ye had ten pigs, wad ye gie ane o' them to the Laird for his work?"

"Aye, aye!"

"Wael, Sandy and if ye had ten sheep, wad ye gie ane o' them to the Laird for his work?"

"Hoot, Mac Gregor, that's non fair, for ye ken I hae ten sheep!"

So we say to our Lady of The Million Airts: "If there be first a willing mind it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not."

here—" Then he opened it at what you and I would certainly suppose was the front of the Bible.

But Taki laughed, as politely as she could, however, so that his feelings would not be hurt. "That are the endings of Japanese book," she smiled. "It are begin here." Whereupon both the Lady and the Gentleman discovered that Japanese books begin at the back and are read from the back toward the front.

"The book tells about God, oh lovely stories, will you read it, Taki?" they asked.

"Ever and ever so long time each day," she promised, hugging the Bible against the sash of her blue kimono, bowing many times. When they tried to pay for their tea, she refused their money: "Aren't I got book?" she asked, "well, that are all the pays I are asking, honorably thanking you."

The nice part of this story is that although the lady and gentleman sailed away from Japan that very evening, they told another missionary in that Japanese town all about Taki. And every day they remembered to pray for her, asking God to help her believe the Bible.

So a few days later when this other missionary came to call there sat Taki on the matting floor, her little Bible safely stowed away inside her big long sleeve, while she served tea to customers. But the minute the tea-house was empty, she pulled out her Bible and slowly began spelling out the dear stories. She has been going to our mission ever since, and not only does Taki go, but Taki's mother goes, and Taki's father goes, and Taki's aunts, uncles, and cousins all go, too. Which shows that every Young Reserve who gives a gift to the Continuation Campaign starts the most interesting little ball rolling and rolling and rolling! Have you made a pledge yet?

That Kimono Again!

DEAR YOUNG RESERVES. This Japanese story was put in this week to remind you once more to compete for that kimono waiting over in Japan for you if you answer six questions correctly and color two pictures more attractively than any one else! In spite of our giving complete directions in THE BAPTIST of December 3, a number of you continue to write inquiring how? When? Where? So for the very last time we make answer: (1) You must send 25 cents in stamps to Literature Dep't, General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave, New York City and order a copy of "Japan Annual 1921." (2) When the booklet reaches you you will find on pages 57-59 the questions and pictures and directions for competing for the kimono. If any of you should win it, do let me know and send me your picture. We will print it in the Chimney Corner!

Taki of Teapot Lane

ONCE upon a time a Lady and Gentleman from America went on a visit to Japan, way across the sea. They thought they had never seen such a lovely country, for the cherry trees were covered with pretty pink blossoms and the Japanese people in soft-colored kimonos walked under those trees and composed quaint little poems about the blossoms.

Then one day the Lady said: "Henry, dear, it's our last day in Japan and we simply must go to a real Japanese tea-house, one where only Japanese people go and where nobody can speak a word of English."

So they asked the proprietor of their hotel about it, and he bowed very politely and said that in Tea-Pot Lane was a tea-house that would certainly suit them. And it did. The Lady said afterwards that she wouldn't have missed that cup of tea for anything in the world, and I assure you that Taki felt the same way about it.

Taki was a little Japanese girl whose father kept the tea-house where our Lady and Gentleman happened to go. It was the tiniest kind of a tea-house, so very, very small that only Taki's mother and father and herself were needed to wait on the customers.

It would have been fun to watch the Lady and Gentleman enter that house, for the doorway was so low that he proved much too tall to walk in in the regular way; he had to stoop way over, which was amusing, but nothing compared to their astonishment when they looked around for tea-tables and chairs.

"Perhaps they're housecleaning," said the Gentleman.

But the Lady laughed. "Oh, Henry, I know! The Japanese always sit right down on the floor; no chairs at all. You see how clean the matting is kept. Come on, let's try it!"

So they folded their stiff American legs under them, as if they each wanted to turn into a human letter Z. It was not so bad at first, but before three minutes were over the Gentleman cried that his feet were going fast asleep, and the Lady said hers felt "exactly like prickly pin-cushions, oh, dear! oh, dear!" So really it was only Taki who kept them from leaving at once. For Taki came pattering into the room, flopped down on her little knees and politely bumped her nice little forehead on the matting floor as she said: "Is the worshipfuls wanting tea—honorably yes?"

"If you please!" smiled the Lady, in love with Taki's dear queer English. So Taki pattered away, returning with two absurd little tables tucked under her arms. You would have laughed at the queer little legs those tables had, no longer than your longest finger! But, of course, people who sit on the floor to eat need tables exactly like that. Taki knelt to place them before her guests, then brought them tea and strange-looking cakes. After she had served them with everything they could possibly eat, she sat back on her heels and looked at the Lady and Gentleman very carefully.

"Is you husbands and wives?" she asked, cocking her head on one side.

"We are!" said the Gentleman.

"And what's more," said the Lady, "we're missionaries. Did you ever hear of people like that?"

"No," Taki answered, squinting at them in a puzzled way, "but if you is this missionary, then it are something to bring the happy—honorably yes?"

"Oh, Taki! Taki!" cried the Lady, very much pleased, "that's exactly what we want to do, to bring happiness. We're going to some islands called the Philippines to-morrow, but to-day I do wish we could bring this happiness to you. Henry, have you the little Japanese Bible in your pocket, the one Mr. Smith gave you? Well, let's give it to Taki."

The Gentleman fished the Bible out of his pocket and handed it to Taki. "It's full of stories you will love," he said. "See, it's all written in Japanese, and it begins

BETTER HOME LIFE.

I Samuel 3:1-21. Consecration Meeting.

A better home life depends upon the folks who make up that life—parents and children, if there are any.

In a partnership, there is usually a method of procedure which recognizes the rights of all concerned. The home is indeed a partnership of the highest order.

1. The parents. The tragedy of Eli is reenacted every day. God's displeasure was visited upon him because of the condition of his household. The iniquity of his sons was known to him and yet "he restrained them not." We naturally raise the question why?

The lax home life of many parents often builds an impassable barrier between them and their children, certainly from the point of view of discipline and religious development. The parent may assume a dictatorial attitude toward the child and for the time being bring him under control. Later years reveal the fallacy of this method. A consistent Christian life on the part of parents is perhaps the greatest deterrent for the wayward child.

2. The children. Naturally, a home is not really complete without the child. The child is in the home to be nurtured and guided by the parents. Many parents will not acknowledge it, but children have some rights on their own account. They have these rights because of their very needs.

"Honor thy father and thy mother" is the old injunction. It is a good one for our day. Many young people turn the thing around: "Honor thy boy and thy girl." The Prince of Wales is quoted as saying on his return to England: "I am greatly impressed with the complete way in which American children have their parents under control." Young folks in the home must unquestionably share their part of the burden of home life. No daughter with a heart as big as a mustard seed will allow her mother to do the house work while she "rouges up" and goes gallivanting to some social affair every night in the week.

3. The way out. We must have a place we can call home, even though many of us are rated as "cliff-dwellers." Each of us must do his part in making the home a place of delight even though it be a log cabin. Finally, every home should be surcharged with the spirit of Jesus Christ. He should be head of the house, taken into family counsels, and a constant companion for all who reside there.

Discussion Topic

From the Scripture story, what conclusions may we draw as to the home life of Samuel?

Topic Discussion.

I. God owns all that I have and am. If we ourselves are owned by God we cannot call anything which we possess our own.

"No truth is more firmly entrenched in the Word of God and corroborated by facts of experience. It is the imperial truth for all ages," namely—God is the "Sovereign owner of all things."

This includes everything. The psalmist says, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." (Psalm 24:1.) In Haggai 2:8 we read, "The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts." Again we read in Psalm 50:9-12 "I will take no bullock out of thy house nor the goats out of thy fold. For every beast of the forest is mine and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains, and the wild beasts of the field are mine. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee, FOR THE WORLD IS MINE AND THE FULLNESS THEREOF."

If we apply this truth we must recognize that this world with all its wealth belongs to God,—for in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth (Genesis 1). "All things were made by him and without him was not anything made that hath been made." (John 1:1-13.) All the factories, all industries, all the markets, all goods bought and sold, all stocks and bonds, all silver and gold in the banks of man and the banks of God beneath the mountains, all the railroads and means of transportation the world over, all the jewels and gems of this universe—all—all—are his, for God is the Sovereign owner of the world.

"Everything which one possesses is either a bestowment having its source outside the recipient or it is an achievement through the uses of forces or material which the user did not originate. However large personal investment, nothing which any one has is his own independent creation. Whatever his possessions or accumulations, no man has originated a new force, or created a new element."—JOHN F. GOUCHER.

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour the mill;
And back of the mill are the wheat and the shower,
And the sun and the Father's will."
—Selected.

II. Even we ourselves belong to God. The apostle Paul says, "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price." (I Cor. 6:21.)

1. This means our wills, first of all. As Paul, writing of the Macedonians, says: "For according to their power they gave of their own accord; and this, not as we had hoped, but first they gave their own selves to the Lord." II Cor. 8:3, 5. "Thou seemest human and divine;
The highest, holiest manhood Thou!
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours to make them thine."
—Tennyson.

2. It includes our time. If I belong to God, it follows that my time is also his. That will mean that a proportionate share of each day or of the week should be spent in doing specific Christian service—acts of helpfulness, acts of worship, teaching or other service in the church, and so on.

3. It includes our ability. Whatever special ability we may have should be dedicated to Christ. A filing clerk gave herself to Christ, and offered her expert filing skill to the Lord. She is keeping the Sunday-school record of that church in wonderful fashion. An advertising expert uses his skill in designing church bill-boards, programs and advertising copy for the newspapers.

God wants and can use every bit of ability we have. It is not alone the singers and speakers and teachers and givers, but those who will offer him whatever they have.

4. It includes our influence. Each one is somebody's hero or heroine. Some person is greatly influenced by what I am and say and do. The principle of stewardship recognizes that influence is a mighty force for God.

Livingstone, missionary, explorer, and hero, may be taken as a noble example when he said: "My Jesus, my king, my life, my all: I again dedicate my whole being to thee. I will place no value on anything I have or possess except in relation to the Kingdom. If anything I have will advance the interests of that Kingdom, it shall be given away or kept, only as by giving or keeping it I promote the glory of him to whom I owe all my hopes in time and eternity."

"To every man there openeth
A way, and ways, and a way,
And the High Soul climbs the High Way,
And the Low Soul gropes the Low,
And every man decideth
The Way his soul shall go."

Questions for Discussion

If we earn our possessions by hard work, why should we not use them as we choose?
Can we find any instances even now in which we unconsciously admit that what we have does not belong to us?
Is there a difference between ownership and possession?
Why should we want to acknowledge this ownership?
State the stewardship principle of ownership.
Give opportunity for each member to express himself relative to this principle of stewardship.
Have several prayers voicing the thought of our willingness to recognize God the sovereign owner of all things.

VIRGINIA

3,742 Culture Course awards are an index of the eagerness of the young people to inform themselves about the big tasks of the denomination. Thousands of the young people of Virginia are earnestly pursuing the daily Bible reading course. Many unions are 100 per cent. A large number of the unions register 100 per cent of their members giving regularly to the various interests of the denomination. The B. Y. P. U. members are paying their campaign pledges in a remarkable way. The task of enlisting new pledges for the 75 million campaign is being pressed with great earnestness. But, of course, young people's work has had its day, so some of the brethren say.
One hundred and seventy new unions were organized in Virginia last year, making a total of 602, with a combined membership of 24,000. The majority of the St. Paul considers itself fortunate in having the opportunity to act as host to the 1922 convention of the B. Y. P. U. of America. On our arrival in St. Paul, we shall want to see all there is to see in the time available. In order that our young people may better understand and appreciate St. Paul as one of our leading cities, we will present each week certain facts of interest.

Fact I

St. Paul was incorporated in 1854 and the original site of the city was on the banks of the Mississippi River, not far from the present location of the magnificent Union Station which is now practically completed. At that time the river traffic was one of the large factors in the city's development. And from that time, till the present, St. Paul has been the actual head of navigation of the Mississippi River. Although for years there has been comparatively little use made of the river commercially, there is every indication that such traffic may be renewed in the near future.

We would like to know just how near you are to the goal lines as adopted some months ago: 1. 3,000 tithers before July 1922. 2. 3,000 Bible readers before July, 1922. 3. 200 decisions for life service. 4. 200 B. Y. P. U.'s in the state. 5. 200 standard B. Y. P. U.'s. Who will report?

Rev. G. A. Clarke, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Edmonton, Alta., writes: "Our young people are entertaining about 100 Baptist students from the Provincial University a week from Monday. We have our own rink right beside the church and the club-house, on the grounds where we had the tennis courts. Ice "keeps" here and the rink is in operation every day, with the youngsters from the Sunday schools with their skating and hockey, and the young people skate after their Monday evening meeting.

"We are planning a banquet of all the unions in Edmonton soon, to be held at the First Church, and one of the objects is to get at least three unions of the city to send one delegate to St. Paul. We shall ask Calgary to do likewise, that we may have an Alberta delegation."

The Black Man and His Tenth

Mr. J. H. Anderson of the First Baptist Church, Knoxville, Tenn., writes the following story in the Baptist and Reflector:
"During our recent drive among Knoxville churches for tithers, a colored brother, who has for years been worshipping with the First Church, and who rarely misses a service, was convinced of the Christian duty of tithing.
"His weekly envelope has contained for years one dollar—one-half for local expenses, and the other half for missions. The following Sunday after he had seen the duty and beauty of tithing, his envelope contained $3.12, and the notation on the outside, Malachi 3:10. The next Sunday, his envelope contained $3.00, and the next Sunday $4.04, and the last Sunday $5.65.
"We wonder what would happen if every member of this church should do what this dear old colored brother has done. And yet we do not need to wonder; Malachi 3:10 tells us."

International Uniform Lesson for March 5

JEHOVAH'S MERCY TO A HEATHEN CITY.
Jonah 3:1 to 4:11. Golden Text: Isaiah 55:7.

Setting

Jeroboam II, 781-740 B. C., the sixth ruler of the Northern Kingdom since Ahab in Elijah's time, had a prosperous and acquisitive reign. At this time there lived the three prophets—Jonah, Amos and Hosea. Jonah apparently was the friend and counselor of the king. The Book of Jonah is so named because Jonah is the subject of the text, not the author. Although it was written at a much later date, there is every reason to believe that Jonah was one of the sons of the prophets under Elisha. Nineveh, the Assyrian capital, is about five hundred miles, over mountains, across desert and plain, from Jonah's home. A "great city of three days' journey" means three days to encircle it, probably sixty miles.

The Lesson

Jonah is one of the great missionary books of the Old Testament. The Jews had at the very heart of their religion the one God while Assyria and Babylon worshipped gods low in morals. But the Jewish nation was not missionary in spirit. They were willing others should accept their God if they sought him, but they did not try to carry their God to them. In this regard they were displeasing to God. So the word of Jehovah came unto Jonah, telling him to go to Nineveh and preach the preaching that God bade him. But instead of obeying, Jonah went in the opposite direction and at Joppa found a ship bound for Phoenicia, Spain, which he boarded. It was an out-of-the-way place he had chosen to go to in order to get away from the voice of his God. At sea a violent storm overtook them and the sailors decided that some one on board had caused offense to the gods. They cast lots to discover the culprit, which lot fell to Jonah, who confessed his guilt and suggested that they throw him overboard. He was swallowed by a great fish which after three days cast him upon dry land. Then the word of Jehovah came to Jonah a second time, bidding him go to Nineveh and preach. This time he went.

But if he had to preach to this city which he desired should meet its just doom, he would preach a message of denunciation. So he entered it and cried out, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown!" The Ninevites were not hard to convince. They proclaimed a fast and put on sackcloth from the greatest to the least. Said the king, "Who knoweth whether God will not turn and repent, and turn away his fierce anger that we perish not? And God saw their works that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil which he said he would do unto them; and he did it not."

Lesson Thoughts

1. "Arise, go!" In no uncertain voice comes this order to every one with the hearing ear. Missions may differ, but the command to work is definite. 2. Escape from God is impossible. Jonah took the ship bound for the farthest country he knew of, but the storm came and God was in the storm. 3. "Word came the second time." A persistent voice urging to some task is not to be denied. 4. The encompassing, forgiving and understanding love of God. "Thou hast had regard for the gourd and should not I have regard for Nineveh?"

Ministers on the lookout for admirable stereopticon slides will be interested to know of a supply kept by the Presbyterians in the Columbia Bank Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa., room 714 in the office of that denomination's Board of Temperance and Humane Education.

The Exhilaration of Service

"We lighten our burdens by taking on the burdens of others; find comfort in our sorrows when we carry comfort to other sorrowing hearts; find life worth living when we make life worth living. If we believe that the Son of God has come into the world to make out of our tangled life an ordered kingdom of justice and good will and we volunteer to aid him in this age-long campaign, we find an unexpected exhilaration in the service, and the worse the tangle the greater the exhilaration."

Men's Bible Class, First Church, Toledo, Ohio

Few Bible classes in the country have had as long a history as the Men's Bible Class of the First Church of Toledo. Organized over fifty years ago when the church existed in a purely residential community and was largely composed of men who were heads of families in the church it has naturally suffered the same experiences through which the church has passed by the changing of the community with the growth of the city. Its present Sunday average is about sixty. Strangers and visitors are always present. Under the leadership of its teacher Albert C. Mittendorf and President F. O. Berth the church has a strong asset in this class which interests itself continually in things of social and moral uplift to the city and community.

Our Own Folks

Children's Week

By mutual agreement all denominations of Christians will turn their thoughts toward childhood during the period designated as "Children's Week," April 30-May 7.

There will be community services in which all denominations will participate and there will be special programs planned by different churches according to local needs.

A special program has been planned for our own denomination that in every place the local church may be able to conserve the enthusiasm engendered during this week.

Three definite results are sought: First, that every home having a child in Sunday school shall be visited in a sympathetic and friendly way by the teacher and leaders of the school. Second, that invitation be given to parents in every home to attend a parents' meeting to be held in the church on Sunday afternoon, May 7, or a subsequent date if desirable. In this meeting a carefully prepared program will be carried out discussing two topics, namely, religion in the home and the church's provision for its children. Third, to bring about changes and improvements in equipment for the teaching of children, by the consideration of a survey committee's report to be presented at the Sunday-afternoon meeting. This committee, having been previously appointed to observe children during their class period on two successive Sundays will present its findings and make recommendations for free discussion of parents and officers.

A leaflet upon the Baptist program for Children's Week and an outline of the work of the survey committee and two leaflets which furnish "Talking Points" for the two addresses at the parents' meeting have been prepared by Miss Meme Brockway and can be secured from the director of religious education in each state, from the director of children's work, or from the American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut Street. These leaflets are free and there is no money raising intention connected with the observance of the week. We seek only to turn the thoughts of the church and of the parents to the needs of children.

An Appeal from Russian Baptists in America

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—

For several months the news has been coming from Russia telling about something more terrible than the World War and internal disorders. The most fertile section of the country had no rain during the whole season. This created a situation where millions of lives are at stake. The crops in the south, which is the other fertile part of Russia, were very slight because of drought, too. The famine became a national calamity.

The state of our brethren and sisters after the faith is harder than that of the others because we always have been looked upon in Russia as outcasts and were persecuted. The history tells us the Christians from the earliest days were accused of causing the great calamities.

The suffering of the people in the famine district is indescribable. An American inspector summed it up in his recent report: Some have starved, some are starving and others are on the verge of starvation, and it is not a question of months or weeks but of days. Recent information tells that half of the members of our leading church at Samara, the center of the famine district, have already died and the rest are prepared for death because they have absolutely nothing to eat. Grass has been the only food left, but the frost in October killed it.

We, the Russian churches and missions, decided to do our best to save lives of our fellow-believers over there. A call has been sent out for at least $10,000. Several times that amount is needed. We call now upon you, our friends and fellow-believers, to help us to save our starving brethren in Russia from an awful death. Every cent will go directly to this purpose, the campaign being conducted by volunteers. The food will be sent through the American Relief Administration.

This help is sorely needed because:—

(1) Area stricken by famine is as large as the section of the United States east of Mississippi River with more than 20,000,000 population. It became a national calamity, made worse by the World and Civil Wars. The country cannot meet the need.

(2) Thank God for $20,000,000 appropriated by the United States Senate to prevent wholesale starvation and $10,000,000 given by the Russian government. But, besides a good deal of this amount which will go to buy seed for the next spring and not for food, it only makes $1 per person till the next harvest, while $15 per person is needed as the least to keep alive until the fall.

(3) The way of sending the food is entirely safe. Even the robbers in Russia esteem the American Relief Administration for its unselfish service, and do not touch its goods. What a mighty sermon America is preaching to Russia's millions at this crucial hour of her history—the Birth of a Nation.

We ask you to send your gift of sympathy and love to the treasurer of our Union: Paul Bartkov, 1126 Spruce St., Chester, Pa.

Signed: President, John Davidux, 1014 Main St., Hartford, Conn.; Secretary, Rev. Boris Bookin, 353 Ludington St., Buffalo, N. Y.

A Report from Nicaragua

1. Ours is a small work, and a comparatively new work. Not very much has been done. No very signal advance has been made during the year about to close. Nevertheless, I think I may safely say that it has been better than any previous year. Two things are, perhaps, worthy of special note. There has been a steady and satisfactory growth in our Sunday schools, and in the boarding school supported by the Woman's Board.

There have occurred several rather serious cases of persecution, in one of these one of the native pastors was quite seriously injured. But in every case the persecution has fallen out to the furtherance of the gospel.

2. We have come to the opening of the New Year with the country suffering from a very serious financial and economic crisis, and with the usual amount of political unrest and uncertainty. But we do not see that these conditions have very seriously affected our work. Attendance on the preaching and teaching of the Word is as large as ever before, and in most instances is increasing. We have never been more hopeful than now.

3. We need, above everything else, more workers, called of God, filled with his Spirit. Workers who are ready to consecrate themselves, body and soul, to these people. Men and women to live among them, till they can understand them, and sympathize with them and gently lead them to Christ. We need patient, painstaking and untiring builders of the Kingdom of God.

Lengthening Our Cords and Strengthening Our Stakes

Times of extraordinary stress and difficulty such as we are passing through now require more and not less of constructive leadership.

The board of managers of the Publication Society at their January meeting sought to appraise our present situation. They faced the great perplexities of the society and of the denomination, occasioned by the very serious shrinkage in receipts on pledges this year—a shrinkage that has produced financial problems of vital concern to all of our denominational interests—and decided that the situation required two things of them:

One, that they strengthen the hands of the general secretary of the society for the carrying of these new burdens, and

Two, that, recognizing the many outside demands upon the general secretary, they make it possible for him to serve the denomination in a larger way, in extra-society and general matters,—as he is doing in the Stewardship Campaign of Northern Baptists—for the complex questions arising out of our cooperative relationships as the denomination is now organized are requiring, and will continue to require, a large share of his time and thought.

These two things the board have accomplished by providing for an associate general secretary, and by calling Dr. W. H. Main to become Dr. Brink's associate on the society's staff. Dr. Main has accepted this call to a new service, and will take up his new duties on March 1.

It has been arranged that Dr. Main shall continue as supply at the Memorial Church in Philadelphia, of which he has been pastor altogether for nearly twelve years, until such time as the church shall have found a new pastor. This arrangement enables the society to secure at once a large measure of Dr. Main's time and service, without any actual increase in its present current expenses, for the resignation of Dr. Behan, on Feb. 1, whose going the board deeply regrets, releases an amount sufficient to cover the initial expense involved.

Dr. Main's long service on the board of managers gives him an intimate knowledge of the society's work that will be of great value in his new position.

The Publication Society is fortunate in having as treasurer, a Baptist layman, a banker, who gives his time and service to the society as a contribution to the work of the Kingdom.

Times such as these require that the society shall have available someone for the field work that it is necessary to care for and to safeguard adequately its widely scattered financial interests. Dr. Main will render this service to the treasurer as occasion may require.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

Detroit is to be honored by the presence of Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, general secretary of the Publication Society and directing head of the tithing and stewardship campaign of the General Promotion Board. It will be a supper conference at the Woodward Avenue Church, on Friday evening, Feb. 17. Dr. Brink is to be the principal speaker. It is hoped that pastors, deacons, trustees, Sunday-school superintendents, leaders in the women's organizations and others from all churches in the metropolitan area will be present. On Feb. 24 at the Temple Church, the Women's Missionary Union of the Detroit Association will observe a day of prayer. Mrs. Wadsworth, field secretary of the Board of Promotion will be the special speaker for the occasion. At 6:30 the World Wide Guild girls will give a supper after which an attractive evening program will be given.

A most profitable tithing and stewardship conference was held in Immanuel Church on Tuesday, Jan. 31, which was well attended. Representatives were present from every church in the west end. At 4:30 Rev. H. C. Wedell, River Rouge, led the conference with Rev. Geo. E. Barnard, Dr. Gleiss and A. H. Finn as speakers. The dinner conference was led by Dr. Gleiss and the evening service in the auditorium was addressed by Rev. A. F. Waechter, followed by an illustrated lecture on stewardship by Rev. A. V. Allen. Pastor Walter J. Mead and his people proved gracious hosts.

The Woodward Avenue Church, our great down-town church, expressed its appreciation of the services being rendered by their efficient pastor Rev. J. Wellington Hoag, by giving him a generous increase of salary for the new year. This is the church that has developed under the ministry of such leaders as Drs. Charles R. Henderson, Donald D. MacLaurin, Spencer B. Meeser and others. Today its great task is the difficult problem of serving the floating population of a great down-town area. True it has its stable and strong family membership but these are largely far removed from the church field itself. Its splendid plant is teeming with activities every day in the week.

Springwells Avenue Church has just passed through a gracious revival with twenty-five baptisms and other additions which will increase that number by ten. Rev. Geo. E. Barnard, the new pastor, is an effective speaker and wise leader.

Stewardship and tithing is being heartily stressed. This church has a fine property and a splendid field.

Scotten Avenue has a new spirit and a new vision since Rev. W. A. Steinkraus came. Feb. 7, when the reception to new members will be held should see sixty in line. Baptisms every Sabbath. The Bible school now numbers 175 in attendance. Congregations fill the house. Prayer meetings largely attended.

Jefferson Avenue Church has extended a second call to Rev. Arthur V. Allen and he accepts the new pastorate, to begin March 1. Mr. Allen has been the religious education director of the Detroit Union and has done an outstanding piece of work. Our Bible schools and young people's societies are in the best condition ever and much can be credited to Mr. Allen. He is an effective preacher and wise leader.

Rev. D. A. W. Smith

By J. McGUIRE

He was the son of Dr. S. F. Smith of whom Baptists are proud as being the author of "America." They are proud of the son also, those who knew him intimately, for the life which he lived and for the work which he did in Burma. He was born in the year 1840 on June 18. He grew up in the atmosphere of a cultured Christian New England home. When he was eight years of age, Dr. Vinton of the Rangoon Karen Mission accompanied by two Karen Christians came to the church in Newton Centre of which his father was pastor, and they sang in Karen "Rock of ages cleft for me, Let me hide myself in Thee." After the service, while the little boy was standing in the family pew and looking at the visitors, one of the Karens came up to him and in his broken English asked him if he would not like, when he grew up, to go out to Burma and be a missionary to the Karens? That was in the year 1848. Sixteen years later he landed in Burma as a missionary and the Karen brother, who had invited him so long before, welcomed him to the country and to the work.

The wife of the young missionary was the daughter of Dr. E. A. Stevens, for many years a missionary to the Burmans, and they began their work as Burman missionaries, but six months later the need of the Karen mission at Henzada was such that at the request of the brethren they took up Karen work at that station, and for ten years Henzada was their field. Here their study of the people and the language fitted them for the work in the Karen Theological Seminary, to which they were called after their return from their first furlough in 1876. From 1876 to the present is forty-five years, a half century save five years only, and during all this time Dr. Smith has been at the head of this important school of the prophets, the last few years being president emeritus.

It is difficult to overestimate the value and the far-reaching character of the work which as president of this institution he has accomplished for the Kingdom in Burma. All the Karen preachers and pastors in the country are his "boys" trained under his hand. The graduates for these forty-five years number 870. Their work is not only among their own people, but work for Shans, Chins, Kachins and other backward races is carried on largely with Karens as helpers. All this work has felt the influence of Dr. Smith. "Being dead he yet speaketh" and will for years to come through the men who in the class room have caught his spirit.

By his pen also Dr. Smith has wrought mightily for the Karens. To him they are indebted for a complete commentary on the Bible, a Bible Hand-book, a work on homiletics, a Moral Science, Logic, and Mental Philosophy. Also separate commentaries on the Gospels of Mark and Luke. For many years he was the editor of The Star, the Karen paper, and many tracts and pamphlets are from his pen. As one would expect from the son of the author of "America," Dr. Smith was specially happy in his translation of Christian hymns into the Karen.

During the fifteen years the writer has been in the Burman Theological Seminary at Insein he has known Dr. Smith intimately, working with him side by side. He is reminded of the words of David: "Know ye not that a prince and a great man has fallen today in Israel?" Dr. Smith was a great Christian, always and everywhere a Christian gentleman; and he was a Christian scholar and statesman. He made wise plans and carried them out tactfully and without friction. He was a keen judge of men, but he never spoke disparagingly of his brethren, nor have I ever seen him discouraged with the work although he met with the same difficulties as do the rest of us. He was a prince among us because of his faith and his love.

Dr. Smith was not of robust physique. When he decided to be a missionary many of his friends thought that he would not be able to endure the trying climate of the tropics; they predicted for him a very short career. But contrary to such expectations he lived to be more than four-score years of age and he had fifty-eight years as a missionary with only five furloughs, two of which only lasted through the winter. He was a hard worker up to the very last. He was working at a commentary on the Acts and had six chapters finished when the Master called him and he laid down his pen.

Dr. Smith, with his qualities of mind and heart, might have done a great work in America, but he invested his life in Burma and it has brought a rich return. And, brethren of the home land, the work in Burma is not finished; rich investments of life are needed today as much as they were needed when Dr. Smith came out there three score years ago.

Insein, Burma.

A Welcome Help in Teaching English

By CHARLES ALVIN BROOKS

Rev. Angelo diDomenica, pastor of the First Italian Baptist Church of Philadelphia has just published a book entitled "Graded Lessons in English for Italians." The sub-title of the book is an indication of its purpose, "An aid in Americanization." In his book Mr. diDomenica has utilized his practical experience in teaching English to Italians. The Italians, who do not speak English, usually cannot be induced to attend evening schools where classes are composed of mixed elements of various nationalities. It has been demonstrated that Italians learn English more easily when studying in classes composed of their own countrymen. During last winter Mr. diDomenica organized fifteen classes in his church evening school in which he enrolled 291 young men and women. "Graded Lessons in English for Italians" has a three-fold value: It will aid teaching English to Italians in an easy and helpful way; will enable them to get acquainted with the history of the United States and the customs of the American people; and will lead them toward the goal of Americanization.

The book is divided into four parts: Lessons, conversations, grammar and dictionary (English-Italian and Italian-English). The Christopher Publishing House, Boston, are the publishers.

It is attractively made up on good paper and in good type and represents an unusual amount of painstaking work and ripe experience. It has been a development from a few pages of a pamphlet to this substantial work which comprises 282 pages. At the back of the book is a good glossary of sixty-seven pages. The book is heartily commended to those who are seeking material helps in teaching English to Italians. It is without doubt the best book of its kind which has yet appeared.

PASTOR H. O. KING, of Silver City on February 5, closed two-weeks' revival meetings in which he was assisted by Rev. J. E. Wilkins, pastor at Malvern, and by the gospel teams of Glenwood and Shendoah. The attendance was good, the church was revived and Christian people of the town blessed. There were ten confessions of Christ, five reclaimed and many under conviction asking for prayer. Six persons have been received for baptism and two by experience.

PASTOR H. B. COX, entered upon his fourth year as pastor of Fifth Street Church, Hannibal, Feb. 1. The past year has been one of the best in the history of the church. Finances in fine condition, and a net gain in membership of 101, 68 by baptism. In April, Pastor Cox assisted Mr. Meigs in meetings in Quincy, Ill., in November he assisted Mr. Rendlemen in meetings at St. Joseph. These were a great success. The church was never better organized for aggressive work.

SPRINGWELLS AVENUE CHURCH, DETROIT, has finished a three-week series of special meetings, the pastor Mr. Barnard, conducting the services. About thirty-five persons have given themselves to Jesus, most of them adults and heads of families. Sunday evening twenty-one were baptized. Many members of the church have been aroused to their responsibility. At the next communion services there are plans to receive thirty or more into the church. Sunday school is taking on new life. There are over 100 in the primary department, and a large Baracca and Philathea Class in the school composed of about sixty men and women. The B. Y. P. U. is enthusiastic.

Stockton is the thriving center of an agricultural community so many of the church members must go miles to attend the church. The Second Church of the town is for Negroes and it is alive!

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 27, the twenty-third Avenue Church of Oakland, gave a reception in honor of the fifth anniversary of the pastorate of John Newton Garst, with a goodly number present in spite of inclement weather. Pastor Garst has been with this church longer than any other Baptist pastor has been in the San Francisco Bay Association. During this time he secured his master of arts degree, added to the senior B. Y. P. U. a junior and an intermediate Union, introduced the church vacation school with an enrollment as high as 256, and now has a large week-day church school, a teacher training class of 28, and plans for opening next month, in cooperation with the denomination, a Portuguese mission. A new pipe organ, furnace, and baptistry have been installed, the New World Movement allotment over-subscribed, and as much is now being given for beneficence as for current expense, $40 being the annual average per member with no large contributors, and nearly half of the wage earners signed tithe. Mr. Garst organized a Personal Workers' League of 18, and has had nearly 300 membership additions with only 117 by letter.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE MIDWINTER MISSIONARY TEA of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Church, Pasadena, California, was held on Friday, Jan. 27, at the hospitable home of Mrs. M. Grant Edmonds, "Miramonte." It was an unusually interesting affair, from the fact that no less than fourteen missionaries were present as the guests of honor, representing six different countries. They were Dr. and Mrs. William Ashmore and Miss Viola C. Hill from China; Dr. and Mrs. P. Frederickson from our Congo Mission, Africa; Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Jones, Miss Amy A. Acocck and Mrs. Topping from Japan; Mrs. Theodore Fieldbrave, recently from Allahabad, India, a graduate of the Isabella Thoburn College for Women at Lucknow, and, until her marriage to Rev. Theodore Fieldbrave, our missionary to the natives of India residing on the Pacific Coast, a teacher in that college; Dr. Zell Clark and Miss Martha Clark, from the Canadian Baptist Mission in India; Miss Anna V. Johnson from the Philippines, and Miss Laura Wilson from Porto Rico. Mrs. John Marvin Dean, wife of the pastor, opened the exercises with a prayer service. Mrs. Rose Edmonds Holt, daughter of the hostess sang very beautifully two solos, "With Verdure Clad" and "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains," accompanied on the piano by her mother. Miss Mary A. Greene, president of the Auxiliary introduced Dr. and Mrs. Ashmore and Dr. and Mrs. Frederickson, who spoke briefly of the work and its opportunities. Then Miss Greene asked all the missionaries to stand in a semicircle, while each one introduced himself or herself, giving their name and the name of their country and station. After this, the 180 guests enjoyed a social hour with refreshments.

ASHLAND CHURCH has taken new life since the coming of Ralph A. Craig from Missouri. It is well liked and things are moving in that important field.

REV. A. C. DOWNING is doing a splendid work at Meade. He has been with the church only a short time, yet things are moving forward.

NEBRASKA

FIRE WAS DISCOVERED IN FIRST CHURCH, FREMONT, at 8 o'clock and by 10 o'clock the building was in ruins. With undaunted courage the pastor and congregation assembled at the Commercial Club rooms and held their usual 11 o'clock service. At 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon the official board met and decided to build a new structure, and a building committee was appointed. This was one of the churches of the state to exceed in pledges its quota for the N. W. M. having pledged $34,803. This obligation is so heavy with the present financial depression that it will be impossible to build a new building that will meet its needs without considerable help from the denomination or some adjustment on the N. W. M. pledges. This church has had a phenomenal growth in membership within the last eight months and was in the midst of its extensive winter program. The pastor is Rev. Fred Young formerly of Indiana.

MINNESOTA

BAPTIST CHURCHES OF MINNEAPOLIS, united in an afternoon and evening program at Temple Church February 8, under the auspices of the Woman's Baptist Union, of which Mrs. J. A. Mansfield is president. Speakers at the afternoon session were: Dr. Yonan Shabaz, of Persia, and Nakaji San of Japan. Devotional service was led by Mrs. W. E. Woodberry. Dinner was served at six o'clock under the direction of Mrs. G. E. Young's Bible class. At 7:30 p. m. a musical program was given by the Philippine Club of the U. of M. This club is composed of Christian young men, from the Philippine Islands, who are working their way through the University. At 8 o'clock the Christian Americanization pageant "Help Wanted for Miss Liberty," by Miss Naomi Fletcher, was presented with Mrs. C. C. Aller director and soloist. Miss Fletcher was present and made an appeal for Christian Americanization workers for Minneapolis.

Carleton College

The visit of the official committee of the Minnesota Baptist Convention to Carleton College last fall revealed earnest and persistent effort on the part of the college authorities to throw a strong Christian atmosphere about all their work.

The outstanding architectural feature of the beautiful campus is the Skinner Memorial Chapel. This was made possible only by the college assuming a debt for a considerable part of the cost.

Every student must take Bible study or ethics before he can graduate, he must attend daily chapel exercises and Sunday vesper service. The voluntary student religious activities, the work of the local Northfield churches and the required college services are thoroughly correlated and directed by the Carleton Community Religious Council. There are fourteen ordained ministers on the faculty. Four of the leading professors give their time in whole or in part to the teaching of the Bible and allied subjects. In spite of entirely inadequate equipment for local Baptist work, Baptist members of the faculty are generous contributors of time to local Baptist enterprises.

Last year the college arranged special meetings under Sherwood Eddy. One hundred and ninety-three women and ninety-six men registered some forward step in response to this effort. Study classes in personal and campus problems were organized, enrolling 207 women and 112 men. A band of twelve students has been assisting churches of the vicinity by deputation work. In the present student body are young men who have decided during their college course to give themselves to the Christian ministry. The students pledged more than $46,000 to a recent college campaign for funds and almost $2,000 to the Fu Chow Mission in Shansi, China, which is manned by Carleton graduates.

The essential spirit of the school was found to be that of honesty, courageous truth seeking, and clean sportsmanship. One of the most vital Christian influences is the fundamental Christian approach to all topics of study. Carleton has four ordained Christian ministers in her strong economics department for the training of real Christian business men.

Baptist of the North have a right, now that Carleton is a Congregational-Baptist enterprise, to inquire as to the religious and educational qualifications of the college.

For the Committee, W. E. Woodbury, Chairman; A. F. Holmer.

INDIANA

GEORGE A. HOUGHTON, only son of Rev. W. E. and Mrs. Houghton of Franklin was shot when about to take the train from his home to Detroit to finish his course in school. He died Wednesday morning, February 1, thirty hours later in the Robert Long Hospital, Indianapolis. Rev. W. E. Houghton has been missionary colporteur for northern Indiana for the past twenty years. The young man was twenty-eight years of age, upright, manly, loved by all who knew him and respected by those with whom he served. He was a member of the 59th Machine Gun Infantry in the World War and served with his unit at Chateau Thierry and St. Mihiel, in which battles he was both wounded and gassed. Since his return from France he has been ill much of the time until a year ago when he entered school as a vocational student of the Federal Government. Adjutant John Bell, his commanding officer, gave testimony of his excellent life and character while over seas. The funeral services were conducted by Dr. Frank Houser, pastor of Calvary Church, Davenport, Iowa, a former associate with Mr. Houghton in evangelistic work and a life-long friend of the family. The services were held in the Church at Hinckley, Ill., where the grandparents of the young man lived. A military funeral service at the cemetery was conducted by the American Legion.

FIRST CHURCH OF SULLIVAN, Rev. A. A. Cohn, pastor closed on Sunday, February 5, a most successful evangelistic campaign. Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie, evangelistic singers, assisted the pastor who did the preaching. During the meetings sixty-five persons took a stand for Christ. The Sullivan Church is one of the rapidly growing Baptist churches in the state.

AT FIRST CHURCH, SOUTH BEND, Dr. U. S. Davis, pastor gave the hand of Fellowship to 24 new members Feb. 5. These were the result of a personal visitation campaign during January. A church attendance campaign began February 12, to last until Easter. Each member attending either service on Sunday will be asked to register. These cards will be used as the basis of a survey of the membership.

ILLINOIS

WEEK-DAY RELIGIOUS TRAINING WORK in Belvidere is superintended by Rev. W. E. Mundell, pastor of First Church. The support of the superintendent of city schools was enlisted and through him permission was secured from the board of education to have the children released a half hour every Friday afternoon, this day chosen as it interferes least with the regular school work. All of the churches in the town except three have united in the work. Plans are on foot for a religious pageant at the close of the year's work in which the children will demonstrate the value of the training received. There are twenty-five volunteer teachers. The Abingdon Press books are being used and results are gratifying. A Bible class of fifty young men is taught by the pastor, Rev. L. K. Williams and a quartet from Olivet Church were secured by this class to conduct a service on the evening of February 13. Seven young men were baptized recently and at least twelve more are coming by Easter.

Women's Baptist Mission Society

The regular meeting of the state board was held in Chicago on January 27. Twenty-two board members, with Mrs. John Nuveen as guest, were present. The session was long and busy, hearing the reports of the different departments, formulating plans, and discussing the promotion of the "Continuation Campaign." Mrs. L. A. Vumidge announced and urged the observance of the special day of prayer on March 3. Mrs. E. S. Osgood, C. W. C. state director, reported nine new organizations. The C. W. C's are earning their money for the campaign by links in a "Love Chain." Leaders are urged to secure material for this chain from Miss Osgood at once. It was voted that power be given the president and executive body to appoint the six women members on the state convention board. It was also voted that the state board assist Mrs. G. W. Taft in a financial way in helping to find, inform and keep in touch with the young people of our churches who have already expressed their intention of definite Christian service. Mrs. Topping urged that during February, March and April, four-minute talks be given in each circle by women who can do it well. Miss Bess M. Stickney reported fifteen new W. W. Guilds formed. The following committees were appointed: Program—Mrs. C. H. Carpenter, Mrs. S. Schlie, Mrs. H. A. Bush; Nominating—Mrs. M. E. Siver, Mrs. G. G. Reynolds, Miss Bess Stickney, Mrs. L. A. Vumidge, Mrs. E. S. Osgood; Reading Contest—Mrs. H. W. Reed, Mrs. E. W. Sundell, Mrs. F. W. Heath; Resolutions—Dr. Maxon, Mrs. H. E. Truex, Mrs. J. T. Caldwell; Press—Mrs. Martha V. Higman, Mrs. Robt. Hoffman; Courtesy—Mrs. J. B. Rose, Mrs. M. W. Twing, Mrs. H. W. Tate.

School of Missions at Jacksonville

The First Church of Jacksonville, has just concluded its first School of Missions. At the suggestion of the pastor, Rev. A. P. Howells, the church elected a cabinet for the carrying out of this venture, with one representative from each of the church organizations. The school opened on the first Sunday night of the year and has continued for six successive Sunday evenings. Each night there were two sessions consisting of the study hour from 6:30 to 7:30 and the lecture period which was the hour immediately following. Four classes were held nightly. The adult class taught by Mrs. C. O. Swift completed the mission book, "Why and How of Foreign Missions." Miss Caroline Abbott taught the book, "World Friendship, Inc." to the World Wide Guild. "Making Life Count" was the text book of the intermediates with Miss Carrie Spires as instructor. In the senior B. Y. P. U. session the pastor taught the interesting mission volume entitled, "Playing Square With Tomorrow." All classes met for an opening exercise of fifteen minutes in the lecture room. During the lecture period, which was the time of the regular evening service, the following novel missionary features were introduced: A stereopticon service entitled, "Where Did My New World Movement Money Go?"; a song service called "A Song Story of a City Mission"; a missionary play, "Aunt Polly Joins the Mission Circle," by the Woman's Missionary Society; another missionary play, "An Afternoon in a Chinese Hospital," by the World Wide Guild; a World Wide Guild stereopticon service, and the closing event which was "A Missionary Mock Trial," given by the B. Y. P. U. Miss Elizabeth Long, the school secretary reports that the attendance at the study classes reached 484, while the number of persons attending the lecture period was tabulated at 891, making a total attendance for the six weeks' School of Missions of 1,375. The results of this period of mission study have caused many who had no interest in the "Great Commission" before to take a broader view of world evangelization. Some will dedicate themselves for life service. Stewardship will be adopted by others. It was certainly worth while.

MAINE

FARMINGTON: Jan. 4 the annual roll-call and dedication of the new Sunday-school classroom was an occasion of great joy to Pastor Andem and his people. The addition to the church building provides for social purposes a vestry which may be divided, by folding doors, into six classrooms. A kitchen with modern equipment has been built and the adjoining vestry provides a most attractive dining-hall. About 200 sat down to the roll-call supper. Reports showed thirty-three additions to church membership, twenty-five by baptism, many of these students of the state normal school. The treasurer's report showed all bills paid and a balance in the treasury on the largest budget the church had ever accepted. The finance committee brought in a still larger budget for 1922 and reported that it was already practically underwritten. Rev. J. Harrison Thompson of First Church, Portland, gave the address and Prof. A. M. Thomas, chairman of the building committee, was presented with a travelling bag after he had read his report. At one of the Sunday morning services, which are attended by large audiences while in the evening the church is filled to its capacity, the church voted to increase the pastor's income $250. The third increase in the three years of his pastorate. May the pleasant habit continue for thirty years more. Pastor Andem is not only moderator of the Farmington Association but is chairman of the Stewardship Campaign from which great things are expected.

Rev. R. W. COOPER, pastor of the Baptist church of Millinocket was with Ludlow church five nights. During that time over a dozen gave their hearts to the Lord, and the church was strengthened generally.

CLINTON: The excellent work of Pastor Elmer E. Longley is a bit interrupted by a surgical operation to which he recently submitted. He is recovering and left his hospital long enough to go and make a call upon a sick member of his parish, returning immediately to the hospital. Possibly such pastoral care had to do with the long life of the oldest member of his church, Mrs. Drusilla Waldron Lewis, who died last week aged 100 years and 11 months. She was a charter member of the Clinton Free Baptist Church, was converted eighty-three years ago and retained her mental powers to the end. For forty-seven years she had made her home with her son, Mr. A. G. Waldron.

CONGRESS STREET FREE BAPTIST: Among Dr. Kennan's veteran helpers in the Congress Street Church, Portland, is Mr. James A. Small, secretary and treasurer of the Sunday school. Electing Mr. Small as secretary and treasurer has been a regular feature of the Sunday-school annual meeting for forty-three years. Such a term of service indicates high appreciation of the work that has been rendered. May he long hold the record.

VERMONT

THE LITTLE CHURCH AT WHITINGHAM supplied by Rev. J. Alex Donald, pastor at Readsboro, has sustained a great loss in the death of Hon. A. A. Butterfield, for many years a member and officer in the church and for several years a member of the board of trustees of Vermont State Convention. Mr. Butterfield was a lawyer by profession, but had served the town in almost every capacity and had also represented it in the legislature. At the time of his death he was church treasurer, and diligently looked after the collection of the funds, especially those for the New World Movement. Although seventy-seven years of age he was at church practically every Sunday. He will be missed in the church and community.

THE ANNUAL SUPPER AND BUSINESS meeting of First Church, Bellows Falls, was held Dec. 27, the pastor, Rev. John M. Maxwell, presiding. The Sunday-school report showed a net gain for the year. In spite of the fact that many have removed from the place on account of the mills being shut down, reports were encouraging. The motto for the new year is "Double the membership."

THE PASTORATE OF REV. E. C. WEEKS of North Springfield is opening up very encouragingly, with an average attendance of over 100 in the Sunday school. At the annual dinner and roll-call 170 were present and 114 responded to the roll. Miss Carrie Upham, a public school teacher, has started a teacher training class in the Bible school.

REV. G. H. GRAY, formerly of Maine, is now pastor of the churches at Huntington and Huntington Center.

MONTELELIE CHURCH, REV. C. D. PIPER, pastor, reports the year 1921 a very successful one, with the property greatly improved, a goodly number added to the church, all bills paid and a balance in the treasury.

MASSACHUSETTS

CENTRAL CHURCH, MIDDLEBORO, C. Raymond Chappell, pastor, reports good congregations. The pastor has been preaching a series of Sunday morning sermons on the book of Revelation which has aroused much interest. An evangelistic service is held every Sunday evening with a chorus choir, a chorus composed of men from the B. M. C. singing the first Sunday of each month. A brief after-meeting is held each week with a good interest and some have confessed to Christ. Two were baptized on Christmas Sunday and three more are awaiting baptism. The annual banquet of the men's class, the B. M. C., was held January 31, with over 130 men present. The speaker of the evening was Dr. C. N. Arbuckle of Newton Center and his clear-cut, stirring address on "The Christian Man in the World Today" gripped the men. A new changeable letter bulletin board, the gift of the church Aid Society, has been set up and will help to bring church activities to the attention of the public. A series of special programs is being carried out monthly at the mid-week prayer meeting. The first was a boys' and girls' night with the Junior League present, and six members told in their own words stories of Bible boys and girls. The next special program will be in charge of the C. E. Society. Rev. William Reid of the State Board of Promotion recently gave a strong presentation of the denominational situation.

RHODE ISLAND

THE BETHANY CHURCH, PAWTUCKET, has called its previous pastor, Rev. George H. Horton, from the Carolina Church, and he will begin his pastorate in Pawtucket at the end of March.

THE ROGER WILLIAMS CHURCH, REV. S. D. Ringrose, pastor, has had a prosperous year. Over 100 have been baptized. The increase in the total Sunday-school attendance for the entire year is 4,478. Eighty-eight were given diplomas for perfect attendance.

REV. H. A. ROBERTS was called to Texas on account of the serious illness of his son but he has returned with the assurance that his son will probably recover. The old First Church on the Island graciously sent Dr. Roberts to Texas and cared for the pulpit while the pastor was absent.

THE SECOND ANNIVERSARY of Pastor C. J. Yeomans of the Wickford Church was a day of rejoicing. Fifty-six have been baptized and there are others awaiting baptism. One hundred have been received into the membership of the church. As a consequence, the finances of the church have doubled.

REV. J. A. MITCHELL, pastor of the Norwood Church, resigned Feb. 5 to accept a call to the Lonsdale Church. Brother Mitchell has done splendid work at Norwood and is held in high esteem by his brethren.

THE CHURCH AT CROMPTON has voted to settle a pastor and called the Rev. William Laughton of Oak Bluffs, who will begin his pastorate this month.

REV. A. C. HANNA of Burma is making a tour of a part of the state this week, speaking in the following churches: Allendale; South Church, Providence; Cranston Street; Roger Williams; Union, Providence; Manton; Norwood; First Italian; and a Union service at Westerly.

DR. RECTOR, pastor of First Church Pawtucket, was presented recently by one of his members with a ticket for one of the special trips to Palestine. All rejoice at Dr. Rector's good fortune and wish him God speed when he leaves for the land where his Lord lived and died.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

C. W. McKEEVER, SINGER-EVANGELIST, of Pavilion, N. Y., began a series of meetings at Spartansburg, Pa., with Evangelist C. H. Price, January 29, and will assist Evangelist F. H. Baker at Kane, Pa., beginning February 19. Professor McKeever was with Dr. J. Q. A. Henry last fall in two campaigns, and his chorus leading, and Gospel singing were an important factor in the success of the services.

WEST VIRGINIA

REV. WALTER M. JENNINGS, died at his home in Parkersburg, January 26, aged 54 years. He was born in Powhatan County, Virginia; educated in Richmond College and Crozer Seminary—in the latter when Dr. Henry G. Weston was President. He served several churches in Western Pennsylvania after his graduation from Crozer. Later, he spent fourteen years in pastorates on the Pacific Coast, seven in east and seven in west Washington. In 1914, he returned to the East and engaged in evangelistic work for some months. Then he was called to the pastorate of First church, Mannington, where he labored for five years. The heavy debt on the building was paid off; many were added to the membership of the church, and the efficiency of the organization was advanced along all lines. On account of declining health, he was compelled to give up the pastorate there. During the past months he suffered with cancer, from which disease he succumbed. His funeral was conducted by Rev. E. E. White, pastor of Dudley Avenue church, Parkersburg, assisted by several local ministers and general workers. Brother Jennings was married to Miss Alice Maude Mills of Richmond, Virginia. To them three children were born two of whom survive him. His wife died in 1898, and on December 25, 1901 he was married to Miss Fannie Morgan of Pennsylvania, at present field worker under the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of West Virginia. Brother Jennings was a faithful minister of Christ, and a profound student and teacher of the Word.

NEW YORK

FIRST CHURCH, Johnson City, has completed a religious educational building. It is about eighty feet square, is four stories high, and was built at a cost of $95,000. In the basement is a large gymnasium, with separate shower-baths and locker-rooms for boys and girls. On the main floor is a large assembly room; opening out of it by folding doors are department rooms for beginners, primaries and juniors, with small rooms for the librarian and the superintendent. Above are rooms for the young people's department, with separate rooms for the young men and young women, and rooms for adult classes. The building is up-to-date in every way. Rev. Grant Chambers, of Oneida, who was converted in this church and later served as its pastor, conducted the campaign to raise the money. Thirty thousand dollars had previously been raised, which left $65,000 to be secured. The full amount with a nice margin over was raised in pledges for two years, with a considerable portion of it paid in cash. This was made possible by the generosity of George F. Johnson, president of the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Corporation, who covered each dollar raised by the church with one of his own. Johnson City Church was the first Baptist church in the East to adopt the Storehouse Tithers' Plan of church finance, and it has made wonderful progress under this system. It was made plain that no member of the tithers' association would be asked to make a pledge, and this was strictly adhered to; but at the close it was found that nearly every tither had made a pledge in addition to his tithe which is paid in every Sunday. The pastor, Rev. Lucius E. Ford, has been with the church nearly seven years. During these years the membership has nearly doubled, and offerings for missions and benevolence have increased 950 per cent. Mr. Ford has helped a number of other churches to organize Storehouse Tithers' Leagues, and now is reaping the harvest of wonderful results which this plan will bring to any church which adopts it.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE CHURCH AT PHILIPSBURG, Rev. Chas. F. Kulp, pastor, has closed a two weeks' series of evangelistic meetings, having followed closely the Keystone Plan of evangelism outlined by the department of evangelism under the direction of Rev. A. B. Strickland. The church was fortunate in securing the assistance of Brother Strickland, who delivered a strong series of evangelistic sermons. A well developed organization has been effected to carry on the future work on the principle that each church is its own best evangelist and that every believer should be an evangelist. There were seventy professed conversions and the church feels that this is but the beginning of the campaign.

REV. OSWALD H. RANKIN began his pastorate at First Church, Chester, Jan. 1, coming from Pawtucket, R. I., where he had a successful pastorate with Broadway Church. The work at Chester is opening up enthusiastically and all services are well attended. Pastor Rankin has organized a troop of boy scouts; Mrs. Rankin a troop of girl scouts. The annual meeting and roll-call of the church was held Jan. 19. A bountiful supper served by the ladies of the church was followed by roll-call and business meeting. Reports of officers and committees showed the church to be in good condition spiritually and financially. A large number of the resident members responded to the roll-call, and there were messages from several absent ones.

A Rumor Corrected

Recently the Foreign Mission Society has received letters from several of its supporters, reporting an article appearing in a small church paper published in South Carolina, in which Dr. R. A. Torrey, of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, was quoted as saying: "The Northern Baptist Mission in Central China is rotten." A communication was addressed immediately to Dr. Torrey, stating that the Foreign Mission Society was unwilling to believe that he had been quoted accurately, but adding: "If, however, you remember making a remark reflecting at all upon our mission work in China, we should be glad to have you tell us just what you said and to give us the sources of your information." Dr. Torrey has replied to the Foreign Mission Society as follows:

"I do not know what words of mine could have been twisted into the statement, 'The Northern Baptist Mission in Central China is rotten.' I have made no statement of any kind regarding the Northern Baptist Mission of Central China that I can recall. In fact, as far as I know, I did not know that the Northern Baptists had a special mission in Central China.

"I thank you for calling my attention to this. You are, of course, at liberty to print this letter, if you so desire."

Inasmuch as considerable publicity was given to the alleged statement by Dr. Torrey, it seems appropriate to publish his reply. No comment is necessary, except to suggest that friends of our missionary agencies will always do well to make sure that reports reflecting on the missionaries are fully substantiated before they are accepted as true. Officers of the Foreign Mission Society are always grateful to friends of the work who make inquiry before accepting statements which give them concern.—JAMES H. FRANKLIN, Foreign Secretary.

The Promise of His Coming, by Chester C. McCown, Professor of New Testament Religion, Pacific School of Religion, New York: The MacMillan Company.

Another of the recent attempts to solve the millennial problem from the modern critical point of view. Professor McCown frankly rejects both the premillenarian and the postmillenarian conclusions and the theories of verbal inspiration and inerrancy on which they rest; traces apocalypticism to primitive mythology; works out a historical reconstruction of the Bible; explains the apocalyptic element in the teaching of Jesus as the effort of genius to express itself under the limitations of the common habits of thinking and speaking among the people he addressed; adopts the social-spiritual interpretation of his coming and his kingdom; and shows how, by that interpretation, the really valuable elements in apocalypticism and millennialism are conserved. From this and other recent books of its kind it is evident that millennialism is to meet a new and scholarly challenge on fundamental grounds, and no pastor can afford to be without a knowledge of the argument here presented.

The Church in the Present Crisis, by William Allen Harper, President of Elon College, N. C. New York: F. H. Revell Co.

A change in the title of this book would give a truer clue to its contents. It is a discussion of the practical principles of Bible Christianity applied to human society—statesmanship, the church, the home, social life, economics, money. It speaks also of the privileges and opportunities the Great Religion offers, with a brief survey of its doctrinal fundamentals and essentials. Vigorously written and abounding in helpful suggestions.

The Modern Theory of the Bible, by Samuel A. Steel. New York: F. H. Revell Co.

A controversial and apologetic work prepared from the orthodox viewpoint. It attacks strenuously the higher criticism, Darwinian evolution and kindred modernistic theories. The author marshals his energies for effective attacks on the inferences, probabilities and guesses of which something has been heard. He answers objections and explains perplexities with enviable dexterity. At times he leans backward more than is necessary. An interesting volume and a good counter-irritant.

"It Is to Laugh"

A popular rector, going up the steps of his church to conduct the service, was accosted by a stately old lady in difficulties with her breathing.

"Pardon me," she said, "but would you do me the favor of assisting me up the steps?"

"Certainly, madam," assented the rector, giving her his arm. They reached the door, when the old lady, pausing for a moment's rest, said:

"Pardon me once more, but do you happen to know who is preaching this morning?"

"The rector, madam," replied the cleric. "Oh!" she said. "Then might I beg you to do me yet another favor?"

"Certainly," replied the rector. "What else can I do for you?"

"Would you be so good as to assist me down the steps again?"—The Continent.

There is a fine new building of white marble and Greek architecture in a Western city. On the corner-stone is engraved the date of the building's erection. It was begun in 1909, but, following the usual custom, the date is in Roman capitals, thus: MCMIX.

The other day one citizen approached another and asked him if he had seen their common friend Danny that day.

"I sure did," replied the second man. "A few minutes ago I seen him standing in front of McMick's new building over there on the corner."—The Epworth Herald.

Examination papers from the University of California produced the following bit of information: "William Shakespeare was born in 1776. The place of his birth is uncertain; some say Strassburg, some Stratford, some stratford von a von. Most probably he was born in the first or the last, since he was the greatest German poet. There are other authorities on file, however, who believe he was not the greatest German poet, but that he was first discovered by the Germans to be the greatest poet. However this may be, it is certain he was the son of the village blacksmith, the ninth son of honest parents. . . . Among his best known plays are 'The Taming of the Shrewd,' 'Juliet Caesar,' 'The Hurricane.' . . . He created some wonderful characters like the wired sisters in Macbeth and the Aerial by which her master spoke over long distances in another play."

these objects and its members render such aid as they are called upon for. It distributes anti-Bolshevistic literature among both native and foreign born population. Its influence is felt on Beacon Hill and in Washington. Just now it has sent a vigorous protest to Senator Lodge, Commissioner Haynes and others, protesting any change in the work so ably performed by Harold G. Wilson.

A monthly supper is maintained at which men of national repute and others bring inspiration and instruction. This is a feature of the work greatly enjoyed by the men. It takes its place in athletics, has a strong bowling league and other athletic features.

At different times the Brotherhood conducts meetings at the mission and out of doors. A splendid religious department is maintained. At the present time it is raising money to support ten French boys in France. This is under the direction of Rev. O. Brouillette, our representative in France in reconstruction. A large sum was raised at Christmas time for the starving children of the world. Several clubs are connected with it through its members—a Masonic, Odd-fellows, student traveling men and others for mutual help and benefit. A Massachusetts state day, at which the governor speaks, occurs once a year. Other days are featured. An annual banquet and ladies' night is held in May at which time the seats are removed from the main temple and tables are set on the floor and in both balconies. This is one of the great gatherings of the year.

An employment department has been of great service to the men through the years past. The director has offices on the fifth floor of the temple and meets the men for conference and help. This is a helpful part of the work and volumes might be written of its usefulness.

No small part of the work of the Brotherhood is distributing cards, going to hotels and other places where men gather and inviting them to the services, visiting prisons and hospitals. It helps men who are not American born to secure their naturalization papers. An occasional entertainment is given by the organization—sometimes popular lectures.

The Brotherhood idea is a chance for any church to enlist its men for service. At the present crisis in Tremont Temple when it is without a pastor, the men are not only held together but are keeping up the interest of the church so that it maintains its high standard of efficiency. No small part of its work is that of making a place for the large army of young men who live in boarding houses with no place to meet friends and have a home life.

WILLIAM LESTER

OF INTEREST TO ORGANISTS

On several occasions we have been glad to review and give publicity to the excellent journal for organists and all interested in the betterment of church music—The American Organ Monthly. Established some two years ago, under the expert editorship of Edward Shippin Barnes, and issued from the quality press of the Boston Music Co., it has achieved a strong and valued position as a vital musical factor in the esthetic life of this country. The announcement is now made that the journal has come under the management and ownership of the H. W. Gray Co., 2 West 45th Street, New York. From this firm comes the attached circular, giving details of future plans and ambitions:

It need scarcely be said that the high musical ideals of the Boston Music Co. will be maintained by the new proprietors—maintained, and it is hoped extended. For it is the earnest desire of the H. W. Gray Co. continually to raise the musical standard of the American organist, by providing him, not only with small pieces for church use, but with works in the larger and more solid forms. In this way recital programs will be benefited.

It is a lamentable fact that the organist is not normally a composer. He occasionally produces a small "organ piece," just as the singing-master occasionally produces a small—usually a very small—ballad. But neither of these efforts can be taken quite seriously. Surely there is something wrong here! The organist receives from the modern organ-builder an instrument of infinite tonal variety and of unparalleled ease of execution. With this at his command he should have the same delight in expressing himself organically as the orchestral composer has in expressing himself orchestral.

A few composers, it is true, tackle the larger forms. But not many of their publications prosper as they deserve to do. Organists are a little narrow on this point, and should try to become less so. They know that music has to be "hammered into peoples' heads," and so are often afraid to touch new music. But this (as Stanford has pointed out in the last chapter of his Pages from an Unwritten Diary) is precisely where the church is in a position to effect greater musical miracles than any other organization. For it alone can repeat good new music continually until the "hammering in" process is completed. This is a point on which every organist should be actively conscious of his own responsibilities. And if only he is careful with his preliminary choice, he will often be surprised and encouraged by the results.

These are matters on which there can be no difference of musical opinion. At the same time the difficulties of putting these high ideals into practice are known to all.

The American Organ Monthly stands for this cause fair and square, and its new proprietors will be glad to receive suggestions for the furthering of the cause. One valuable suggestion has already been received and decided upon. It is that after the expiration of the present year, the Monthly should become a Quarterly to be issued with three times the present amount of music in January, April, July, and October. The music will be more quickly appraised as to quality, when received in this form. It will be more compact, more easily handled at the organ-bench.

On any point connected with the future policy of The American Organ Monthly the H. W. Gray Co. will be glad to receive correspondence and will welcome unpublished manuscripts of organ music, provided only that they have inherent musical value.

MUSIC REVIEW

From the Forster Music Pub. Co., Chicago, Ill.

Pale Moon Logan ($6.00)
Sacrament MacDermid ($6.00)

Two very interesting and singable songs, each issued in several keys to meet the particular needs of the different voices. The first is an atmosphere setting of a virile lyric of fine emotional appeal. The composer has given the singing fraternity a splendid number for concert purposes. The other song is equally fitted for recital use, and even more so for teaching purposes. To an imaginative text of poetic excellence Mr. MacDermid has wedded lovely music of highly singable quality and melodic appeal. The sincere ethical message of the song is not to be ignored. The publisher is to be complimented on the tasteful and elegant dress in which the songs have been issued. The strikingly beautiful covers add much to the looks of the numbers.

From the Lorenz Publishing Co., Dayton, Ohio.

My Redeemer Lives.....Wilson ($6.00)
The Kingdom of God.....Heyser ($6.00)
Victory.....Wildermere ($6.00)

Above are listed three new cantatas for Easter-tide by well-known composers, published by a firm noted for its exact knowledge of the needs of the general field of church-music. The issues under present consideration are of the usual high order of value and service to be expected of the Lorenz forces. All are easy, suited to the needs of untrained choirs, and of musical value to appeal to the more professional grades. The writing is sufficient for the purpose intended, the melodic lines are well tended, the harmonic texture is rich, and ample, and the tone is devotional and churchy. Choirs in search of special music for this season should give serious consideration to the three works listed above. They are worthy of such attention.

From Chappell-Harms, Inc., New York, N. Y.

Were I a Butterfly.....Lehman ($6.00)
I Pitch My Lonely Caravan at Night Coates ($6.00)
Some Day You Will Miss Me.....Darewski ($6.00)
Brown Eyes Beneath the Moon.....Coates ($6.00)
The Little Girl Waiting at Home.....Wood ($6.00)
Geraldine.....Clarke ($6.00)
Love's a Merchant.....Carew ($6.00)

For the lover of songs with real "tunes," songs not purporting to solve any ethical or philosophical problems nor to represent the last obsession in the way of peculiar noises (sometimes labelled "modernism"), the series of ballads listed above is to be recommended. Without exception they are singable, easy to read and to play, dealing in sentiment with every-day emotions and motives. They are mediums for leisurely enjoyment; especially well adapted for teaching material, as off-sets to more "high-brow" repertoire.

ENGLEWOOD CHURCH, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

FIFTY YEARS of age on February 8. The stone building here pictured was built in 1890 and replaced a wooden edifice erected in 1873. Like all church buildings, it is a symbol—a living witness of the faith and devotion of men and women who have tried to express in visible form their inner spirit. To help make Jesus Christ supreme in the hearts of men all over the world this house of God stands in one of the world's great cities.

Fresh from the Field

A recent study of attendance records in one of our Pittsburgh Sunday schools brought out the fact that the best attendance was had when the weather was average or worse than average. The poorest attendance records were made on days that were either exceptionally fine or unusually bad. It was also shown that, as a rule, the first Sunday of the month was marked by the lowest attendance, the numbers increasing each Sunday until the end of the month. It would be interesting to know if such conditions are found in other schools.

Rev. U. B. Conklin passed to his reward in December, in Minneapolis, Minn., at the age of ninety-five. He and his wife celebrated their seventieth wedding anniversary in May, 1921. He was a life-long reader of and subscriber to The Watchman of the Prairies, the Standard and THE BAPTIST. In the early 70's he settled on a claim near Canton, S. D., and for many years was pastor of churches in that locality. He was the last of the pioneer Baptist preachers of Dakota, and always an earnest, lovable, hard-working Christian man. Mrs. Conklin, who has always been a true helpmeet and a devoted mother to her children, is still living at the age of eighty-eight.

The church at Owatonna, Minn., Rev. Arthur Wickenden, pastor, is engaged in an evangelistic campaign which began Feb. 15. Dr. Geo. E. Burlingame is the evangelist and Wallace Tuttle of Kansas City is director of music.

Sherwood Eddy spent the week beginning Feb. 12 in Ohio and of this time gave three days to Denison University.

Calvary Church, New York City, is to hold a revival campaign for the three weeks beginning March 26, at which the preacher will be Dr. J. Frank Norris, pastor of the First Church, Fort Worth, Texas, who has recently conducted a successful campaign at Tremont Temple, Boston.

An enthusiastic meeting of laymen from the churches of San Francisco and vicinity was held in the First Church, Oakland, Cal., on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 5. At this meeting, Col. Edward H. Haskell, of Boston, president of the M. & M. Board, gave an address on the subject, "The Challenge of our Baptist Denomination to its Laymen."

The Foreign Mission Society has received a personal letter from Russia, a part of which is as follows: "I think the situation very encouraging. I think you will have a formal invitation to come, or send a representative, to meet with like representatives from the Southern Board and the British Union to confer with the councils of the All-Russian Baptist Union and the All-Russian Evangelical Christian Union regarding the matter of uniting the two bodies. The union of these two Baptist groups would make it (according to the estimate of the leaders here) the second largest Baptist body in the world, that is, of about 2,000,000 members." Probably it is impossible for even the Baptist leaders in Russia to estimate accurately under present conditions the actual strength of their denomination, but the information reaching the Foreign Mission Society from several sources in-

Can It Be True?

Illustrating the need of a clear understanding of the issues involved in our denominational problems a well-known layman before a group of Baptists said: "In our state one of our laymen is greatly disturbed by rumors of dissension in our ranks. 'Yes, a split has come,' said he, 'the Fundamentalists are lined up against the Orthodox.' He probably referred to the 'Evangelicals.'" THE BAPTIST rejoices in its position. We shall aim to state freely, frankly and as far as humanly possible without prejudice, the issues before the brotherhood.

Killam's Kollum

Add a Little to What You Have

When a church has a good list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST and secures the renewals it is good work. Many churches, however, do much better. They secure the renewals and then add new recruits. Rev. G. R. Holt, Hilton, N. Y., sends fourteen new annual subscriptions; Sarah M. Blanchard of La Crosse, Wis., seventeen; John Sutherland, Pierre, S. D., nine; Rev. R. W. Hobbs, Fargo, N. D., eight; and I. M. Jones, Milwaukee, nine during the past few days.

Purged By Fire

On Feb. 13 we were burned out. The following wire to a good friend tells the story: "We were agreed that the calamities of the Killams were near an end. We take this method of notifying you that they are nearer an end by so much as a house and most of its contents which were this thirteenth day destroyed by fire, water and general havoc. Hence this 'collect' message." Mrs. K. K. looking at the smoking embers said: "Edgar, about the only house we now have is that 'not made with hands.'" It was true but we had no transportation. We, are, therefore, stopping with good friends. We can no longer say that our books are as "dry as dust." Many of them are embalmed in ice, a most fitting symbol of their contents. Like the minister who lost his library we shall now be obliged to depend upon Providence for material for this page.

Denominational Jumping Jacks

The editor of this Kollum has traveled during the past six years just a bit under 150,000 miles attending denominational gatherings. He has as a result learned about seven things. Six of the seven for reasons precautionary he will keep to himself. The seventh he can withhold no longer. In the various areas you are safe in guaranteeing that certain good men will be heard again and again and again on any question which may come before the meeting. We have been trying to discover the reason for this phenomenon. Is it because those to whom they speak are unusually dense, or is it because these brethren fail to so state their positions that they can be understood, or do they want their own way? We cannot say. In some cases doubtless the real reason is that certain men have a vast fund of information upon the subjects under consideration. In other cases it is just as certainly a matter of habit and in still others we cannot help feeling that it is due to that perfectly human desire to hear one's self talk. To get a reputation for wisdom we must learn to keep our mouths shut. Ministers, editors, secretaries and some laymen talk so much that they are rarely counted among the wise men.

dicates that in spite of the internal disturbances in Russia the last few years the Baptists in that country have made great gains. The division spoken of as the Evangelical Christian Union is a large group of churches holding to Baptist principles and practices although our own denominational name has not been used by them. They have been so consistently Baptist in principle and practice that they were recognized as entitled to membership in the Baptist World Alliance, and have been represented in the meetings of that body. Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, will go into Russia as soon as possible and establish contacts with the Baptist groups in that country.

The First Church of Key West has just closed one of the sanest, greatest and most far-reaching evangelistic campaigns ever held in this city. Fourteen have been received into the membership of the church at the time of the present writing, with several others to follow. The preacher of the occasion was the pastor's brother, Rev. Joel R. Lunsford, pastor First Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. For three weeks he preached with great power and acceptance. Great interest was aroused from the very first, and the tide of enthusiasm soon spread to the outside. Hundreds have been lifted to a higher plane of spirituality and service, and the whole city has received a blessing. The religion of Jesus has received a new impetus on this far-away island of the southern seas.

Dr. W. Edward Raffety, editor-in-chief of the Publication Society, was operated on recently at the West Jersey Hospital for appendicitis and intestinal adhesions. His friends are pleased that the operation was successful and that he is now at his home in Haddonfield, N. J., on the way to recovery.

Just as we go to press word reaches us of the marriage on Feb. 13, at Oakland, Cal., of Dr. Frank W. Padelford, secretary of the Board of Education, to Miss Gertrude Lois Ilsley, daughter of Rev. George B. Ilsley. THE BAPTIST unites its congratulations with those of a host of friends.

Board of Foreign Mission Society Meets at Capital

By EARLE B. CROSS

THE Board of Managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society held sessions in Washington, D. C., Feb. 13-14, 1922. Notable meetings were arranged in connection with the sessions of the board. On Sunday, Feb. 12, officers of the society and members of the board spoke from the pulpits of many of the Baptist churches of the capital city.

Prof. F. L. Anderson, chairman of the board, Rev. R. B. Longwell, missionary to Assam, Rev. A. C. Hanna, missionary to Burma, and Home Secy. Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, appeared on the program of the Baptist Ministers' Conference on Monday. We present a brief composite summary of these addresses.

We face a Christless world. Our aim is to make Christian men and women; to cause Christian homes and communities to appear where now is Christless mankind weltering in sin and misery. White men never can evangelize Asia and Africa. We can only start the process. Our plans must be shaped to develop native leadership in order that we may produce self-sustaining, self-propagating native churches, which shall Christianize their fellows.

There are hosts of eager seekers for truth whom the present organization is inadequate to instruct in the way. Three hundred and eighty were baptized on a single Sunday morning at Banza Mantek, a short time ago. Twice as many await opportunity to receive instruction. They should not be baptized until they have had thorough preparation. In Assam there is crying need for a higher school for the training of the future leadership of many tribes. These prospective teachers and preachers must go 500 miles to the school of another denomination for their high-school work, until the desired school at Kohima is provided. Far over the hills in upper Burma, tribe after tribe is waiting for the answer to their calls for the gospel. The New World Movement must be carried to a successful issue, for in every mission field thousands of men and women and children will otherwise be denied the gospel.

Today we face the greatest deficit we have ever had in funds for the work. This is due to our attempt to restore our staff and equipment to the standards which existed prior to the war. Costs of material and travel, money exchange, and all else are many times higher than in former days. We do face a deficit. We are facing it because we have been confident in the support of our constituency as we endeavor to maintain the scope and character of our work. We face a deficit; but we also face the greatest opportunity we have ever had. If we may judge by the reports which we are hearing from every field of hundreds turning to Christ, we may confidently assert that the final summary of the year's work will prove it to be the greatest year we have had in spiritual matters.

Rev. W. H. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Church, presided at the banquet board on Monday evening. The large dining hall at the church was taxed to its capacity with representatives of the several Baptist churches of Washington city. The assembly was honored also by the presence of the ambassador of the United States to Siam and the minister from Czecho-Slovakia to the United States. Both of these gentlemen favored the audience with brief addresses. The stated addresses were delivered by Prof. H. B. Robins of Rochester Theological Seminary, Treas. G. B. Huntington, Mr. Henry Bond of the board of managers, and Secy. J. H. Franklin.

Professor Robins paid tribute to the character and ability of the missionaries who are in the service of the society in various lands. Their unsung heroism is superb, and their task is a constant challenge to the achievement of the impossible. They are a company of which we may well be proud.

The serious financial situation and plans for its solution were outlined in the course of the evening. The hopeful note was not lacking. Much confidence appears to have been aroused by the rallying of the laymen to the task. Mr. Bond emphasized the call sounded by Judge F. W. Freeman, chairman of the National Laymen's Committee, "What we need is not more men, but more man."

Europe in especial manner calls to us today. Not only is the plea for ministry to the physical needs of men. We have rendered such service splendidly through the Ship of Fellowship. This ministry of aid without discrimination as to the creed of those who received help, has deeply affected the souls of all who know about the relief ship and the distribution of its cargo. There is also a challenge from Europe to us as Baptists to come to the aid of liberated peoples. Nations which have thrown off the autocratic yoke of a state-religion and ecclesiastic domination, need the counsel and encouragement of freedom-loving evangelical bodies like the Baptists. Ever-enlarging opportunities will appear in Europe in the days to come. Russia alone promises to be a field of boundless possibility for an evangel such as the Baptists have to give to the world.

No incident in the program was fraught with greater significance than the visit to the White House on Tuesday afternoon. The President received the board with a cordial handclasp for each at the introduction of Dr. Abernethy. The board expressed through the chairman, Dr. F. L. Anderson, its good wishes to President Harding, and commendations to him and to Secretary Hughes for the task which they have accomplished in the assembling of the Conference on Limitation of Armaments. The successful issue of the conference is fraught with blessings for humanity, and the work in which the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society is engaged will be reinforced thereby. Assurance was given to the President that every good office of the Society would be employed in the effort to prevail upon public sentiment to secure the passage of measures by congress in ratification of the treaties negotiated by the delegates of the United States to the Conference on Limitation of Armaments.

"Laddie Boy," the White House dog, held a reception in the ante-room immediately after the audience with the President was concluded. His enthusiasm was effusive and unrestrained as is natural for a dog nurtured in a Baptist home, when a board of Baptist ministers and deacons comes on a visit.

The Baptist

The Church in the City

WE HAVE been told that "God made the country, but man made the city." The statement in part is true, but it is also a fact that God gave to men those impulses which lead them to gather into communities and to attempt to do things together. The man-made city, however, has for many years now shown a tendency to get beyond the control of its makers. Its politics, its social life and its religious institutions have vexed men's souls because of the difficulties they presented, while they have at the same time challenged men's spirit. Thus it comes about that there are great problems connected with religious work in great centers of population. This issue of THE BAPTIST indicates some of these and tells what is being done by Baptists in meeting them. The one missing feature is an expected article by Dr. Chas. A. Brooks in which this whole question of the church in the big city should be summed up.

Churches migrate just as families do under the pressure of business and of incoming populations which are not congenial. So there has been a steady exodus of important churches from down-town sections, a movement in which even Roman Catholic churches have shared. There are presented in this issue the stories of three churches which have stuck. One of them has become a great preaching center free to all people; one has found, in the name of Christ, a social ministry which opens the way for the gospel message; the third has discovered that, when the people are right, there are numberless adaptations by which a church may fit itself to its changing environment.

City mission work once meant the planning and carrying through of religious work for the foreign-speaking populations which throng our cities. It continues to mean that and on a larger scale than ever. But our great city mission societies have now become far more; they are our boards of strategy which study city growth, which note movements of population and which assist in the planting of churches in sections sparsely populated perhaps at the moment but which are destined to be of the utmost importance. Time will be well spent in reading over, at least hastily, the story, printed in this number, of the kind of work which these agencies of ours are doing. They deserve ever-increasing consideration from the denomination.

In many of our states, the country has become suspicious and fearful of the city and its growing power. At the same time the city has become resentful of the interference of the country. There is no longer the uniformity of feeling and population which once existed. Especially does the country rebel against the possible rule of all sections of a state by one or more big cities. The church has an interest in that feeling and it has as a very definite task the bringing of sweetness and light and healing into the city that the conditions which make for such prejudice and distrust may be done away.

The vision of the prophet included the sight of little children happily playing in the streets of the city. They are not safe in the streets of most of our cities and the damage done their bodies is the least which threatens. To help make the cities safe for childhood is a Christian ministry; to preach the gospel and to practice it in all its implications among the poor and the ignorant is a Christian duty. Purity and honor and sweet reasonableness are not going to be forced upon people from without; if they come at all, they will grow from a new spirit which is planted and nourished within.

Men have often said that the country churches must be saved because of the ministry which goes from them to the city as their sons and daughters seek the large centers. It is equally true that the city church must be saved and made strong and vigorous for the sake of the country church. James Bryce declared that the one great failure in our American system is found in the government of our cities. Ultimately it will defeat democracy if correction does not come. The weakness of our churches, as Baptists, is found in the great cities. And yet we must know that a paganism which captures the cities will, in time, subdue the entire country. None too soon have we begun to give our best thought to the question of the city church.

The New World Movement has been of much assistance to this work in the cities. Out of it has grown a larger interest and a larger program. That movement must be sustained to the limit, not that we may avoid defeat in some great program, but rather that we may not meet defeat in carrying out the program which our Lord has laid upon us as Christian men and women.

One of our war poets said that poems can be made with ease by "fools like me" but that "only God can make a tree." We are a little skeptical as to the relation between fools and poems, but we are absolutely certain about the tree. It is God alone who gives life; it is God alone who makes men new; it is through the Divine Spirit alone that men are born again. But this same God works through living beings and expects to make our present cities into cities of God through such fools as you and me. Shall we become such fools for Christ's sake, such instruments of God's will?

Editorial Comment

THE "EVANGELICALS" APPEAR ON THE SCENE

The denomination has now become accustomed to the word "Fundamentalists," and thinks that in general it knows what is meant. Now another word is presented to us, namely, "Evangelicals," and communications are beginning to go out under this name. THE BAPTIST hopes to be able shortly to state just what this group of earnest men and women within the denomination stand for and what program they are placing before themselves. In a sense they stand over against the "Fundamentalists," especially against the literalism of some of the brethren who bear that name. But they are insistent that they believe whole-heartedly and without reserve on Jesus Christ and in salvation by grace through faith in Christ. More about them later. Meanwhile we shall have to inquire again just what the term "Baptists" means and who are included under it. A good, wholesome discussion, without bitterness or recrimination, will be a good thing and will doubtless help to clear the air for many of the brethren. If we need anything just now, it is to determine just where we are at as Baptists.

WEDDING BELLS FOR DR. LAWS

On Tuesday, Feb. 14, Dr. Curtis Lee Laws, editor of the Watchman-Examiner, was married to Miss Susan Bancroft Tyler, of Baltimore, Md. We speak for a host of friends in extending to our genial brother editor hearty congratulations and best wishes. He is always a good fellow, whether you agree with him or not, and we wish for him the greatest happiness. We understand that Dr. and Mrs. Laws are to make an extended trip abroad.

THE BONUS IN POLITICS

No true American has any hesitation in saying that all the men who were disabled in the war should have such assistance from the government as their condition may make necessary. The sum being paid out on this account now amounts to hundreds of millions annually, but there is no complaint.

There is, however, apparent a marked difference of opinion on the question of granting all soldiers a flat bonus. Undoubtedly discussion is colored by the fear of men to say anything which can in any way be interpreted as being unfriendly to the soldiers, but enough comes to the surface to make it clear that public opinion is not a unit on the matter. There seems to be the feeling that men who need help would not be greatly assisted by the small amount of money involved, while those who do not need it should not now have a money value put on the high patriotism with which they went into the conflict. All agree that such a bonus will be a heavy burden on the country at a time when financial conditions are none too stable.

Most unfortunate of all, however, is it that this matter of the bonus is being made a political question. Shall Republicans or Democrats make capital out of it seems to be the issue. Many men are determining their expressed views and actions solely in view of the possible political result. All thinking men should condemn that tendency. Whatever else holds, the whole matter of the bonus should be decided on its merits and not because of its possible effects on next fall's elections.

A BARE-FACED STEAL

Latvia has a population of about 2,000,000 people of whom three-fourths are strongly Protestant, and have been so since 1522. In Riga the Roman Catholics number about 15,000 in a population of 185,000. Now that Latvia is a sovereign state the Roman Church wants to be "adequately" represented. So an Archbishopric of Riga is to be created, and the Latvian state has been persuaded to provide the archbishop with a cathedral church and a residence, to pay the salaries of this official and his staff, to provide buildings and means for the establishment of a theological seminary, to guarantee all churches, etc., against expropriation or confiscation, to permit the archbishop to take part in the procedure of any court trying a case against a clergyman of the Roman Church, and to allow any sentenced clergyman to serve his term in a monastery.

The proposal specifies the church to be given to the archbishop. It is the church of St. James, the oldest and largest Lutheran church in Riga, which stands in the great public square and has been for centuries the center of the church life of Riga. It has become a sort of Lutheran cathedral for the district. To the Protestants of Northeastern Europe this church is as precious as Independence Hall is to us. That is why Rome covets it, that it may capitalize all this history. Rome does not need this church, having already in Riga one church to each 4,000 adherents. But it desires the building which will enhance its own glory.

If this deal goes through it will be a bare-faced steal. The very act which would protect Roman property from confiscation would confiscate Lutheran property. We do not know of any other church which would even for a moment consider such a proposition. A consideration of it will help Americans to a better understanding of modern Rome. If Protestant world opinion can do anything, the plan should be blocked.

THE PRESIDENT'S NEW FAITH

At the closing session of the Washington Conference, President Harding expressed the congratulations and gratitude of the United States to the men who had taken part in the conference and to the nations which they represented. And then he uttered these remarkable words:

"Not all the world is yet tranquilized. But here is the example, to imbue with new hope all who dwell in apprehension. At this table came understanding, and understanding brands armed conflict as abominable in the eyes of enlightened civilization. I once believed in armed preparedness. I advocated it. But I have come now to believe there is better preparedness in a public mind and a world opinion made ready to grant justice precisely as it exacts it. And justice is better served in conferences of peace than in conflicts at arms."

Spoken like a Christian and an American. Such a sentiment carries us back to the belief under which the United States grew to greatness. If that is pacifism, let us have more of it. For there is no question that herein is pointed out the only method by which there may come a just and lasting peace. If the war has served to put the nations into a more reasonable frame of mind as they consider each other and each other's problems, it may yet prove in a sense to have been a war to end war.

A COAL STRIKE, SAY YOU?

Labor contracts in both hard and soft coal fields expire on April 1. And there are many rumors of war to break out on that date. The unions assert that they must have higher wages than the men have been receiving. The owners assert that if the public demand for lower prices on coal is to be met, there must be wage reduction. The unions reply that, whatever else happens, there can be no lowering of wages. The owners look upon such a declaration as an announcement of war. The public will draw its own conclusions. Such talk has become rather familiar in recent years and the recent threatened railroad strike is fresh in mind. Possibly there is a good deal of jockeying in all this, both sides trying to get into the best position possible for the shaping of a new and advantageous agreement.

What is the public to do? Well, it must insist first of all that a strike in any basic industry is a matter of public concern and that the public cannot be ignored. Then, it can demand reasonableness on both sides of the controversy. Obstinacy and an unwillingness to face facts is not a virtue on anybody's part. And then it can make sure that no gentle agreement reached by operators and owners and workers shall be an excuse for holding coal prices up to the present outrageous level. The householder is entitled to relief. There is no legitimate reason why coal for domestic use should remain at its present high price level. But the public will have to watch out if it expects any such relief.

REFORMING THE CALENDAR

Congress is being asked to reform the calendar. According to the bill which has been introduced there would be, instead of the present arrangement, thirteen months of twenty-eight days each and the odd day would be called New Year day and not belong to any month. In leap years there would be added a special day between June and July. The extra month would be called "Vern" and would be the month which would include the vernal equinox. The great advantage would be that, after the adoption of such a calendar, the same dates for every month would then be fixed for each day of the week to the end of time. The need of calendars would be done away with at a yearly saving of something like $25,000,000.

We may expect protest from those whose birthdays come in the last three days of the month and who would under any such arrangement wonder whether they had any birthday at all. The confusion which would result in all the dates of the past and in modern business arrangement would also not be slight. Scientific schemes of this sort always have an appeal for a certain type of mind, but those who remember the story of the difficulties through which men went in bringing about the adoption of the present calendar and how the East clings to another calendar will not hurry to introduce yet more confusion.

O RIGHTEOUS JUDGE!

The decision of Judge Guy in a New York court in ordering the association of cloak manufacturers of that city to carry out its agreement with the cloak makers' union is, says The Youth's Companion, a rather new thing in jurisprudence. Hitherto there has been no attempt to bring a whole organization of employers into court on an issue of that kind. Individual employers have been sued when they broke pledges, and unions have been indicted for conspiracy, but whenever labor has had a grievance against the men who control an entire industry it has preferred to strike rather than to trust to court proceedings. Judge Guy's order has been appealed to a higher court, but if, as seems likely, it is affirmed, the episode will be of real value in teaching both employers and employed that agreements freely entered into are contracts and, like any other contracts, can be enforced by law.

In cases like that of the Danbury hatters, organized labor has found that a broken agreement may bring uncomfortable consequences. If associations of employers took comfort from that, they may also take warning from this New York case. Nothing will work in the long run except even-handed justice—justice which is just as quick and just as effective when one group is the offender as when the other is guilty. There will be more respect for plighted faith everywhere if it is found that the Courts can always be depended upon to do the right thing. And mutual respect and faith are essentials in any industry.

SELECTING THE IMMIGRANTS

So much has been printed in the daily press regarding the races between steamships early in each month and the hardships borne by immigrants who arrived too late to be admitted that it is not strange if there is questioning in the minds of some people as to the working of the new immigration law under which aliens are admitted to the United States to the extent of not more than three per cent of any nation's population in this country in any one year. Therefore the statement of the commissioner of immigration, Mr. W. W. Husband, will be welcome, when he says that the method marks the successful working of a new policy under which the United States will practically choose the kind of immigrant it wants. In the past we have been the victims of steamship enterprise or of the dumping policy of foreign governments or of industrial concerns which wanted cheap labor, no matter from whence it came. And whenever restriction has been proposed interested groups raised the old cry about this country being a refuge for the oppressed of all nations. The new policy may be continued or not, but we mistake the temper of the country if in days to come there is not developed some form of selective immigration which shall have first regard for the well-being of the United States and its institutions. Human rights are not furthered by opening the door so wide that our institutions are drowned under a flood of unassimilable aliens.

Yesterday and Today in the Heart of Africa

Everywhere conditions of life have greatly improved. Cannibalism and witchcraft have passed away. The Good News is being sounded forth in at least forty languages

By JOSEPH CLARK

TO me it seems but a short time since 1880 when I landed at Banana which was then the port for the great Congo Valley. Nevertheless the many changes that have taken place, make forty years a period of tremendous importance in the history of this land and in the progress of God's plan for this world.

Forty years ago no ocean-going steamers attempted to ascend the Congo. They anchored at Banana in sight of the ocean. Very few vessels other than those from Liverpool called there. The Dutch Trading Company and Sir Henry M. Stanley had each a small steam launch which occasionally made trips up the river. On my first trip from Banana to Boma, I was eight days in a large Portuguese sailing boat loaded with poorly dried fish. The same journey is now made in seven hours. Probably not more than eighteen deep-sea steamers visited the port in a year. There was no police force, no law court, no post-office because there was no government.

The roads to the interior were untrodden by the white man except to San Salvador where missionaries of the British Missionary Society had gone. Stanley had made one journey from east to west on the north side of the Congo cataract region. Roads then did not lead from village to village, but to a common market center, and most of the natives journeyed no farther than to the market places nearest their towns as there was always danger in the other villages. The native was suspicious and from what he had heard or learned of the white man he desired the stranger to remain on the coast.

Life among the natives was very hard and hopeless for the many. Even for the favored few it was full of uncertainty. Accusations of "witchcraft" and resulting violent deaths were very common, and even babes were involved in this horrible sacrifice of life. On my first journey up the Palabala hill I saw but recently calcined bones of a man burnt at a stake by order of the old chief. Many times I heard signals telling of "witchcraft" ordeals, and later those telling the number and sex of the victims who had been killed. Cases of offenders being buried alive in the market places were not uncommon.

Generally a branch of a certain tree, driven down through the head of the "culprit" was left to grow and keep in memory the fate of the person, as a warning to others having evil powers or habits. Exportation of slaves had been put down, but domestic slavery was in full swing and the owner could do as he liked with or to his slave. One horrible feature of this was the burial alive of widows and slaves with the body of a chief. Near our mission in the early days nine slaves were buried alive in one such grave. Some had their legs broken to render them helpless.

I PLUCK an acorn from the greenward and hold it to my ear; and this is what it says to me:

"By and by the birds will come and nest in me. By and by I will furnish shade for the cattle. By and by I will provide warmth for the home in the pleasant fire. By and by I will be the shelter from the storm to those who have gone under the roof. By and by I will be the strong ribs of the great vessel and the tempest will bear against me in vain, while I carry men across the Atlantic."

O foolish little acorn, wilt thou be all this? I ask.

"YES: GOD AND I!"

—Lyman Abbott.

Forty years ago there were only two Protestant missions in the country. One was the British Missionary Society and the other later became the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. There were but three established mission stations, with less than twenty missionaries, all studying one language. There were neither translations, nor church members from among the natives.

The changes that have taken place since then seem almost incredible.

At this date there are two regular passenger lines running to Matadi, and the flags of at least six nations are frequently seen on steamers coming to this port from which the railway carries men and goods to the heart of Africa.

Now we have a government which imposes a code of laws on both black and white. With a colony in its infancy we recognize the enormous difficulty of imposing laws on the hitherto unhampered and lawless native; of raising up and thoroughly training an intelligent and effective police force, and in developing a general sentiment in favor of honest and lawful behaviour. But a good beginning has been made, and we have much reason to think that the good we have seen will increase continually as more knowledge of the native is gained and as the native begins to realize of what value an intelligent and sympathetic government is to him.

Another great advance will be noted on examination of maps published half a century ago, and comparison with those issued in recent years. Then the greater part of what is the Belgian and French Congo was marked, "Desert and uninhabited," whereas now paths and villages are shown by the thousand, and the white man has been in them.

Everywhere conditions of native life have greatly improved. The government has suppressed the little wars between separate villages. I remember seeing two fatally wounded women, brought in from a nearby garden, with barbed arrows in their bodies. They had been attacked by men of a neighboring village from which a slave had found refuge in the village of these women. On another occasion I saw an innocent stranger who had been fatally wounded with spears and arrows because it was thought a man from his town had stolen a canoe belonging to this one. That condition is at an end as the state has severely punished such offenses.

Except in very remote places, cannibalism and witchcraft trials have passed away and for fear of the "law" can occur only in the most secret manner possible. Domestic slavery exists in a very small and modified measure, but chiefly now it refers to girls. They are not called slaves, nor in the event of their becoming "widows" can they be "sent away" with the body of the chief.

When we turn to what has taken place in religious and spiritual matters the changes are even more wonderful. The missions now number about twenty. The three stations have become about 100, and the twenty missionaries about 400, and they are assisted by nearly 7,000

African evangelists, preachers and teachers. Forty years ago the Gospel was being haltingly taught in the Kikongo tongue, but the Good News is being sounded forth daily in at least forty languages. The whole Bible is being read in several tongues, the Gospels in a number of the others and there is a "host" of Scripture portions, religious and school books in the various languages in use.

With our evangelistic work, our Christian doctors and trained nurses, our hospitals and dispensaries, our Gospel printing presses and our Christian training schools, one cannot fail to see that God is doing great things for this needy field in Africa and we are by these assured that he is planning great things for it in the coming days.

We rejoice in the great mass of people who are crowding our dispensaries and schools and who thus come under Gospel influences; but we praise the Lord with full hearts when we think of our almost 56,000 church members, of approximately 36,000 registered as inquirers.

We have had abundant evidence of the sincerity of our converts as we think of the trials they have endured from their own people. Some have even given up life rather than turn from following Jesus. Also it is encouraging to note that about 1500 of the native evangelists and many of the school teachers are supported by the gifts of the native churches. Out of their little they gave in a year 126,267 francs, and this is in addition to much free service rendered to the Lord in carrying on the work of the churches. Surely the Lord hath done great things.

Harboring a Missionary

By A. W. RIDER

MY journeys in the Continuation Campaign took me a few days ago to Carrollton, Ill. In the library there I found in the history of the city and county, the account of the organization of the First Baptist Church.

Some ninety-five years ago, six persons met in the home of Justus Rider and banded themselves together in an organization to be known as the Baptist church of Christ of Carrollton. There were Sears Crane, Anna Crane his wife, Abraham Bowman, Mary Bowman his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Rider and Miss Phoebe Harris, sister of Mrs. Rider.

Dr. Bulkley of Shurtleff College, who was the historian of the fiftieth anniversary says: "Some of them had been previously excluded from an anti-mission Baptist church for holding and advocating missionary views."

It is indeed significant that four of the above mentioned six who constituted the new church should have been excluded from an anti-mission church. The charge of "harbouring a missionary" was made in that early day because in the Crane home and in the Rider home they had sheltered a Baptist missionary as he visited outlying and needy districts. In addition to all this, my grandmother was charged with "believing in Sunday schools, which were not mentioned in the Scriptures."

But history justifies the pioneer, for one of those itinerant missionaries who was harbored by my grandmother was Rev. John M.

Peck, who talked of a school he was soon to start and a lad in that home where Peck was "harbored," was led to enrol in the entering class of what is now Shurtleff College and made his home with John M. Peck's family. This lad, my father, there was led to confess Christ and later came back with church letter to be the first received by letter into that little Baptist church.

It is a significant fact that Miss Norton, a granddaughter of that other missionary spirited family was present at the meeting at Carrollton a few days ago and the two families thus disciplined for "harbouring a missionary" ninety-five years ago, were represented by a grandchild, at a missionary meeting held in the church whose organization was due to the missionary spirit. It was worth while to endure opposition in behalf of so great a cause, for it led to formation of what is now a strong missionary-hearted church; it led to grandchildren and children catching the vision of a life service worth preparing for and worth performing.

I wonder if in years to come it will be said that some individuals were under suspicion in that they "harboured the New World Movement," and in connection with this, urged that higher and now seemingly impossible standards of stewardship be set before the church. But wisdom is justified of her children and future days revealing a new denominational vigor and vision and strength will give its approval to the sacrificial spirit of the New World Movement.

Night and Day

*The day is Thine—
The long, bright summer day,
From the first dawning light till evening closes,
And all its merry birds and blooming roses,
And all its golden beauty bid us say,
The day, O Lord, is Thine.*

*And Life's brief day
Is also Thine, when we Must work, while light doth last, for our dear Master.
O that our sluggish feet could travel faster,
And we with readier service give to Thee
Our life's fast-fleeting day!*

*The night is Thine—
The long, dark winter's night,
Hushing our birds to sleep, our flowers concealing;
But, by its hosts of glowing stars, revealing,
Through the deep sky, Thy glory and Thy might.
The night, O Lord, is Thine.*

*That darker night
Is also Thine, O Lord,
When Thou sweet sleep to Thy beloved givest,
For while they needs must sleep, Thou ever livest, And o'er Thy dear ones keepest watch and ward,
Till darkness ends in light.*

Can All Churches Now Cooperate?

The following correspondence between Mr. Fred W. Freeman, president of the Colorado State Convention, and Rev. Joshua Gravett, pastor of the Galilee Church, Denver, deals with a vital matter of cooperation within the denomination. Churches are bound by inescapable bonds to the historic societies.

Agreed on Main Things

Dear Brother Gravett:

"Grace be unto you and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus praying always for you. Since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints."

I was delighted and moved by your letter of February 8, but not at all surprised, for I know your hearty and profound interest concerning our beloved Baptist Zion. I have heard you too often pray after the spirit of Paul when he wrote to the saints at Colosse, "For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you * * * That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father and of Christ," to have any doubts as to where you would stand when confronted with the issues of the integrity of our beloved denomination and the future of the institutions designed by our fathers and transmitted to us for the cooperative promotion of the Kingdom of God, though the ends of the earth were involved.

We have not always agreed on plans of work nor even on certain emphasis or understanding on certain theological subjects, but nothing arising out of such want of understanding or agreement has ever even strained our personal or cooperative relation on the Big Main Things on which we do find complete agreement, such as are set forth in our Lord's great commission as the authoritative and final word to his followers. This command stands in the wisdom and the authority of God for all his people everywhere and for all time. And the presence and power of our Lord is therein promised to such as are faithful to this great command in its entirety, and in this we find our great agreements and deep fellowships.

We do not need to agree on all matters of policy and plan, nor wait for the complete elimination of all faults or evils (real or suspected) in the organizations and institutions, or errors of doctrine or conduct on the part of any appointee or employee of such, in order to rally unitedly to the support of our historic societies and boards (which were designed as a means of carrying out cooperatively that part of the great commission which we as individuals or by separate churches could not accomplish, but which must be accomplished cooperatively), in this time of our great peril of debt. We must pay our debts and save our institutions now and proceed in an orderly way to do any and all other things that may need to be done in the spirit of Christian fraternity and charity enjoined by our Lord.

I am hoping and praying that our present crisis will be used by our Lord to call us all to a larger fellowship of service, unity of spirit in the bonds of peace, and in a unity of faith. I am positive that the time has come when we must seek to understand each other, and that the spirit of proscription and censoriousness must give way to the spirit of amity, understanding, and fraternity, in the councils and in the realms of cooperative undertakings in our denomination. I know you share this conviction with me, and that you will go as far as any man in bringing such things to pass. And knowing your splendid leadership based upon the genuine confidence imposed in you by a large number of people in our denomination, throughout the bounds of the convention, which not only respects but genuinely loves you, I am taking the privilege given me in your letter of publishing your letter and this answer in the denominational papers of the Northern Baptist Convention.

We shall surely miss you greatly at the special session of our convention. I shall read your letter to the convention at its first session, as I am sure it will set the right key for the discussion of the session.

I am looking forward with special joy to speaking to your own people on Sunday and I am sure that both Dr. Palmer and I shall have a deeply sympathetic and fraternal hearing from your people there. I know of no congregation which helps me more when I speak to it than does your own. And I am hoping and expecting that it will rally to your leadership in this as it has in all the years in the past in the long pastoral relations which you have sustained to it.

Sincerely and fraternally yours,
FRED W. FREEMAN.

Bound to Cooperate

Dear Brother Freeman:—

Referring to the special call for the state convention to consider the present emergency in our denominational life, I regret more than I can say that a previous engagement, made a year ago, will take me out of the city and I will therefore not be able to be in the convention next week.

Concerning the whole matter of the present financial obligations of our societies and boards, to which I have given most serious and prayerful consideration, I wish to say to you that without abating in any way the convictions heretofore expressed, by reason of which I could not give full and unrestricted cooperation to all the things undertaken in the New World Movement, yet, in view of the actions heretofore taken, and particularly the action of the Board of Promotion at Indianapolis on the matter of designated gifts and annual subscriptions, I find myself in complete accord with the statement Dr. J. C. Massee published in the Watchman-Examiner, February 2, as follows:

"The fundamental contention of Baptists for a right to express themselves carries with it not only liberty but responsibility. Since the protests we have made have been heeded, there can seem to be no reasonable reason why we should not now cooperate to the fullest extent of our ability in our mission enterprises. While these mission enterprises were indissolubly linked with the educational program we had need to reserve full participation. The need for that reservation has been removed. We do not need to stop now in the crisis confronting the general societies to settle all questions of future policies, or to wait for correction of all evils. The present situation furnishes ample proof that protests made in the spirit of fraternity will be given heed to. They who refuse to participate in the burdens of the denomination lose right to voice in the conduct of its affairs."

I regard myself as under inescapable bonds, both to my brethren and to the historic societies founded by our fathers, to cooperate to the fullest extent in this campaign for the payment of their debts, and I shall do all that I can to influence my church to do the same. I wish I could be present at the special meeting of the state convention to express by word of mouth what I am here conveying to you by letter.

I am looking forward to the visit of you and Dr. Palmer to our church next Sunday with great hope that both you and it will be greatly blessed of the Lord in the service.

You are at perfect liberty to use this letter in any way that seems good in the effort you are making to arouse our denomination to meet its full obligation.

Fraternally yours,
JOSHUA GRAVETT.

Methods for Laymen

By F. W. FREEMAN

IT should, of course, be understood at the very beginning that organization and method are secondary, voluntary and flexible, whereas results are vital and fundamental. A bad plan well worked is better than a perfect plan indifferently followed out. "Perform the doing of it." If not this way then some other way.

In general the plans of the General Board of Promotion and the state organizations are about as follows:

(a) The state promotion board, composed of both men and women, appointed by the state executive committee.

(b) An associational or district committee, supervised by a local pastor released from his church for the period of this campaign to look after the churches within the association or district and generally supervise their activity.

(c) A similar organization in each of the principal cities of size.

The purpose of this plan is to reach every church and every member of every church with the appeal of the present crisis. This part of the campaign and organization is under the direct supervision and direction of the secretaries and employees of the General Board of Promotion and state boards of promotion. The women, through their Continuation Campaign committee, are undertaking to put the force of all their organizations, local, associational and state-wide, into vital and effective cooperation with the promotional organization above described.

The purpose and plan of the Laymen's Council is to find representative, busy and capable men who will volunteer for service and will in fact serve in parallel organization and put themselves into full cooperation with the state, district or association and church committee, the idea being,

Down-Town Churches Which Have Stuck

Standing by the side of the road where the crowds of men go by, they find opportunity for a ministry as varied as the needs of humanity.

120,000 Italians in the Back Yard

By A. RAY PETTY

THE English language staggers and fails when an attempt is made to describe the awful housing conditions that exist in the Italian tenement section in the lower west side of New York City. They are terrible beyond description. Dirty, dreary, sodden, unhealthful neglected, they constitute a menace to America more powerful in their depressing influence than all the "red" propaganda of the wildest and most revolutionary anarchist.

Crowded into these indecent and un-American—yes, these uncivilized—environments, these people do not know what life really means. In summer they swelter and droop under the fierce heat, and in winter they sicken and die in the cold and damp and terror of it all. We would not keep cattle in such terrible surroundings, for we could not afford to have cattle die—they are worth money. But babies—babies are the cheapest things we have. Lots of them are born; to lose many of them does not seem to be a matter of serious concern to America, and to many American Christians.

In the terrible, indecent squalor which is produced in these vile smelling, dirty, raty tenements, the infant mortality is 105 for every 1,000; while that for the city at large is 98 to 1,000. This means that we lose by death, ten more babies per 1,000 than in the city at large. In our district, where probably 5,000 babies were born last year, we lost fifty babies by death, principally on account of the carelessness of the housing and environment situation. Suppose one of these babies were yours. This would be a matter of concern. It must be a matter of action. It must be known to America.

Some day America will wake up, some day America will give justice and clean homes to these folks. Some day America will right these terrible wrongs, and tear down these festering, hellish places of sickness and suffering. Some day America will make the word "home" connote the same thing to these people that it connotes to us, or else some day America will pay for her neglect with the heavy coin of struggle.

The Judson Memorial Church has been ministering on Washington Square since 1890. Prior to this it was situated further down in the tenement section, on the corner of Bedford and Downing Streets. I do not know that it has sent out any new church organizations, but during the last forty years it has given a great many splendid members to suburban churches from the people it has won and helped to establish in life.

Our work is entirely among the Italians, as we are situated where Fifth Avenue runs out into the Italian tenements of the lower west side. 120,000 Italians pack themselves almost into the backyard of our church.

It is a tremendous challenge, but we feel that the Judson Church has come to the place now where it is meeting the challenge in something like an adequate fashion. While we feel that we must do all we can to change the conditions that are wrong, and to bring bodily health and happiness to our group, we do not forget that the spirit must be served as well as the body. And so we carry on a broad, religious program, trying to bring the compassionate Christ into the lives of these to whom we minister. This is done in our religious services, conducted both in Italian and in English, and in our Sunday school. In all of our club work we make it requisite that at least twenty minutes shall be devoted to definite spiritual culture, either in Bible study or in a talk applying the principles of Jesus to life as our boys and girls know it. We feel that this is a vital and necessary part of our service to these people.

Our work is constantly expanding. A glance at the schedule of six years ago and the schedule of today gives an idea of the growth. But we are constantly impressed by the fact that our growth of its people. We shall never cease to have our hearts torn by the pathos of life that surrounds us, and, God willing, we shall never cease to raise our voice of protest against the inhumanity of those who fatten themselves with the gains derived from these terrible warrens of the poor. Constantly we pray, "How long, O Lord, how long!" But in the meantime we seek to render such help as we may, and we find our opportunities for service very large, because the needs are so overwhelming.

A Great Preaching Station

TREMONT TEMPLE, Boston, is one of the down-town churches of the country which has stuck to its location despite almost incredible hardships and which now owns free of debt a down-town preaching place valued at more than $1,000,000, where the gospel can be preached free to all. Its origin goes back to Timothy Gilbert who came to Boston from New Hampshire and united with the Charles Street Church. The membership of this church was made up of high-toned and aristocratic people. One of its members one day brought with him to church a Negro. The church then voted that any member bringing a Negro into church to occupy his pew should not only forfeit his right to the use of the pew but should himself be excluded from membership in the church. Timothy Gilbert tried it out and out he went. Some other members joined him and together on April 21, 1839, formed the First Free Baptist Church and called Nathaniel Colver as pastor.

In 1843 Tremont Temple property was purchased of the Tremont Theater management for $56,000. Timothy Gilbert was the purchaser. He stood across the street one night looking at a sign which read, "This property for sale." Pacing back and forth before it he was saying to himself, "I must have that property. I must have it for a free church with free seats for the young and destitute of the city of Boston." Early in the morning, he went to the owners and asked the price. They told him they expected it was sold, but that they had asked the purchasers to pay for a chandelier, which they refused to do and the transfer was consequently pending. He said to them, "Suppose I pay you the price you ask for the building and buy the chandelier, may I have the property?" He was told he might and the question was definitely settled in his own mind. He said, "The property is mine, I have bought it." The building was burned in 1852, again in 1879 and yet again in 1893, but each time rebuilt and on a larger scale.

Five periods mark the history of the Temple. The first, made by Timothy Gilbert and Nathaniel Colver from 1839-64; the second by George W. Chipman, Justin D. Fulton, George C. Lorimer and Frank M. Ellis, from 1864 to 1884; the third by George W. Chipman and George C. Lorimer from 1884 to 1900; the fourth by Oliver M. Wentworth and P. S. Henson from 1903 to 1908, and the fifth by Cortland Myers and his co-workers. The sixth will begin with the great preacher who may succeed these brilliant men who have ministered in the Temple in the past.

TREMONT TEMPLE, BOSTON

has just begun. The work at the present time is so crowded that, with the exception of the Sunday preaching services, no more people can be accepted in our clubs and groups.

The Judson Health Center, which has been established in our church during the past year, is doing a fine work, and within the next six months will be moved into a building of its own, carrying on a large preventive and curative health work of great value. The operating budget for this year is $53,000, and the American Baptist Home Mission Society has underwritten $20,000 of this amount, with the hope that it can continue this amount for each year for five years. This is to be under the New World Movement campaign.

The Judson Neighborhood House, another child of the church, adopted and supported now by the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, and the New York City Baptist Mission Society, under the efficient leadership of the director Miss Bryan, carries on all sorts of work, with daily kindergarten and a day nursery in which the children of mothers who are widows and who must work, can be left for 10 cents a day.

The workers of the Judson Church have not blinded their eyes to the tragic homes

Great laymen, great preachers and indomitable courage mark the entire history of this church which occupies a unique place in the city of Boston and indeed in the entire eastern section of the country. The determination to "give to the young and the destitute of the city of Boston a free place of worship" has created a pulpit which reaches every part of the United States and a church whose ministry reaches to the ends of the earth.

The Most Strategic Location in the United States

By W. H. GEISTWEIT

THIRTY-FIVE years ago the Third Church of St. Louis changed its base from an insignificant location to the new thoroughfare—Grand and Washington Avenues, a location of great possibilities. The church at first was not on the corner, but about 100 feet from Washington Avenue. Next to it, north, was a big Catholic school.

Business began sweeping west, touched Grand Avenue, and made that thoroughfare one of the greatest in the United States. In this period of thirty-five years, twenty-six churches moved from the territory east of Grand to the wonderful West End—all Protestant churches but two: Centenary Methodist, at 16th and Pine, and the Third Baptist Church, twenty blocks west, at Grand and Washington. I think Centenary Church has the largest Methodist congregation in the city—though it is feeling the pressure of circumstances.

Within a short block of the Third, a big Presbyterian church was located; sold, moved west—a theatre now occupies the old church building. There is another Presbyterian church just east of us—I ought to add, which is thinking of changing location.

Steadily the tide of business and pleasure began to close in around the Third. The Catholics sold their school to a theatre syndicate. Though I never tried it, I think I could walk to ten moving picture houses within ten minutes, beginning with the largest west of the Mississippi, right next door to the Third, with its glare of lights. Within a short block is the largest transfer point in the city, said by some to be the largest in any city of this size in the world—the daily and nightly crowds are enormous.

Then—the city condemned the property south of us; opened up a great plaza, placing the Third Church on the edge of the greatest corner imaginable. Surely, a house by the side of the road, where the race of man goes by, stops, enters, refreshes itself, and goes on. And the race is increasingly large. On New Year's Eve the line of people around the church was so dense, four abreast, and so long, that two policemen could scarcely break it to let folks into the church who came for a watch-night service—at 10:30.

Steadily, persistently, faithfully, the church held on, and gradually moved forward until it became known all over the United States. It ought to be said, frankly, that it is not a community church; its parish is a matter of influence, and not of locality. The placing of "dots" on a city map recently, indicating its membership of nearly 2,400, showed a membership all over the great city. It is practically the Baptist clearing house for the whole city. It is open day and night.

With the vast constituency, scattered over the city, it has not hindered the growth of the other churches. The Second Church, with Dr. Bitting, is one of the finest in the country. I cannot mention them all, but may mention those which have recently built, or are clamoring for more room. In the far south, Lafayette Park is growing by leaps and bounds, in Mr. Kelly's hands; in the north and west, Euclid, Dr. Whiteside, has just completed a beautiful building and it is crowded to the doors in wonderful service; in the farther west, Mr. Hale is doing big things in the fine new Delmar Church; while in the farther northwest, in one of the biggest sections of the city, that sturdy and capable young man, P. G. Van Zandt, is driving things to a fine issue—he has baptized seventy in the last month; and he has no adequate quarters. This West Park Church, a child of the Third, just referred to, is planning a $100,000 plant; it needs it. I mention these outstanding things not to minimize others, but to call attention to the fact that a great downtown church, drawing its constituency from all over the city, doing a work impossible in any other location, does not necessarily cripple the work in other sections of a city.

The Third Church has adapted itself to its new environment, and will do more to meet the situation. Its services are simple. The morning service is a remarkable gathering. Nothing spectacular is attempted. The evening congregation is different, just as large, often larger. Much is made of music; every service evangelistic.

People were uneasy when the theatre began building right next door. We have gained rather than lost; the people come to the great corner in larger droves than ever; we must get them in. A cornetist stands in the window back of the big electric sign; plays gospel hymns; wonderful things have resulted; just dedicated a big pipe organ—three organs—$26,500, a great asset in our services. So far, no pictures have ever been used on Sundays; the writer has never used them on Sundays, in all his life. This is not said in reflection upon those who do use them—God bless them and the people who feel the need of them! But—other methods seem to work here, bring the people in large numbers, and the church is better satisfied; so am I.

The Sunday school is a big institution for this city—1,203 on a recent ordinary Sunday. In earlier years this school was larger, I think; but through vicissitudes a few years ago it declined. The old order is being restored—about doubling itself in the last few years. Its organized classes are the marvel of Sunday-school history.

The activities of the church cannot be described here. We have established a ten weeks' Bible institute, with nearly 250 attendants, in the various classes; it is its second year. The teachers are all professional teachers. These subjects are taught: basic Bible teachings; church history; social teachings of Jesus (Rauschenbusch); teacher training for Sunday school; training class for young men looking to leadership among boys; a monthly class for mothers in Christian home craft—a new movement of rare value and deep appreciation. But I have only touched the fringe of this educational movement. St. Louis—and the Third Church—is the place for that Bible Training Institute so often pleaded for in THE BAPTIST!

They say last year was the biggest year yet. 370 were added to the church; 162 by baptism. Many come, many go? Yes, it sometimes seems a procession; but, bless you, if they did not come there would be none to go! And out of this vast tide of humanity sweeping by the doors many find their way into the kingdom of God.

The church building has been added to several times. It does not tell its story from the outside. But inside—? Its new foyer entered through glass doors directly from the street, is the finest thing in church architecture I know; the social possibilities are immeasurable. The great auditorium is just beyond; still farther, the educational building. Beyond that is land-space big enough for a great parish building, which somebody, some day, will build to the glory of God and good of men. The property is worth a half million.

Will they ever sell? Now and then a syndicate sees this toothsome morsel, and longs for it; and sometimes there is a seeming pause to listen to the siren voice. But I don't think the people will ever lose their heads. Dr. Truett said a few months ago: "It is the most valuable, most strategic, most full-of-possibilities location for a church in the United States; I go further—in all the world."

A fine group of men have steered this great ship through the years; the waters have not always been smooth. The writer came when the ship was in the trough of the sea—and the day we began together the war broke out. Ah, me! But there were some gracious souls, wise men and women—God be praised for them!—to whom the praise for the present victories is all due. I say again, God bless them. Yet we are only playing with the job. I can see—

If we had—
If we had—
If we had—

Yes, "if we had—" we could double our effectiveness in this wonderful service.

I have tried to answer the question as to the possibilities of a down-town movement for God. With the right sort of folks anything can be done—and the folks of the Third Baptist Church of St. Louis are the right sort of folks.

Baptists in the Great Cities

What the standard city mission societies are doing to meet the situation occasioned by the foreigner and to build strongly and strategically for future city growth.

Church Extension in Chicago

By BENJAMIN OTTO

IN the early days of foreign missions, a returned missionary possessed of a burning zeal for the cause was presented at the annual gathering of a Baptist convention by its tactful moderator with the remark that he would allow the man of God ten minutes to speak on foreign missions. The missionary began his address with the statement, "It takes a great man to speak on foreign missions in ten minutes."

Those were days in which the work of our entire denomination in non-Christian lands was confined to less mission centers than are maintained to-day by Baptists in Chicago. Therefore, how one may do justice or even present a readable list of the varied missionary activities of our denomination in a great metropolis like Chicago in 300 words, is answerable only by those unacquainted with the facts.

Chicago, hugging the western and northern shores of Lake Michigan, spreads out fan-like from its principal retail center, "the loop," to the north, west and south; and, as if unwilling to be confined, it stretches out beyond its corporate limits along the great railroad arteries of travel that cross its boundaries at many points.

In this urban area are housed over 3,000,000 people, of every race and nationality. Quite like birds, those "of a feather" have a tendency to "flock together." So, one may find without difficulty, quite distinctive communities—English-speaking, Swedish, Norwegian, German, Danish, Dutch, Negro, Polish, Bohemian, Croatian, Lithuanian, Jewish, Slovak, Russian, Ukrainian, Greek, Italian, Chinese, and many others. The ends of the earth meet in Chicago. The striking fact in this connection is that all these racial elements are present in sufficient numbers so that, were the means at hand, it would be practically possible to promote Baptist work among every one of them. And as to distinctly English speaking work, there are actually scores of communities in which no Protestant church of any name has planted its standard.

Experience has taught us the wisdom of varieties of approach. Sometimes the ordinary Sunday-school and church service are adequate; sometimes these must be supplemented with a colporteur, Bible worker, and lady missionary; sometimes prejudice can best be broken down and the people befriended by means of the Christian Center with its varied ministries—kindergarten, day nursery, industrial school, mothers' meetings, boys' and girls' clubs, employment agency, reading circles—never, of course, omitting earnest preaching and presentation of the claims of Christ, in season and out of season. The city society entering a new field, studies its needs and adapts its methods accordingly.

Summarizing the Baptist mission work in Chicago, it may be gathered in figures as follows: 4 Christian Centers, 12 English and 8 foreign-speaking churches, that receive support, and 12 English-speaking and 9 foreign-speaking missions.

Detroit a Great Missionary Field

By H. C. GLEISS

THERE are more Polish people in Detroit than the sum total of all the residents of any other city in Michigan. There are more than 600,000 people in Detroit who are foreign born or the children of foreign born parents. There are about 200,000 members in all of the Protestant churches of metropolitan Detroit. This includes all of them, good, bad and indifferent. The Roman Catholic church claims a constituency of about 300,000. What of the other 600,000? Is this not a challenge that should spur us on to renewed activity?

During the past ten years Detroit has grown so rapidly that it has been impossible for any of the Christian groups to provide adequate church facilities for the newer sections. As any city grows it is essential to plant a new string of churches near the outer periphery. Any denomination that fails to make heroic efforts along this line will soon lose its standing and will be left to mourn its decay. In Detroit we Baptists have spent more than $600,000 during the past four years, in securing desirable locations and erecting new buildings. Ninety per cent of this money was secured right on the local field. Still we have not accomplished more than half of what should have been done. Think of Michigan Avenue, the principal street on the west side, with not one Protestant church on it of any denomination—all the way out to Dearborn, a distance of ten miles. We Baptists have only one small church within a half a mile of this avenue anywhere along the entire distance and that property has been sold.

During 1922 at least four new buildings must be erected. Royal Oak, (now under construction), for Hudson Avenue, out Grand River Avenue, (to be started in April); St. Clair Avenue—greatly needed, and the Polish Christian Center. Redford should also have a new building this year, if it can be financed. The greatest need, for which we now most need help from all the denomination is to secure a home for our Polish work. The administrative committee of the General Board of Promotion has sanctioned an appeal for $30,000 to provide such a home. The Home Mission Society and the Women's Home Mission Society join with the Detroit Baptist Union in an appeal for gifts to this worthy cause. The Poles are accessible to the gospel as never before. Brother Morze is opening up a new work on the east side. Recently he had 550 or more Polish people present at his first meeting in a new section. Pastor Rzepecki has more than once had more than 1000 present, by actual count, on special occasions. Shall such opportunities go unheeded?

Without the help from the New World Movement we could not have done what has been done, even though only a minor portion of the money was so secured. Only by a united and hearty support of this movement can we reach approximately what is most needed.

As Things Go In San Francisco

By C. E. TINGLEY

SAN FRANCISCO, the gateway to the Orient, the most important financial center west of Chicago, with nearly 600,000 population in its own limits, and almost as many more in its immediate environment, presents what is perhaps the greatest missionary challenge in America. In the city one passes twenty-eight people before he meets one who is a member of a local Protestant church and one meets 350 before he meets one who is a member of a local Baptist church. Catholicism is perhaps naturally strong, as the first civilization was brought in by the Spanish missions. Jews and Christian Scientists are abundant, but the greatest handicap to Christian work is the multitude of gold-seeking, pleasure-loving folk, raised in Christian homes and who perhaps belonged to Protestant churches in the east, who bade good-bye to God as they crossed the high Sierras. The Pilgrim fathers, first settlers of New England, seeking a place to worship God in freedom, put their stamp on the history of the entire east. The "forty-niners," first settlers around the Golden Gate, seeking wealth and excitement, put their stamp on the history of San Francisco.

Five English-speaking churches, only two of which are self-supporting, two Chinese, and one each of Swedish, Russian, German, and Negro represent the Baptist work in the city. The two leading churches are at this time pastorless, yet in seven months the Baptist churches in San Francisco made a net increase of 18 2/3 per cent in membership, more than one-third of which was by baptism.

The churches on the east side of the bay, Oakland, Berkeley, and Alameda, are generally stronger than those in San Francisco proper. In the entire metropolitan district we have thirty-five churches and missions doing work among ten different nationalities. The greatest forward movement in late years is probably the organization of the metropolitan district into the San Francisco Bay Cities Baptist Union as a class "A" standard society two years ago.

The churches are today in a generally encouraged condition. Some of the Sunday schools have reached the point where no more scholars can be invited because of the limitations of the buildings. The next forward movement will be a building campaign. Two churches and two missions today have no building, so are compelled to rent; five others have buildings that are entirely inadequate for present needs and constitute a great handicap to the work.

Pittsburgh

By W. C. CHAPPELL

THE development of Baptist work in the Pittsburgh Baptist Association during recent years has been based on two conceptions. The first recognizes the supreme importance in our social life of the large, industrial city as a center of population and of dominant influence over a wide territory. The second is that the denomination must function not only in the purely missionary aspects of the local field, but is concerned with any interest of any Baptist church and with any community need which the Baptist division of the Christian forces in the city is responsible for meeting. While the usual forms of city mission work have been carried on for many years in ten foreign-speaking churches and missions and through helping in the support of seventeen weaker English-speaking churches, our work has been characterized by several outstanding developments, which may be noted briefly:

1. An attempt to solve the down-town church problem by a careful survey of each field, building a program on the basis of need, place a missionary worker in each down-town church and make such additions in equipment as the change from the old family church demands. This is being worked out on the south side in Union Church, and in the Manchester district at Beth Eden.

2. Making such additions to church buildings or incorporating such features in building plans, and securing the corresponding equipment, as any type of community requires if the church is to serve efficiently.

3. The establishing of Christian Centers in strategic locations. Pittsburgh has two such: Morgan Community House for Negroes in the Hill district, and Rankin Christian Center, now under way.

4. The placing of a director of religious education in the association to bring that work up to a high standard. This includes the promotion of the B. Y. P. U., institutes for Christian workers, summer assembly and church vacation schools.

5. The W. A. B. H. M. S. has placed a secretary of Christian Americanization in the association to cooperate with our foreign-speaking missions, get information regarding the work to our churches, secure volunteers for teaching English in homes and promote personal contacts.

6. Cooperating with other denominations through the Council of Churches for the survey of districts and the allocation of fields and tasks, which fixes responsibility and justifies expenditures in equipment and operating expenses on a much larger scale.

7. The promotion of the evangelistic spirit, furnishing information as to methods through literature and conferences, and helping churches by general use of pastors in the association.

The Denver Baptist Union

By G. G. LAUGHLIN

IN December of 1919 the Baptist City Mission Society of Denver, which had been organized for several years, was reorganized and standardized into the Denver Baptist Union. In the spring of 1920 the Union extended a call to Rev. G. G. Laughlin of Detroit to become general superintendent. He accepted the call and began work June 1 of that year.

The Denver churches are well organized with a cooperative program, and we are not only facing our own city problems at this time, but are also facing in a most serious way our whole denominational task. Denver churches are going to do the heroic thing before April 30.

A very important feature of the work of the Union in the past two years is the relocating of five of our churches. The Galilee and Barnum churches are now in the process of building, and the Bethany, Judson, and Berkeley churches are raising funds with which to build. The Broadway Church is also planning to build an extension to its present edifice. A good property has been secured for our Mexican mission. A ten-room two-story house has been bought and remodeled into a mission building, with clinic room and private class rooms. A five-room cottage on the adjoining property was also purchased for a parsonage. The total cost of these buildings, including repairs, was only $5,000. Of this amount the Home Mission Society gave $2,000, and the Colorado State Convention gave $500. Our Mexican work is very encouraging. There are over 7,000 Mexicans in Denver. The pastor, Mr. Escalante, was recently assisted by Mr. Rodriguez of La Junta in a week's series of special meetings. Thirty-eight persons professed conversion, and twenty-two, mostly young men, were baptized. Others are awaiting baptism.

The Denver Union is paying all the salary of the Mexican pastor and supplementing salaries of some of the English-speaking pastors. One-third of the 20,000 Baptists of Colorado belong to the churches within the Denver Union.

Denver Baptists are very grateful to the Women's Home Mission Society for employing Miss Flint as Missionary among our Mexicans.

Church Strategy in Buffalo

By E. H. DUTTON

DURING the past fifty years Buffalo has increased 400 per cent in population. Nevertheless there are scarcely any more native-born Americans here today than at the beginning of this period. The increase has come about almost entirely through the influx of foreigners.

The lack of Christian strategy on the part of Protestants through these fifty years is expressed in the fact that today we maintain 200 churches for the one-fourth native Americans in the population, and hardly a dozen churches for the rapidly increasing three-fourths of foreign birth or foreign parentage. And the budget of any one of several fashionable English-speaking churches would exceed the combined budgets of all these dozen churches.

The net increase in membership of all the Protestant churches last year was less than 700. The net increase of the Baptist churches for the last year and a half was more than the net increase of membership during the ten years just preceding. This is due in part to the better organization and increased cooperation made possible through the New World Movement; in part to the large place in the Baptist city program given to work for the "three-fourths"—including the Hungarians, Poles, Italians and Russians. All of this work is flourishing.

More than 100 volunteer workers are giving certain hours each week to the service of a group at one of our Christian Centers. These volunteers were recently the guests of the Union at a supper conference held in conjunction with the two-days' conference on Christian Center work of Northern Baptists at the Prospect Avenue Church. The volunteers are sometimes enlisted by the missionaries; more often by the committee of the church to which they belong. For the strong churches are assuming, one after another, by formal vote, responsibility for supervision and personal service in one of our city mission fields.

The most unique piece of mission work conducted by the Baptist Union of Buffalo is carried on in cooperation with ten other denominations who trust us to hold the property and administer the activities. This is the Hebrew Mission, which has just celebrated its first anniversary of work in the present splendid building. The American Home Mission Society recently inspected the work through Dr. C. A. Brooks, who is recommending that the society assume responsibility for a portion of its budget. Miss Grace Bredehoff, formerly of the Presbyterian Mission to the Jews in Toronto, Ont., is the efficient worker among the children. She has mastered the Yiddish for this purpose. Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Machlin are the missionaries in charge, whose devoted leadership has brought the work so rapidly to its present development and success.

Recently, on Jan. 29, thirty-five pastors of Buffalo city and Association exchanged pulpits and spoke upon the New World Movement crisis. Thirty-three churches of the association were represented at the all-day conference on the Second-Mile Campaign. Missionaries Chas. P. Collet and Robert Longwell were present, also Secretaries Farrier and Sumner Vinton.

Miss Cora A. Estabrook, until recently giving part of her time to the work of the Woman's Auxiliary, will on Feb. 15 commence work as field secretary of the Buffalo Baptist Union, devoting her whole time to this work.

Church Planning in Cleveland

By A. M. McDONALD

ABOUT 200,000 people have been added to the population of greater Cleveland during the last five years. During the period of phenomenal industrial development and business expansion that reached its height in 1919, the Baptists did not build a single church edifice to serve the white American population, and but one new organization was formed. The majority of the churches in existence have made splendid progress. Some of them, owing to rapid changes in neighborhood populations, have faced great problems, but have been able to solve them with a good degree of success, so that there was during that period a net increase in membership of about 10 per cent. That the American churches, although experiencing no great advance for a number of years, are alive to their opportunities, is indicated in the fact that the Euclid Avenue Church is now preparing to erect one of the most imposing church edifices on the continent. A site has been secured in the very heart of the city. In order to make this undertaking possible the church has in addition to its present property valued at $1,000,000, secured subscriptions for $500,000. The Lakewood Church, worshipping for some time in the basement of a building long expected, is now proceeding to the erection of a handsome superstructure. A commanding situation has been secured by the new church in the Cleveland Heights and a building is planned for that great residential city.

Seventy per cent of the population of Cleveland is either foreign or the children of foreign-born parents. Among these great groups, the Baptists have done a most aggressive work. The present activities of our denomination in this field are equal to the combined effort of all other evangelical bodies in the city. During the last five years, in addition to strengthening fields already in existence, a new Hungarian congregation was formed, and a splendid church home erected. The Czecho-Slovak Church was organized and a commodious church building secured. This has grown to be one of our leading missionary enterprises, with a membership of 110 and a regular attendance of 150. Just recently the association has purchased a new church for the Italian Mission at a cost of $10,000, and a chapel for the Roumanians to cost $18,000. We now conduct thirteen missions among eight different nationalities.

In Cleveland, as in other northern cities, the denomination has been called upon during the last few years to meet the problem of a large influx of Negroes. There are in Cleveland about 35,000 of them. We have forty-two Negro Baptist churches. Only twelve of these, however, have been recognized by the association as standard Baptist churches. Our largest Negro church has a membership of some 3,000. In addition to assisting a few of these congregations the association, in conjunction with the Baptist Home Mission Society and the Woman's Home Mission Society, has purchased and furnished and is now operating what is known as the Christian Community Center. Three paid workers are employed, and they, with a large number of volunteers, are conducting a great many social activities that make for the betterment of home and community life. The religious appeal is always prominent.

To the Cleveland Baptists it has become increasingly evident that the only way to meet the challenge of the great city is by operating out from great church centers strategically located. An effort is now being made to so centralize our work in the different communities as to test the validity of this conclusion. In order that the denomination within the city may realize its strength and meet its great obligation, an effort has been made during the last two years to develop a Baptist consciousness, and a feeling of Baptist unity and solidarity. The good results of this effort are more and more apparent.

Advance Work in Philadelphia

By ORLANDO T. STEWARD

SOME of the outstanding features of the work in Philadelphia for the last five years are:

The raising of a loan fund of $50,000 for advance work in the city. This fund enabled the Baptist Union to provide for some very greatly needed advance work. Ten churches, one Italian, two Negro and seven English-speaking, have been assisted in building operations.

Alpha Baptist Church has made splendid progress and is now free of debt and has a plant worth $75,000.

The Italian Church was purchased at a cost of $45,000. $16,000 was spent in remodeling. There is a $22,000 mortgage against the property. It is worth $100,000 and is one of the best equipped buildings for church and neighborhood work that could be desired.

The New Berean Church is erecting a building at the cost of $55,000, to which the Union has made an appropriation of $10,000. This cares for a growing field for some time to come. It is a workable building and admirably adapted to the community that surrounds it.

The Star of Hope Church has a neat brown building, purchased for it in Tacony. In spite of the industrial depression it has been able to meet all its payments and gives promise of becoming a vigorous church.

The Church

"If you want to belong to the kind of a church

*Like the kind of a church you like,
You need not slip your clothes in a grip*

*And start on a long, long hike,
For you'll only find what you've left behind;*

*There's nothing that's really new;
You may be knocking yourself when you knock your church,
Maybe it's not your church, but you.*

"Real churches are made by folks unafraid,

Who look not upon duty with dread;

Where everyone works and nobody shirks,

You can raise even a church from the dead.

And if, while you're hustling to help yourself,

*You will help your neighbor, too.
Your church will become what you want it to be,*

*For your church is a multiplied
you."*

The Mt. Carmel Church for Negroes in a section of West Philadelphia, has been completed, making a splendid stone structure. While the money invested in this by the Union was not very large, owning the property we were able to place mortgages to cover the entire cost of construction. This congregation is speedily reducing the indebtedness.

Moore Street, a mission point, has had much needed and substantial additions made to its building. This will make it possible for a fine summer work to be conducted at this point. It is in a congested section of the city with little opportunity for the children except on the streets.

Baptists and St. Louis

By S. E. EWING

IT is evident to all that St. Louis presents one of the most inviting and difficult fields within the bounds of the Northern and Southern Conventions. Since the organization of the first Protestant church west of the Mississippi (1806), the Bethel Baptist Church, 100 miles south of St. Louis and the following year (1807) the organization of the Fee Fee Church, ten miles west of St. Louis, the Baptists have made commendable advance and such growth as to insure permanency and power.

St. Louis now has a population of 800,000 and a suburban population of 200,000 giving us a parish of 1,000,000 souls. The east side territory—east St. Louis and the Tri-Cities—has a population of 100,000 but is not organically connected with St. Louis Baptists.

The St. Louis Baptist Association, covering quite a large area in Missouri, was organized in 1817 with six churches and 142 members. There has been steady growth and now, in a much more limited area, there are thirty-seven churches with a membership of 10,911. During the 100 years, there have been about 100 churches at one time or another members of the St. Louis Baptist Association. There are now twenty-one churches within the city limits and sixteen in the suburban territory. The membership of the twenty-one city churches is 9,000 and of the sixteen suburban churches, 1,911—total, 10,911.

The church property is valued at $1,404,300, and in addition to this we have $1,000,000 invested in hospitals and orphanages. The home expenses for the year just closing were $186,243.98; the churches gave $86,411.42 for missions and benevolence. The Sunday-school enrollment is 10,511.

The St. Louis Baptist Mission Board was organized in 1884 and incorporated in 1907. It is composed of three or more members from each of the thirty-seven churches. The Board meets quarterly and its executive committee composed of fifteen members meets monthly. An executive secretary is employed for full time. The St. Louis Mission Board cooperates directly with the Executive Board of the Missouri Baptist General Association, the Home Mission Board of the Southern Convention, and the Home Mission Society, General Board of Promotion, Woman's Home Mission Society, and the Publication Society of the Northern Convention. It seeks to represent impartially all Kingdom interests and the accredited Baptist agencies for Kingdom building.

The annual budget of the Board for its regular mission work is about $20,000. It finances the building enterprises of the mission churches which calls for an additional expenditure of from $10,000 to $25,000 annually. The Board cooperates with twelve churches in the support of their pastors and has four women missionaries employed on the down-town fields. It finances the Center in connection with the First Italian Church. The Baptists have assumed the entire responsibility for the evangelization of the Italians of St. Louis. Until recently there were two German churches in St. Louis but now the services of these are practically all in English. St. Louis is known the world over as a Roman Catholic city. The foreign-born population numbers 103,233; foreign-born in the suburban territory 15,000.

The above figures do not include the work of the Negro Baptists. St. Louis has a Negro population of about 75,000 and we have sixty Negro Baptist churches with an estimated membership of 10,000. The St. Louis Mission Board is frequently in consultation with the Negro pastors and seeks in every way to promote good fellowship and render assistance.

Rochester Doings

By ALFRED E. ISAAC

THE biggest object on the Baptist horizon of Rochester is the gift of more than $10,000,000 to Rochester University to establish a medical school. The men's college and the medical school will probably be located on a new commanding site in the southeast section of the city. With the new Eastman School of Music, housed in a magnificent new building in the heart of the city, the university will quickly take a foremost place.

The chief object of real Baptist pride is the Lake Avenue Church with its 2,000 members and its highly organized and developed school of religious education. Dr. Beaven is on his thirteenth year as pastor and his hold upon the work and the city is growing stronger every day.

And now Rochester has a Baptist Wunder. The old Second Church, now the Baptist Temple, is feeling the thrill and throb from a new pastoral dynamo that the church has recently installed in the person of Clinton Wunder. The hum of activity is heard all through the church and great crowds are flocking in to see what it is all about. Visions of a great down-town office building and religious plant are in the air.

The new Baptist Union is also looming on the horizon. The old Monroe Association and the Rochester City Mission Society have merged into a common, incorporated body, with an executive secretary and a big program of advance all along the line. New buildings and plants to house the growing work of the churches that are in immediate contemplation will involve an expenditure of close to $500,000.

Any account of Rochester Baptists would be incomplete without mention of the seminary. It stands four-square, like the new Jerusalem, and is unaffected by the storms sweeping through our denomination. It is attracting many of our best young men who are preparing for the ministry.

Boston's City Mission Work

By LUCIE M. GARDNER

ON Feb. 9, 1921, the Boston Baptist Bethel Society, incorporated in 1852, and the Baptist City Mission Society, chartered in 1899, consolidated under the title Boston Baptist Bethel, City Mission Society. Through this action, the society not only continued the work which had been so effectively carried on for many

The Faith to Live By

A distinguished physician wrote to an anxiety-beset friend:

"In my experience the only solution of all our difficulties is to maintain a humble, childlike faith and a confident trust in the perfect love of God. With that there need be no fear, and all will come right in his own time.

"That is the faith to live by and die with, and the happiest people are those who hold firm by that faith. That is my experience after much thought, much knowledge of human nature, and not a little study of all the difficulties you relate to me."

years at the Bethel but it assumed charge of the work within the limits of Greater Boston for New Americans.

The organization has been recognized by the Northern Baptist Convention as a standard city mission society. It is a going and a growing work and is gathering about it a corps of able workers, who with the hearty cooperation of the members of the board are striving to meet and solve some of the many problems with which present-day cosmopolitan Boston is struggling.

Stations are maintained for Italian work at East Boston, the Bethel and the West End and very recently we have taken over the work at Hyde Park, which has been successfully carried on for several years by the Italian Evangelical Mission of Hyde Park. Work for Syrians is carried on in the South End, for the Portuguese in Cambridge, and for the Russians in the West End and in Chelsea. Cooperation is given the Swedish and Norwegian churches, the immigration work and the rapidly-developing work of such churches as Clarendon Street, Boston and Broadway, Cambridge. Several of the smaller churches of Greater Boston are given some financial assistance.

We shared in the Daily Vacation Bible School Movement last summer and helped to maintain schools at the West End and at Stoughton Street, thus contributing to a more wholesome vacation period for many who would otherwise have found recreation only in the street.

Last summer we acquired Bethany Cottage at Northfield, thus making it possible for nearly 200 from our constituent churches to enjoy the rare privileges and influences of Northfield's great summer conferences in one of the state's most beautiful locations.

Our society is facing the challenge of a great opportunity and given adequate financial support, we shall hope to meet it in a manner worthy of our historic leadership.

The census of 1920 places the total Negro population of the United States at 10,463,013, as against 9,827,763 in 1910, and 8,833,990 in 1900; an increase in the one case of 635,250 and in the other 993,773.

The U. S. government maintains 135 schools in Alaska with an expenditure of about a half million dollars and an enrollment of 6,899.

The Crisis—God's Measuring Rod

By J. Y. AITCHISON

ACRISIS is upon us! How shall we meet it? The work of our missionary societies and boards which are participating in the New World Movement has been carried forward thus far through a period of unprecedented high costs not only without retrenchment, but with some degree of advance.

We are now threatened with a great denominational debt. Why? The total amount of debts to Dec. 31, 1921, not including funds withheld from the schools and colleges and from the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board, was $3,356,553. There was due on pledges Dec. 31, $4,412,140 or $1,055,587 more than the total amount of the debts.

We also owe to the schools and colleges on account of funds temporarily withheld $2,639,383 and to the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board $1,024,848, or to both $3,664,231.

The Northern Baptist Laymen's Council found that we would need in cash from Jan. 1 to April 30, in addition to the $3,780,000 received during the first eight months of the year, $15,000,000. Of this amount $8,265,439 is due on pledges by April 30. The balance, $6,734,561, must be secured in new pledges and cash by that date. The full $15,000,000 is required to meet obligations by April 30. This is a gigantic undertaking. Unless the full amount is secured we shall be obliged to close the year with debts.

Where is it all coming from?

From Northern Baptists!

Thousands of our people are already giving sacrificially. Others will join heartily as the facts become known. The question is not, "How much are Northern Baptists worth?" The real issue before us now is, "What are Northern Baptists worth to the world?" Christ is our Lord. We are his stewards.

We cannot hide behind excuses and criticisms. The very crisis which we face is the measuring rod by which our loyalty, faith and courage are to be measured.

The causes which center in the gospel of Christ are in danger of suffering radical retrenchment from want of financial support. Have we such a valuation of the importance of the Kingdom of Christ as will lead us to make whatever sacrifice is necessary to give adequate support to its work?

We, as a people, accepted our duty at Denver and started to forward these interests with renewed devotion and increased efficiency. We are in the midst of the task. Shall we now turn back? It is true there are many who cannot "carry on" at this time. They find themselves financially embarrassed temporarily. It is not so with all. This is surely not God's time for his people to build fortunes out of his bounty or to add to their savings before all his claims have been met.

More millions are facing starvation today, right in the heart of Christendom, than ever before. This is no time for luxury at the expense of banishing Christ from a heartsick world.

We face a crisis indeed! It is God's testing hour for us. Will Northern Baptists build homes or fortunes for family prestige at the expense of our great missionary, philanthropic and educational work? No! Our people will not be untrue to their stewardship in such an hour.

Our answer will be written into history on April 30, 1922.

The Open Forum

DENOMINATIONAL NEEDS VS. STEWARDSHIP

In my judgment there is (with a single exception) no more important matter at present before our denomination than the current endeavor to pledge our church membership, so far as it can be done, to the adoption of the stewardship league plan of financing our several world and nation-wide interests, including those of the local church. No one acquainted with the facts doubts that we have abundant wealth to finance all these adequately, and in view of this it is indeed humiliating that those in charge of our enterprises should be compelled to beg and plead for funds wherewith to save our continually jeopardized causes. We have the money; we are not an impoverished people; the only question is how to get a due proportion of our wealth into the Lord's treasury. I myself, as pastor, never felt free to insist on the perpetual obligation of the Jewish tithe; I preferred rather to urge proportional and systematic giving as more in accord with the spirit of the gospel, that is, the recognition of one's "stewardship," whether he happen to have little or much of this world's goods. (I Cor. 16:2.)

With regard to the present alarming shortage of pledges for the New World Movement's $100,000,000, and failure in paying the instalments due on the pledges already subscribed, there are some things I should like to bring to the attention of delinquent pastors and churches, and especially to those of them who are so free either with criticisms or excuses. It has always been true, and always will be, that no man or group of men is infallible, and therefore that no plan or method for attaining any given end will be faultless; there will always be room for criticism if one be disposed to indulge a critical spirit. What I would offer for their consideration is the following:

1. If the wealthier among our brethren were really stewards of their wealth they alone, on the basis of one-tenth of their income contributed through denominational channels, would meet every financial need and give relief from the burdens that stagger us. "Well, why don't they do it then?" some one asks, while another says: "Let them do it!" thus seeking to shift his own measure of responsibility on to others' shoulders. But much forget, or else do not care to remember, that the Lord has other interests than those represented by our denomination, and that not a few of the wealthiest men in the churches are giving princely sums for the founding and maintenance of splendid institutions which but for their munificence would not exist at all. We may thank God for the rich men among us and that so many of them are large and generous givers to Kingdom purposes. But we need also to remember that God has not given them to the church in order to relieve the rest of us from our own personal responsibility.

2. No one worthy of his membership in the church wants these rich brethren to pay his own legitimate debts. It will be a part of his Baptist independence to want to bear his own proper burden, and whatever the denominational task to take his full share of it. One may not be able to assume as large a share as another, but each will be ready to shoulder that which belongs to himself in the common obligation. In other words, no worthy Baptist wants the rich in our fellowship to subsidize the denomination—as would be the case if we, in the spirit of niggardliness, let them foot all the bills. We can preserve denominational self-respect only when each assumes his own share of the common tasks.

3. As to the ability of our churches to raise the full $100,000,000 there can be no doubt in the mind of any one who will look in the face of such statements as find their way from time to time into the public press. For instance, a few evenings ago the Indianapolis News told us that in Indiana alone during the past year (1921) $20,000,000 was spent for amusements! Startling? Yes, indeed. Probably, too, our Baptist folk paid their full share of it. Furthermore, according to the significant item in THE BAPTIST of Feb. 4, "Where Money Goes In One Year" the American people are paying out annually $750,000,000 for gum and candy; $834,000,000 for soda and soft drinks; $1,151,000,000 for nicotine—in all of which vast expenditures no doubt our own church people also paid their share. And none of these things are among the necessities of life. In view then of these facts, assuming that they are facts, the plea of financial inability to meet the requirements of Christ's kingdom is nothing more than a lame apology for indifference to them.

4. A fellow-church member, talking with me only the other day about the formation of stewardship leagues, denied that it was one's duty to set aside systematically a definite proportion of his income (not to say the tenth of it) for Kingdom purposes, or that the Lord demanded that we do so. The increased expenses of a growing family, the high cost of living, the legitimate desire to lay by for "the rainy day," the case of the man who is out of employment, and who perhaps at the same time is trying to pay for a home, and so on, were cited and made the most of. The answer to all of which is first, that if a man has no income at all the stewardship proposition does not apply to him; and, second, in the face of the circumstances instanced, it may aid in quickening conscience and clarifying thought concerning one's obligation, to bear in mind that the storekeeper will still expect us to pay our bills, and the government that we pay our taxes. Their demands come to us with the emphasis of a "must," as the Lord's do not. Yet shall we on that account become careless and indifferent to our personal relations and obligations to the progress of his Kingdom?

Indianapolis, Ind. R. E. NEIGHBOR.

WHEN "SALOME" WENT TO BOSTON

The reference in THE BAPTIST of January 21, recalls the campaigns of 1909, '10, '11 here in Boston for the same project—the prevention of the opera of "Salome."

Two groups joined forces. One was the "Watch and Ward Society" and citizens who objected to the immodesty of the scene of the "seven veils" and the bestiality of the scene presenting the head of John the Baptist on the charger. The other group was of those who objected to the sacrilegiousness of presenting on the stage, for money, the first one who said, "Behold the Lamb of God Who taketh away the sins of the world." Neither of these groups would have succeeded alone.

Next October one of the lessons of the international series is "The Ministry of John the Baptist." Among the "helps" for girls and boys in the 'teen age might be a libretto of "Salome" written by Oscar Wilde of London-jail fame. It contains a description of John the Baptist not found elsewhere. When "Salome" first sees him she says, "There is nothing else in the world so white as thy body. Suffer me to touch thy body. There is nothing in the world so black as thy hair. Suffer me to touch thy hair. There is nothing in the world so red as thy mouth. Suffer me to kiss thy mouth." Perseverance might be illustrated at the time when she has the prophet's head on the dish and says, "Now I will kiss thee."

At the time of the third campaign the opponents to the coming of the opera consisted of all classes. There was a Methodist bishop, an Episcopalian bishop, a Roman Catholic functionary, ministers, (D. D.'s and Rev's) and laymen.

The writer, not mentioned by name, was honored in the public print by such titles as "earnest old lady climbing up flights of stairs;" "Salome's counterpart in vindictive persistence to harry Wilde's play;" "the indomitable, implacable she who comes to life when 'Salome' impends."

It is remarkable that on that last day, the innocent promoter of the opposition was quietly pursuing the home life without any knowledge of the whirl and the swirl until it was all over.

Sincerest congratulations to Chicago! Boston, Mass. JULIA N. GOULD.

The Chimney Corner

Strictly Cash

EVEN if her name had not been Caroline, her impious family would doubtless have dubbed their little mother "Cash-and-Carry," owing to her life-long propensity for laying the money on the counter and saying briskly: "There it is! Now surely I ought to get something off for cash, Mr. Grocer" (or Butcher, Baker, or Candle-stick Maker as the case might be). Her children declare it was this daily battle of words and the small lady's frequent victories that eventually led to pay-as-you-enter cars and cash-and-carry stores. However that may be, this we do know, that in a day when cash-and-carry Christians are so sorely needed this particular cash-and-carry family should amuse and edify and arouse the rest of us.

It all came about because of a Vassar girl. Or rather, the Vassar girl was the last of a string of other college girls in town, madly scurrying hither and yon to raise million-dollar-endowment funds for their loved alma maters.

Cynthia used to come home from the office, laughing: "Now just lend me your ears, Cash-and-Carry dear, for you'll be thrilled to hear that every Holyoke girl in this burg is up to her educated neck in preparation for raising a big load of money to keep Holyoke on the map. There's Sally Brown, for instance, getting up a rummage sale; and Enid Thompson, tied to her boarding-house by an eight-weeks-old baby, yet offering to do the mending for all the dear boarders at so much per week, big or little jobs—you can hear the boarders purring a mile off. There's old Mrs. Benson who was a pioneer grad in the early days. She hasn't a cent to her name, but does that stop the old darling? Not a bit of it, she's having the time of her life baby-tending! Isn't it simply spiffy of her? She sits in strange houses at night to guard the cradles while parents galavant, or she's on deck by day while fond mothers shop, and she even wheels young hopefuls up and down the sidewalks—all at so much an hour. She's simply bursting with happiness at doing it for her alma mater. My, mother, it makes me wish I'd gone to college somewhere and had to hustle around for endowment money!"

Cash-and-Carry sighed: "Darling Cyn, I wish it, too!"

Then, a few months later, came Celeste, chuckling: "Three cheers for Wellesley! Every alum in town crushed to earth with a $275 quota apiece—but are they depressed? Not a bit of it! There's Angy Snell doing public stenography after hours, and laying by a neat sum. There's the tea-room in the Fine Art's Building, just a duck of a place for good lunches. And Bobby Newton's left the tea-room to make

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Wellesley fudge, she earns more at that, of course; she's killing, declares she feels like some one wallowing in beds of molten lava, what with pans of bubbling chocolate mud on all sides of her during waking hours! But she clears $10 a week. Alice Snow is trimming hats for people in the office where she works, and her fame is spreading, so that she's up till midnight. Oh mumsy, don't you wish you had a little Wellesley fairy in your home?"

"Don't I, though!" sighed Cash-and-Carry, wistfully.

Then came the Smith drive, with Mrs. Brooks next door renting her extra room to earn her contribution, and the Timothy Buttericks letting their daughter Madge work in a store at the holiday season.

"How people care!" sighed Carlotta. "I'd adore to be attached to something I could yearn over!"

If

*"GIVE as you would if an angel
Awaited your gift at the door.
Give as you would if tomorrow
Found you where giving is o'er.
Give as you would to the Master
If you met His searching look.
Give as you would of your substance
If his hand your offering took."*

"So would I," sighed Cash-and-Carry.

Then came the Vassar endowment fund, with all the Vassar alumnae assessed $250 apiece. Somehow this was the last straw—not to the alumnae, but to little Mrs. Cash-and-Carry. For in spite of the nuisance of it and the big perplexities of it and the anxious counting of slowly mounting dollars, the eager mother coveted for her diploma-less girls that thrill of feeling that a college counted on them. "Burden-bearing makes a thing all the nearer and dearer," she said, and surely she should have known, having carried all four of her children from infancy up, alone, unaided. "I figure it out this way, that to carry the burden and pay out hard cash to lighten it bit by bit develops a lot of backbone and grit and devotion."

Then out of a clear sky came her inspiration. For blue leaflets began circulating in church; prayer leagues began to meet; and little Mrs. Cash-and-Carry saw with startled eyes that the denomination was facing a crisis.

"What Baptists need," she said to herself, "is that same matter-of-fact spirit that the college girls have been showing the last few years: 'They need money! In a way, I'm assessed so much? Well, I'll buckle in and carry this thing through. Work? Of course; but I can! Just you watch me!'"

Out of this soliloquy came the inspiration. Why couldn't she and her girls cash-and-carry this Continuation Campaign with all the devotion and alertness of alumnae?

"Why, we are alumnae!" she chuckled. "Talk about lectures and classes and sororities and examinations and flunking and all, what is Christian life but a school of sermons and Bible classes and women's societies? And as for exams, think of the way our godless neighbors probably question every act of ours to see how much we know about what we profess and how we differ from them—we, with all our schooling in Christ's principles. Mercy on us, how we probably flunk! And what is this campaign but a sort of final? Not a mere case of easing professors on low salaries, but of spreading the Christianity we profess to love so dearly. I'll just put it up to the girls tonight."

A little apprehensively she did so. Even the best of mothers never knows nowadays how suggestions may be welcomed. But with rare heartiness they pounced upon her scheme: "But what fun! We shall feel as if we belonged to something at last mumsy! And won't you be in your element—pruning and skimping and stretching our dollars." "But it's only fair we should do it. What a spectacle for the world at large, if college women can work like mad to raise their millions and we Christians give our measly ten-dollar bills, and feel magnanimous!" "People are only in college four years, but we're in life for an age! We ought to work, for I guess if alumnae acknowledge college benefits in a strictly cash fashion, we ought to quadruple their efforts for our Christian benefits...."

"It reminds me of a story," smiled Cash-and-Carry, "for once in Scotland a man was drowning and another man jumped in and rescued him, for which the drowning man gave him sixpence. 'He wasn't very grateful, was he?' asked a bystander. 'Ah wael,' said the dripping philosopher, 'nae dout he best kens his ain worth? And I'm thinking, my dears, that if we only give what Cyn calls a 'measly' sum we shall be showing how little our Christianity is worth to us."

"Amen, and so be it!" shouted the irreverent but captivated Cynthia, "Come on, girls, let's show the world! If a Vassar grad will stand for being assessed $250 to be paid in three years' time let's assess ourselves something adequate as graduates of the College of Blessings-Handed-Down-To-Me-So-I-May-Hand-Them-On-To-Others! And first move, off comes a tenth of all my money. Next, schemes to shovel in more dollars. Cynthia Collar and Cuff Sets—step this way and be fitted, madam! How about a little rose organdie, Miss, with a wee Frenchy knot of flowers embroidered in each corner? Terribly chic! Anybody else in this family developing ideas?"

They were!

And we pass on their enthusiasm to challenge yours. For what we carry in our hearts is apt to come out strictly family developing ideas?"

The Young Reserves

Close Quarters

THERE were four of them—"cart-wheels," Bob's father called them laughingly, but Bob thought they were about as good-looking as anything he had ever seen.

"Can I spend them exactly as I want to?" he asked, admiring them as they lay in the palm of his hand.

"That's why I gave them to you," Bob's father said. "What's a birthday for if you haven't learned to use your presents wisely?"

"Hurrah!" Bob shouted, "just watch me! I know what I'll get—"

"Getting isn't the only thing to be done with money," his father said.

"Oh, I suppose you mean saving," groaned Bob, "I'm keen about saving sometimes, but just now I'd rather do something awfully special that I could watch and feel important over."

"Exactly what I meant!" his father replied. "There's all the difference in the world between getting something with your money and doing something with it. Think it over!"

Bob slipped the four silver quarters into his pocket where they jingled against marbles and pebbles and jack-stones and string and sea-shells and pencil stubs and old campaign buttons (left over from the war drives!) and a dozen other things so precious that Bob never could bear to part with them. I daresay you have queer things in your pocket, yourself, so you know how he treasured them. But no treasures were quite so jolly as those four coins jingling as best they could in that crowded pocket. Never for one moment did Bob forget them; and that night, just as he got into bed, he had reason to remember them especially for he heard a metallic sort of voice say: "These are pretty close quarters, let's get a breath of air! I dare say he's asleep by this time, anyhow."

Very, very gingerly the boy who was supposed to be asleep rolled over in bed, and discovered his four shining twenty-five cent pieces cautiously trickling out of his trousers' pockets. Tongue-tied, himself, by utter astonishment, he heard very word they said! "Don't talk about close quarters!" the first coin chuckled, "for that's me all over! Come on, sit down here in the moonlight, and I'll tell you my life history—all one continual disappointment from the day of my birth in the mint until now. For I was born ambitious, full of visions, and the way people use me is enough to make a self-respecting quarter blush with shame. Only day before yesterday my last owner took me in her pocket to a Baptist New World Movement meeting, and before long I felt her crying. Her handkerchief, poor fellow, lay in her pocket beside me, and he whispered cruelly: 'Oh pshaw, if she keeps this up I'll probably have to mop up her tears and stay wet all afternoon!'

"And sure enough, she reached in just then and pulled him out. When he came back ten minutes later he was wet and shivering! 'But no wonder she cried,' he groaned, 'for a missionary was telling how hungry people are for news of God—how they crawl on their knees all day long to the shrine of some old wooden idol just to leave an offering and beg him to save them. Story after story she told, of old grannies standing in the broiling sun all day to please a wooden idol, of fathers climbing high mountains to gain peace for their souls, of little children giving their food to please some old brass image. Very sad, it was! And very useless. Especially as this missionary said that three gospels could be bought for only a quarter and distributed free to those poor people, for in the gospel they could read of the Lord Jesus and their longings would be satisfied.'

"At which joyful news I nearly hopped out of her pocket, for wasn't I a quarter? And couldn't I buy three copies of the gospels? But would you believe it—Miss Ever So Sorry wept and sobbed, wept and sobbed, wept and sobbed, and got her handkerchief wetter and wetter, yet never once did she think of me aching and longing to get to India to give out Bibles. No, that crying girl walked out of that meeting, my friends, still sobbing, and stopped at a candy store where she spent me for candy, Candy! And I could have gone around the world cheering forlorn anxious people....."

"You poor thing!" sympathized another silver quarter, "She couldn't have been very sorry, in spite of her name. I know exactly how you feel for I was at that very same church at the Boy Reserve Banquet, when a missionary doctor from Mexico told about a Baptist hospital down there where they need soup and soap and sheets and trays and bottles and milk and a dozen other things which very poor patients aren't able to buy for themselves.

New Contest: Finish Bob's Story

1. The minute Bob Spencer found what fun it would be watching his four quarters at work around the world giving Bibles to the ignorant and pills to the sick he wanted to get them busy at once.
2. For the most interesting ending about what he "watched" his dollar doing

4. Suggestions: You may care to know some of the things one-dollar will do for Baptists, as given in this list—

$1 will support every Baptist missionary, mission school, mission hospital, mission orphanage, mission boat, mission nurse and teacher etc., etc. for one second-and-a-half! (A busy dollar to watch!)

THE WATCH THAT MADE THE DOLLAR FAMOUS

we will offer two prizes—one for the best story sent in by a boy, one for the best story sent in by a girl.

3. Rules: Call it "The Watch That Made The Dollar Famous." It should be between 200 and 500 words in length and should be mailed to Miss Applegarth, Care of THE BAPTIST, by April 1. Give your age. We will print the stories here, in April.

$1 will buy twenty-five copies of John's gospel in any language for free distribution.

$1 will send out a Bible woman for one week so that she may visit twenty-five homes and 100 people to tell about God.

$1 will keep a little village school open for six days—a little school where children of all races may learn their A, B, C's and sing our Christian songs for the first time.

$1 will support a bed in a mission hospital for one week. Think what the heathen patient can learn in that time!

DISCUSSION OF TOPIC

By O. F. LAEGELER

I. That God trusts us with His riches is the fundamental idea of this great parable. God has delegated the administration of his world to us as stewards because he believes in us. TIME and TALENTS and all kinds of human GIFTS and OPPORTUNITIES are placed in our hands as part of the wealth of God invested in us as faithful stewards of the manifold grace of God.

"It is required as stewards that a man be found faithful." 1 Cor. 4:1-2.

II. In the parable we read: "Good and faithful Servant." Here are the elements of a great life. Christ does not say a great life is splendid. He does not say a great life is illustrious. He does not say a great life is heroic. A great life is all these and more, but Christ does not say so. He simply says "good and faithful"—"faithful to the trust of God."

"What is it to be faithful? It is to be full of faith. It is trusting God down to the end of the journey, through storm and sunshine, through adversity and prosperity, through good report and evil report, saying ever with the last breath—"Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." It is fidelity. It is being trustworthy as well as trustful. It is trusting God until men can trust me. It is being loyal to duty; so devoted to truth, so steadfast to principle that no lure of quick success can tempt me to be faithless. It means that I should rather be defeated than lie; that I should rather fail in business than succeed through dishonesty; that I should rather be broken in fortune and ruined in reputation than compromise my honor. And it is all this, not for a day or a year or a decade, but for life; not merely when it pays, but when it costs; not only when it is applauded, but when it is hissed; it is unto death."—J. I. Vance.

In stewardship the greatness of God is manifested in that he asks so little and gives so much. He gives the much because he believes in our faithfulness; let us not betray the trust, but rather be faithful unto death that we may receive the crown of life.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

"To every living soul that same he saith. 'Be faithful'—whatsoever else we be Let us be faithful challenging his faith."

The young people of today can play a tremendous part in the advance of the Kingdom through our denomination. At the present time an emergency confronts Northern Baptists.

A Crisis in the Work

He is depending on us to carry on his work. The following shows the need: "The following official statements indicate the critical financial condition which our national societies and boards are facing. These distressing facts are due, in a large part, to the decrease in receipts from New World Movement pledges during the first months of the current fiscal year or since May 1, 1921.

"It is doubtless true that during the last fiscal year the receipts of every organization participating in the New World Movement were in excess of the receipts of any previous year. This is an occasion for deep gratitude to God. The increased cost of conducting our work has, for the most part, absorbed the increased income. Unless present conditions are immediately relieved and a larger income is made available, retrenchment will become inevitable.

"We are confident that when the facts are known, our people will respond and furnish the funds needed.

"A strenuous effort to collect what is due on pledges will be put forth during the remaining weeks of the fiscal year. We beseech all our churches and individual subscribers to respond heartily and promptly to this appeal. In addition to the amount due on pledges, we shall need approximately $8,000,000 from churches and individuals which have not previously made pledges to the New World Movement. This sum together with what is due on pledges will be required in order to enable all organizations to carry on their work and close the year April 30, 1922, without deficits."

God is counting on you, as young people, to do your utmost. You must not fail Him in this hour of need.

Questions for Discussion

What is the chief requisite in a steward? Apply it in home life, school life, church, and other activities.

What change in your view of your life and possessions does this principle of Stewardship make?

In what way can the Lord count on me in the present denominational crisis?

For Your Next Social

By EDNA GEISTER

The following games are taken from "It Is To Laugh," a book of games and stunts especially helpful to leaders of the social life of churches. It is published by Doran Company of New York and this excerpt is reprinted through their courtesy. Drop the Editor a line if you like, or if you do not like, this program.—J. A. W.

SPOTS

The leader has chosen seven or eight places in the room as the "spots," and has a list of them at hand. All of them have been carefully chosen, and she alone knows where they are. Guests are standing about informally when the announcement is made that in about two minutes whistle will be blown, at which time the couple standing on a certain spot will receive a handsome reward. At the same time, however, anyone seen standing alone will be fined. A partner is essential to winning a prize or to make one immune to a fine. Even if a person is standing on the lucky spot at the time the whistle blows, if he is alone he must pay the fine, one cent.

To promote a general moving around, and to add to the spirit of the game, lively march music is played all the time the guests are supposed to be moving, although no definite line of march is encouraged.

Two additional rules insure the success of "Spots." After the first spot has been found and the prize awarded, the game goes on and another spot in some other part of the room is the lucky one. But no person can have the same partner he had while the first spot was being sought. The same fine of one cent is imposed on any two people who seem to think they have an option on each other.

The same thing is true of location. Anyone found standing in the same place he occupied during the first round, is fined, with much publicity.

The game goes on until the seven or eight spots have been located and the "handsome rewards" given out. All the spots have been chosen with the purpose in mind being to get guests absolutely relaxed, thoroughly mixed and free from any stiff formality. That is why a definite line of march would be fatal. Instead, let the first spot be behind the piano; the next on the platform; the next leaning up against a pillar, etc.

To sum up, the rules are as follows:

1. Everyone must have a partner.
2. Partners must be changed for every round.
3. No one is allowed to stand in the same place for two successive rounds.

Four or five so-called "policemen" assist the leader in detecting violators of these rules and much publicity is given the fining of the offenders.

The success of the game depends entirely on the ability of the leader to make her guests feel the great desirability of finding one of those elusive lucky spots. No one knows where they are. All they know is that it behooves them to move, to get a partner, to keep on moving, and to keep on getting partners!

THE TREASURE HUNT GRAND MARCH

Hide flags or Washington's birthday favors or covered candies in every conceivable spot. Guests are lined up with partners as for a Grand March. The line of march is around the room without coming up the middle. When the music begins leaders start marching. Suddenly the director's whistle sounds as the signal that the hunt is on. They break ranks and scramble to find the hidden favors. Two whistles sound sharply, the signal to discontinue the search at once, find your partner and get into the line of march which is straggly and uneven at best, but it makes no difference as long as every one is in it and no one is hunting favors. The music and marching continue until another single whistle proclaims an open season for favors, the last one.

At the double whistle they continue their marching as before except that the leaders bring the line down the center, and all halt while the director finds out who didn't get any favors and who got the most.

KIDDY-KAR RACE

The course should be about thirty feet in length. The biggest men present are chosen for drivers, and there are two drivers for each team.

The kiddy-kars are lined up at the starting point, with drivers No. 1 sitting on the cars, all set to go. At the whistle they are off, the cars propelled in the usual and only possible fashion! They travel to the goal about thirty feet away, and return, immediately turning their cars over to the other member of the team, driver No. 2, who starts off without waiting for any signal, to run the same course. The one who is first to return to the starting place wins the race for his team.

The possibilities of a kiddy-kar made for a five-year-old but propelled by a forty-five year old are almost unbelievable!

FRIENDLINESS

Men are in one line, girls in another. It is the object of the girls to be so friendly that the men, who are perfect glooms, cannot help smiling. The girls may laugh or giggle or smirk or make faces in their efforts to break the gloom that seems to be holding the men. Any man who forgets his manliness to the extent of smiling even the least little bit, goes over to the side of the ladies. At the end of the three-minute time limit, all the men whose gloom has not been broken and who confidently wait for the prize they think forthcoming, are fined ten cents for being killjoys.

Another friendly effort is the revised version of the popular song "Smiles." At first it is sung correctly, but the next time the word "smile" is omitted, and in its place, each singer smiles his sweetest possible smile at his neighbor. It is painful.

MUSICAL RUTH AND JACOB

This is particularly for a group of guests who could in no sense be called musical. The guests are standing in a circle with a man and a girl in the center. If the group is large, have them crowd in to make the circle space smaller so that it will not make Jacob's work too difficult. The game is played like the old-fashioned "Ruth and Jacob," both of them being blindfolded, it being the task of Jacob to catch Ruth. Instead of calling "Ruth" however, Jacob sings up the scale, whether he can or not, and Ruth answers by singing down the scale, both of them using "Loo" instead of do-re-mi.

The game is infinitely more ridiculous if neither one can sing, and if the leader has created the right atmosphere, even though a man protests "I just can't sing," he will usually finish up by making a noble effort to do it anyhow!

When Jacob catches Ruth, the leader who has in the meantime been looking over the circle, immediately announces the next two victims and almost invariably public opinion will be with her to such an extent that they step forth, willy-nilly.

THE VARIETY STORE

Guests line up in two equal lines, men in one, women in another, all of them facing the center. On a little table at the head of each line there is a choice collection of objects which are awkward to handle, the objects on the two tables being exactly alike of course. The leader is standing at one of the tables, with an assistant at the other. When the lines are ready these two leaders begin passing objects down the line. As they reach the end of the line they are put on the floor. When all of them have been passed, the lines quickly turn around and face the other way, and begin passing the things back again, to see which line can first get all of them back on the table.

The fun in this race lies in the nature of the objects chosen. The following list has been used to good (or evil?) advantage:

1. Old fashioned flatiron.
2. Tin pail.
3. Curling iron.
4. Coffee pot.
5. Fan.
6. Rubber ball.
7. Toy engine.
8. Big potato.
9. Egg.
10. Hair receiver.

PARTNERSHIP RELAY

Six or eight couples are placed in groups of two couples each; one couple standing behind the other, the entire group about twenty feet from a goal line. The girls take their partners' arms and retain possession throughout each event despite the inevitable protest at lagging! At a signal, each first couple walks to the goal line, carrying out directions given before each event of the relay; then hurries back and touches off the second couple. Events might be as follows:

1. Each man carries a glass full of water. At the goal he hands it to the girls who must drink it all before they can rush back to the starting point.

2. Together they clap hands and sing Yankee Doodle as they walk to the goal and back.

3. Each man has a cracker. At the goal he gives it to his partner who must eat it and is not allowed to start back until she can whistle.

4. At the goal line the man sings up the scale and waits for the girl to sing down the scale before they can go back.

5. While they are hurrying to the goal line the leader may blow her whistle at any time, which is the signal for them to turn completely around once, and then continue their course. Because their arms are locked and because they always have different ideas about the right way to turn, complications arise!

SHUN THE CIRCLE

Guests form a large circle, the men on the right side of their partners, all of them faced for marching. Four or more circles about four feet in diameter have been roughly drawn in chalk on the floor. The distance between them depends on the size of the circle formed by the group. When the music starts, everyone begins to march around in circle formation with the one rule that every one must walk straight across each of the small circles described on the floor. Suddenly the leader's whistle blows, the music stops, all movements halt, and any one caught in any of the small circles is discarded! If the leader has a watchful eye she can blow the whistle at a bad time and make it mighty uncomfortable for some couple just posed to take the first step into one of the circles or another couple just on the outer edge of the danger zone. The precarious balancing in either case is choice!

This continues at the leader's discretion. Almost never is it advisable to carry it through till the last couple is caught.

CIRCLE HANDSHAKE

It is good psychology to have a genuine mixer at the end of the evening as well as at the beginning. After the last game the guests form a circle. The leader asks the one standing nearest the door to shake hands with his right-hand neighbor, and to continue shaking hands all the way around the circle, telling each one "Good-night," until he has gone completely around, after which he drops out of the circle. At the same time, however, all the others are beginning to do the same thing. He had no sooner finished shaking hands with his right-hand neighbor and gone on to the next one and then on to the next, than this same right-hand neighbor began doing the same thing, shaking the hand of his neighbor to the right, and so on around the circle. Each one does the same thing, so that after No. 2 has passed No. 3, No. 3 starts immediately to shake hands around the circle, and as soon as he passes No. 4, No. 4 does the same thing.

In this way it is inevitable that everyone shake hands with everyone else and bids them all "Good-night."

Religious Education

Why Not a Graded Church?

By WILLIAM H. MAIN

NO. 1. ITS IMPORTANCE

WE ARE grading about everything else, why not grade the church? The very best thing for us all is religious education, but why not begin it a little earlier? Formation is much better than reformation. A young tree was broken. Carefully the broken parts were placed together and securely bound. Years later, during a storm, the tree broke again, in the very place where it had been mended.

Christian training seeks to make us what we ought to be. If we desire a beautiful garden we do not leave it to care for itself. We plant, keep out the weeds, and train, and thus shall we behold its beauty. A bar of iron worth $5 made into horse-shoes is worth $10.50—made into needles is worth $355. The increase in value is due to refining and development.

Training changed the lad, who seemed always to be whittling sticks, into that most eminent of English sculptors, Sir Francis Chantry. For five years Porpora, who trained Cafferelli the singer, would allow him to try nothing but a series of scales and exercises. During the sixth year he added articulation. At the end of the sixth year Cafferelli imagined himself to have made little progress beyond the mere rudiments of his art, but to his astonishment, his master said: "Young man, you may now leave me. You are the greatest singer in the world."

If training can make great sculptors and great singers, can we not train people to become great Christians? Religious education is the very heart of true evangelism. There ought never to be occasion for the conversion of adults: this ought to have been brought about in youth. How prone are pastors, in reports of baptisms, to emphasize the number of adults who have made profession of faith. Think of the years lost which might have been used in service for the Master. Every young man of twenty-two years of age was twelve years old ten years ago. Not very profound, but exceedingly important to remember. Ten short years from childhood to manhood, and all these years often in the keeping of one pastor. Here was a plastic mind, a sensitive spirit, a tender heart—an active, imaginative, often heroic character—often neglected. It ought to appeal to the very best intellectual forces in the pastor and teacher.

Here is a mighty interesting task—a task worthy of the best effort of the most highly intellectual man or woman. In reaching the child-man three faculties must be aroused—Attention, Interest and Consideration. In reaching the child-heart there are three other faculties to be touched—viz.: Apprehension, Comprehension and Affection. In moving the child-will there must be the strengthening and stimulation of Intention, Expression, and Self-direction, which will lead to open confession. Surely a task worthy of the greatest of teachers.

The Bible-school alone cannot train young Christians so that they shall become the heart and life of the church of tomorrow. We are told that about 80 per cent of our converts come from the Bible-school, but it is a startling fact that a large number of these pass through the church out into the world, and are lost to the life and work of the church. We cannot place too much emphasis upon a graded Bible-school, but we surely have placed too little emphasis upon the importance of children attending the worship services of the church.

Conversion is not the only essential in the Christian life, for we are taught that we are saved to serve. In many of our congregations there is a deplorable lack of young people. Surely if 80 per cent of our members join the church in youth there ought to be a large number of young people attending our services of worship. They will if we make it interesting for them.

Paul, when he thought of Timothy, suggested three stages of life. He wrote to his son in the Gospel—"From a babe thou hast known the Holy Scriptures." Again he wrote: "Let no man despise thy youth."

Still again he wrote: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman who cannot be put to shame, rightly dividing the word of truth."

But there was something before all this—the unfeigned faith that was in Timothy first dwelt in his grandmother Lois, and in his mother Eunice—and thus in Timothy—through Christian training. It is quite likely that Timothy had a grandfather and a father, but in this educational program they are not mentioned.

Many years ago a little boy—trained to attend the worship services of the church—suddenly saw the truth, gave himself to Christ, and became a minister of the Gospel. For over forty years he was pastor of one church. He gave much attention to the children. His oldest son, trained to attend services of worship, was baptized by his father when the boy was twelve years of age. He later became a minister, and when his boy, trained to attend services of worship, was twelve years of age his father baptized him, and he too became a minister of Christ. He in turn baptized his boy when he was about twelve years of age.

In our next article on "Why Not a Graded Church?" we shall consider The Method, and try to tell how one church helped to solve this great problem.

International Uniform Lesson for March 12

AMOS WARNS ISRAEL (TEMPERANCE LESSON)

Amos 6:1-8. Golden Text: Proverbs 20:1.

Background

Amos, a contemporary of Jonah, prophesied in Israel about 750 B. C., during the reign of Jeroboam II. Of himself he says: "I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son: but I was a herdsman and a dresser of sycamore trees: and Jehovah took me from following the flock and said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel." He was a Judean from the desert lands of Tekoa, about six miles south of Bethlehem. Amos wrote his book about 755 B. C., the first of the prophetic books, hence he is called the "father of written prophecy."

The Lesson

The strength of open spaces, the force of the simple, rugged life Amos had lived shows in the elemental utterances which he hurls at the people of Israel. To none other could the life of ease and luxury they lived have been more abhorrent than to this man who demanded nothing in the way of physical comforts. He was confident but with no conceit, taking no credit to himself for any of his prophecies; he was but the medium through whom Jehovah spoke. At the time of this lesson Israel was complacent in peace from wars and in a sense of security. It was a prosperous period, and the people had become self-indulgent, thinking only of their own pleasures and comfort. Then came this disturber of their peace with "Are ye better than these other kingdoms?"—mighty ones which had fallen—"Ye that put away the evil day . . . that lie upon beds of ivory and stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock and the calves out of the midst of the stall; that sing idle songs to the sound of the viol; that invent for themselves instruments of music . . . that drink wine in bowls and anoint themselves with the chief oils. Therefore shall they now go captive with the first that go captive; and the revelry of them that stretched themselves shall pass away."

And the dark prophecies of Amos were fulfilled. Both Biblical and Assyrian evidence shows us that.

Lesson Thoughts

1. "Woe to them that are at ease!" Ease and idleness are the prolific parents of evil. 2. One does not drift nor sink into goodness—an active, definite stand must be taken. 3. "Sing idle songs"—"jazz" days then, also. 4. "They eat the lambs out of the flock"—is not the present time one when the "lambs of the flock" are threatened by just such conditions as the prophet describes?

Our Own Folks

Change in Place and Date of Northern Baptist Convention Meeting for 1922

By W. C. BITTING

THE next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention will be held in Indianapolis, Ind., June 14-20 inclusive. The change in place and date from Seattle, July 5, came about in this way:

The seriousness of our denominational situation with regard to the New World Movement, and the necessity of a large and representative gathering to consider questions which the existing emergency raises, have made many lovers of our denominational welfare think deeply. In a letter to the corresponding secretary under date of Dec. 14, 1921, Dr. J. F. Watson, chairman of the Seattle local committee, expressed his personal opinion, without consultation with any one else, that it might be for the welfare of our denomination if this year's meeting of the convention were held at some place more accessible to our denominational hosts. No one can exaggerate the unselfish spirit that was willing to give up the coveted joy of entertaining our convention for the sake of the welfare of our work. Absolutely no other consideration was in the mind and heart of this unselfish brother when he wrote those words. This personal opinion was communicated to the members of the executive committee and the director general of the Board of Promotion who knows the situation probably better than anyone else. An overwhelming majority of the executive committee agreed with the opinion of Dr. Watson. The director general and the president of the convention both felt, however, that it would be unwise to change the place and date. The chairman of the law committee expressed the opinion that the by-laws of the convention gave the executive committee power to change the date but not the place of meeting. Meanwhile, Dr. Aitchison visited Seattle and telegraphed the corresponding secretary that he saw no reason for a change so far as any conditions in Seattle existed. Nothing further was done.

Meanwhile, the corresponding secretary was receiving resolutions from ministers' conferences in various parts of the country, and letters from individual Baptists asking for a change of the place of meeting to one more accessible to our Baptist population, the center of which is said to be at a point somewhere between Buffalo and Cleveland. The executive committee of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society passed a resolution that it would be in every way desirable to meet elsewhere than in Seattle in view of the grave situation that confronts us and of the great expense necessary for the majority of our communicants who live in the east if we were to meet in Seattle. Many were saying that they could not afford to make the trip across the continent.

After the conference at Columbia, Mo., of which our denominational papers have given some account, the corresponding secretary met a number of Baptists on the evening of Jan. 27, as they passed through St. Louis on the way to their homes. In the group were the president of the convention, the director of the General Board of Promotion, the president of the Woman's Home Mission Society, the chairman of the program committee for the next meeting of the convention, the editor of the Watchman-Examiner and the corresponding secretary. Other well-known Baptists had been present at the dinner given to these returning delegates, but had to take trains too early to enable them to participate in this conference. The corresponding secretary laid before the group the resolution of the executive committee of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, and other documents conveying the sentiment of Baptists in various parts of the country. It was unanimously agreed that the place and date of the convention should be reopened. The corresponding secretary at once wrote to the brethren in Seattle stating the opinions of those who were present. With the same magnanimity which characterized the chairman of the local committee, the Seattle brethren, in view of statements concerning the existing need for a representative meeting, telegraphed the corresponding secretary that they would relinquish their claim to the meeting of the convention this year.

Meanwhile, the brethren in Indianapolis, Ind., had heard of the opening of the question as to the place of meeting. Letters were received saying that Indianapolis would be glad to entertain the convention. The corresponding secretary at once communicated by telegraph with the members of the executive committee and the secretaries of the cooperating organizations and boards. Prompt replies were received. All expressed the opinion that we should accept the invitation of the Indianapolis brethren. The dates June 14-20 were necessarily fixed by the availability of hotel accommodations and of a meeting place in that city.

The corresponding secretary has received resolutions passed by the Board of Promotion of the Western Washington Convention on Tuesday, Feb. 7, as follows:

"Whereas: The Board of Promotion of the Western Washington Baptist Convention in regular session Tuesday, Feb. 7, 1922, having heard the correspondence between its executive secretary, J. F. Watson, D.D., and the corresponding secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention, W. C. Bitting, D.D., in regard to the advisability of changing the place of meeting from Seattle to some point near to the center of Baptist population, after a full discussion voted:

"That the Western Washington Baptist Convention, with very great regret relinquishes its right to the meeting of the convention this year.

"Now therefore: Be it resolved, that this action was taken because Washington Baptists feel that a crisis confronts the denomination and that the interests of the Kingdom of God will be furthered by a larger convention than would gather if the convention were held in Seattle.

"The action is taken, further, with the expressed understanding that we renew the invitation for the convention to meet in Seattle whenever, in the judgment of the convention it can come West without injury to the cause of Christ; next year, if possible and not later than the year 1925.

"Be it resolved, further, that Western Washington Baptists want it distinctly understood, in taking this action that the city of Seattle is amply able to care for the convention this year and that only the highest reasons of loyalty to Christ and his Kingdom induce them to take this action."—J. F. Watson, Secretary.

There has also been received the official invitation of the Baptists of Indianapolis reinforced by the action of the executive committee of the Indiana State Convention. This official action was taken on February 10.

The corresponding secretary cannot convey to the denomination in sufficiently appreciative language the beautiful spirit of the brethren in Seattle, and also in Indianapolis. The entirely unselfish desire to promote the interests of the Kingdom of God as entrusted to our beloved denomination, and the desire that our Baptist hosts shall act with consecration to meet the solemn obligations resting upon us, have dominated our brethren in Washington and in Indiana alike.

Too much space would be required to quote the resolutions adopted by ministers' meetings in Chicago, Philadelphia and Providence, R. I., and also to give extracts from letters of well-known, beloved and useful pastors and laymen in various sections of the country, all of them alike expressing the same spirit that pervaded the hearts of the brethren on the Pacific Coast and also in Indianapolis. Truly the spirit of Christ controlled all minds.

Only one thing remains for all of us: The dedication of our hearts and purses to the holy enterprises to which our discipleship to our Lord commits us all.

No doubt the convention itself will ratify the action of its executive committee in assuming to change the place of meeting under the circumstances outlined above.

Florida

By E. P. BRAND

There are 700 Baptists churches in Florida and about 75,000 members. The Baptists are more than twice as strong as any other evangelical denomination. We spent one Sabbath in Jacksonville, the largest city in the state with a population of 91,000 according to the last census. There are thirteen white English-speaking churches in the city. January 16 we attended morning service at First Church. There were 480 in Sunday school. The meeting house is a large stone building. The auditorium, gallery and about half the Sunday-school room were full. Sunday night we attended service at the Tenth and Eighth Street Church, another large stone building with a larger Sunday School than First Church. The auditorium was full.

St. Petersburg is a new northern city. There are two Baptist churches here. Rev. E. T. Paulson, an Indiana man, is pastor of the First Church. It has 525 members. A large, well-located basement is complete and is being used. The church expects to finish its new building by next September. It will cost $100,000. The Grace Church is in the business center of the city. It has a large auditorium not well arranged. Rev. W. H. Hubbard is the pastor. He has the reputation of being a very fine preacher. The church has purchased a splendid lot for a new building, and has more than $100,000 worth of property but there are some serious hindrances to its building.

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan is now in St. Petersburg giving a series of twenty-four lectures on Bible teaching under the auspices of the First Baptist and Presbyterian churches. The largest buildings have been overcrowded at each of his lectures except on one or two rainy days.

Sunday School at Marshall, Mich. Increases Its Enrollment from 168 to 445 in Fifteen Months

By J. BURT BOUWMAN

In considering the increase in enrollment of our Sunday school in the last year it ought to be clearly understood at the outset that there has been no industrial boom or change in Marshall. Marshall is recognized as a static town with a population of about 4,200, to which seven churches are ministering.

Upon my arrival at Marshall, Nov. 1, 1920, a survey of the town was promoted. About 500 names of men, women and children, with their ages, who did not attend church or Sunday school were thus secured. Their names were transferred to cards and the cards distributed to the proper Sunday-school classes. For example, a class of boys, ages from twelve to fourteen, was given the names of all boys of that age and told to get them lined up. Some classes enrolled their entire list of prospects in a few weeks, and a large number of those have since joined the church.

A survey, however, followed by such a campaign would be quite useless unless the Sunday school had a program under way, which would continue to challenge the interest of boys and girls. A varied range of activities was promoted, including a mid-week meeting every week, athletics, summer camp, suppers, outings, hikes and personal evangelism. As a result of such a wide program a very limited number of those who enroll are lost sight of.

Although our Sunday school had a very efficient superintendent it was impossible for him to give close attention to such a program. The following directors were therefore appointed, responsible to the superintendent but to work with the classes: An educational or program director, who gives special attention to teaching material, teacher's training, and all educational features of our work; a membership director, who promotes all plans for increasing our enrollment and who has all pupils properly enrolled and listed; an attendance director who works with classes that have a low percentage of attendance, urges teacher and class presidents to look up absent pupils and promotes competition in attendance between classes; a social director who takes charge of any social activity involving more than one Sunday-school class; a devotional director who looks up prospects for church membership with the help of the teacher and who is to help in the organization of prayer circles in the various classes; an athletic director who promotes all inter-class athletics and directs all group games.

All Sunday-school classes above the primary are organized and have some kind of mid-week activities. Class presidents are included in the workers' conferences, with the result that they appreciate their responsibility and are constantly working on enrollment and attendance.

While the possibilities for new scholars among boys and girls in Marshall seem almost exhausted, our rural program is just beginning to function, and while we have no space here to tell about this work we can see unlimited possibilities in this field.

We might summarize the reasons for increase as we see them, as follows: A survey which did not leave the names piled in a corner but put them in the hands of active membership committees of classes; a system of enrollment and re-checking which is accurate and which keeps the name of all those enrolled constantly before teachers and officers; Sunday school directors who work at critical points in the Sunday school where we usually expect an already overworked superintendent to function; a challenging all-around program; organized classes and active contact with class officers.

Founders' Day at the Baptist Missionary Training School

By LOUELLA P. FORD

VASSAR, Smith, Wellesley—in truth all the colleges for women pay annual tribute to the men and women who were instrumental in their founding. Why, indeed, should not the B. M. T. S. have a founders' day as well? This thought took root in the always versatile mind of President Clara D. Pinkham. When a thought is actually rooted in that very productive soil, it at once grows, and the branches are spreading in specified directions in an incredibly short time.

In cooperation with the Training School committee of the W. A. B. H. M. S. plans were put in operation. Necessary committees were appointed and presto! a well rounded, perfectly planned, and admirably conducted Founders' Day was released to a Baptist public, on Thursday, Feb. 2.

And the Baptist public came. It was the dual celebration of the forty-fifth anniversary of the W. A. B. H. M. S. and the forty-first anniversary of the founding of the B. M. T. S. The commodious, dignified building that we all love presented a commanding front. Never have the halls and library and reception rooms and chapel assumed a more gala appearance—flooded with light and brilliant with flowers. The guests were so happy, the face of the president so radiant, the girls so attractive and responsive to every wish and inquiry. I ask you who were there, wasn't it a red letter day in our Baptist calendar?

Tender visions came trooping through the years. It was a triumphant crystallization of the high idealism of a few noble, far-seeing women.

The Alumnae luncheon, presided over by Miss Lottie Herring, president Central District Alumnae Association, opened the day's program. Never was there a more devoted lot of graduates gathered around luncheon tables. Loyalty to and love for B. M. T. S. was the key note of the after-luncheon program and greetings were brought by many graduates of different years. The spirit of camaraderie, of love and loyalty, of holy fellowship ran high.

The historical session opened at 3 o'clock, Mrs. J. H. Chapman presiding. The chapel was green with ferns and glowing with roses, tulips, and jonquils, the gift of Mrs. A. B. Meeker, the only living representative of the original board. The American flag and the Christian flag stood sentinel on either side. Mrs. A. G. Lester, president for seven years of the W. A. B. H. M. S. and chairman of the building committee of the present building, gave the historical sketch of the training school, so full of research, so replete with first-hand knowledge of the school from its beginnings that it cannot be adequately reported in a short sketch. It will soon be issued in pamphlet form and prove a valuable asset to missionary literature. It was fraught with humor and pathos. It brought laughter and tears; as she talked, the old atmosphere came back. The present slipped into the past. Ghosts walked—strong, friendly, constructive ones. We harked back to the days of Mrs. J. N. Crouse whose power of perspective brought the school into being; Mrs. Whaley, the house director de luxe, a Southern woman of character and poise and dimples; of Mrs. C. D. Morris, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke, a combination of sweetness and strength and deep spiritual power; of Miss Burdette, the teacher and writer, the first editor of Tidings, the keen executive whose fingers fairly dripped with accountability. Mrs. Lester told us that the school "grew in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and finally with man." Mrs. S. C. Jennings, a niece of Miss Burdette, and on whom the folds of her mantle have fallen in a marked way, gave most charming personal bits of experience with the triumvirate who formed the faculty in the early days. Mrs. Jennings said in closing—"Perhaps no three persons so unlike in many respects ever lived together as these three women did, but they had one common love—the Baptist Missionary Training School."

Some of our Training School workers brought messages. Representing the Negroes, Miss Mattie Fisher, gracious and alert, paid a wonderful tribute to what the Training School had meant to her and to her race. Miss Troeck—our vigorous and popular Miss Troeck—told us as no one else can how the Training School prepared her for work among the immigrants. Miss Ada H. Boyce, missionary supervisor, for several districts in the Middle West, stressed the bringing of the message of Jesus Christ. Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, with magnetic force, told of the impact of the Training School in foreign lands. We hope at some future date to give Mrs. MacLeish's address verbatim so replete was it with the thought that the girls who have been in training here can carry their acquired knowledge to far-away lands and establish Training Schools there.

This session was closely followed by the Student Session in which the students themselves, in clever words and descriptive living tableaux, visualized the history of the Training School already given. O girls, you were clever and apt. We laughed. Then we wanted to cry. Indeed it was a picturization of dreams come true. A constantly enlarging vision that has come down through four decades. An evolution. A marching on. The wonder of it. The answer to prayer. The crowning of consecrated endeavor. A long cry it is from the first missionary who came back for a three months' training to the present fully equipped woman who stood before us in cap and gown with her B. A. degree in her hands. The torch has been passed on and we are bearing it high!

Then the banquet. Served it was with great efficiency under the direction of Miss Ellen J. Simpson, the present house director. The two dining rooms were thronged. The tables were brilliant with candle light and red carnations. President Pinkham presided with glorious optimism, a triumphant spirit and spontaneous sympathies.

A double quartet from the Olivet Church sang Negro spirituals. How they can sing! Voices of silver! Slipping, sliding, crooning! Then an undefined obligato blending into "Nearer My God To Thee."

The address of the evening was given by Rev. Charles Whitney Gilkey, pastor of the Hyde Park Church. It formed a perfect ending to a perfect day. Mr. Gilkey is so knitted in thought and spirit with the young people of our schools and colleges that his mind is always attuned to theirs. He is always presenting a gleam farther on for them to follow.

He spoke for us all when he said that we were there because we loved the Training School and had a faith and loyalty to and in it. Mr. Gilkey traced the growth of the school, declaring that it had ever risen to meet all emergencies. He particularly stressed the need, actual as well as psychological, of a training that should enable our missionaries to meet the educated foreigner on a basis of intellectual equality.

So ended our first Founders' Day, and ideals were enlarged and hearts made big and glad and a new loyalty and allegiance pledged.

Offer of Baptist Theological Union Accepted

The following recommendation was enthusiastically adopted at the recent meeting of the Administrative Committee of the General Board of Promotion on Feb. 7-8:

"We recommend that the generous offer of the Baptist Theological Union be accepted, and that the funds released from the askings and the gifts which it has offered to return be included in the general fund of the New World Movement. We further recommend that the following expression of our appreciation of the generous offer be spread upon our records, and incorporated in Dr. Aitchison's letter to Mr. Robert L. Scott, President of the Board of Trustees of the Baptist Theological Union and Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, President of the University of Chicago.

"The Administrative Committee of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention is profoundly moved by the spirit of unselfish and sacrificial devotion to the Northern Baptist Convention's forward movement for the evangelization of the world, which prompted the Trustees of the Baptist Theological Union to release all undesignated funds already contributed, and its claim on any future funds of the New World Movement Campaign, excepting only those which must be applied to designated purposes, in order that the missionary, educational and evangelistic needs which are more pressing than its own, may be met at this time.

"This new evidence of the loyal support of the entire denominational program on the part of the Baptist Theological Union, greatly encourages the Administrative Committee. The Administrative Committee, therefore, desires to express its appreciation of this generous act on the part of the Trustees of the Baptist Theological Union, and of the Trustees of the University of Chicago, and to assure them that the gift will hearten the missionaries at home and abroad."

What New York Laymen Are Stressing

At the invitation of Dr. C. A. Barbour, who has been asked to serve as chairman of the layman's organization for New York State, outside the Metropolitan district, a representative group of laymen gathered in Syracuse, Friday afternoon, Feb. 3. Mr. James C. Colgate, of New York was present and kindly consented to act as chairman of the meeting. He also entertained the group at a bountiful dinner.

After full discussion of the present situation in our denominational work and the New World Movement, it was unanimously voted that in the judgment of the laymen present the following matters should be stressed from now until April 30:

(1) Make every possible effort to secure 100 per cent payment of all amounts due to April 30 on pledges already made.

(2) Encourage churches to canvass all new members who have come into the church since the New World Movement campaign was put on, in order that they may not be denied the privilege of sharing with others in the New World Movement.

(3) That churches that have not as yet cooperated in the New World Movement be urged to do so now in view of the fact that the new rule regarding designated gifts removes any objection which such churches may have had to the New World Movement.

(4) That churches that did not reach their quota in the original campaign be urged to endeavor to do so at this time.

(5) That men in our churches who are able to give largely should have their attention called to the urgent needs of our missionary and educational work and be encouraged to make additional gifts even though they may have already subscribed to the New World Movement. Only sacrificial giving will measure up to the present situation.

(6) That we hold ourselves in readiness to help the churches in our vicinity put into effect the suggestions made above, rather than to attempt an organization of the laymen for a special campaign.—Alfred E. Isaac, Secretary.

Philadelphia Letter

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

Of late we have been passing through the unpleasant experience of seeing our family troubles aired in the newspapers. In other words, an enterprising reporter got hold of the words "Fundamentalist" and "Liberal" in some Baptist polemics and began to run them down. Day after day we had to see a column in The Ledger discussing us in a most distressing fashion. The reporter was shrewd enough to piece together the bits of this and that one's remarks until with a clever guess or so he had a fairly accurate story about Seattle, an attempt to gather instructed delegates to capture the convention, a Fundamentalist-Liberal feud and so on.

In the name of all that is holy and precious in our work, the cause for such stories must be taken away. The Philadelphia Statement, which I am sending this week, was born in that atmosphere. It is signed by a company who desire peace and concentration on the work in hand. We are not Fundamentalists, we are Evangelicals and broad enough to include all who will work with us for Christ and his cause.

One interesting development of this situation is a plan for a series of simultaneous sermons preached in many pulpits in the month of March on "Abiding Realities of the Christian Religion." It will be an effort to stress in a public and united way some of the great truths that unite us. The four truths selected are the following: March 5, Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word of God; March 12, The Scriptures, the Authoritative Revelation of God for the Christian Life; March 19, The Christian Character, the Witness of the New Life in Christ; March 26, The Gospel of Salvation, the Power of God and the Christian's Commission. Already fifteen pastors including our strongest churches have agreed to preach on these abiding realities.

On Lincoln's Birthday holiday, Feb. 13, President Barbour of Rochester addressed the Ministers' Conference, choosing as his subject the Gettysburg Address. It was a beautiful, informing presentation. Dr. Barbour was here to meet the Rochester alumni the same day at the annual dinner. After the dinner he went out to the university with Student Pastor Igler and met seventy picked university men, ate supper with them and addressed them. — I don't know what else he found to do to fill up the tedium of a long day.

The quarterly period of Social Unions is upon us. North, East and West Philadelphia Baptist Social Unions met on Feb. 14 and 16, and the Northwest Union on Feb. 28.

One hundred Presbyterian churches of the city have been holding simultaneous evangelistic meetings during the week, Feb. 14-26. The plan has been to import pastors from strong churches elsewhere, as far west as Kansas City, and give a solid week to a strong evangelistic message. It is too soon to give results, but the plan sounds good. It is pastoral, exalts the ministry of the local church, concentrates the thought of a good many. Why could not the plan have even larger application, many denominations doing the same thing at the same time? It is hard to make a dent on the consciousness of the big city when a church tries it alone.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

Milwaukee Association

The biggest thing that has happened in Milwaukee recently was the Baptist Young People's Rally held Feb. 10 at the Wauwatosa Church. There were in the neighborhood of 300 people present, and most of them were young people. The organization of the Milwaukee City Young People's Union was completed, and the officers were elected. The president is Mr. Klinghiel, of Garfield Avenue Church, one of our fine young men of the city. The speaker of the evening was Dr. M. D. Eubank, of China, who spoke on the world's challenge to young people. It was a great address. The banner for attendance was won by the South Church young people, who for several years have not had an organization, but who are now coming to the front with a fine group of young folks who are being trained and supervised by a committee of older folks.

Garfield Avenue Church recently purchased a home for its pastor, Rev. F. W. Kamm. This church is facing the serious problems of many city churches, but has decided to stay by the stuff and fight it out. Bully for Garfield!

Recently the West Allis Church established a mission about two miles west of the church in a fine section which is being rapidly built up. A lot has been purchased and a chapel will soon be erected, which will make possible a growing work in that field.

South Church is getting ready to put up the first unit of its new building on its lots at 24th Avenue and Scott Street. For a number of years it has had a mission on this site, and now it proposes to move its main work to this section, but still will carry on a mission work in the old location. Miss Passolt has been doing a splendid piece of missionary work here for the past year.

On Feb. 16 the Italian mission of Racine was organized into an independent local church, and its minister, Rev. D. Raffone, was ordained to the gospel ministry. Dr. C. A. Brooks, of New York, was present and gave an address in connection with the services of ordination and recognition.

Some Notes

Rev. H. D. Riggs is now pastor of Warrens Church. He came from British Columbia to Wisconsin.

Rev. S. O. Christian, who has been pastor for some time at Juda, has resigned and moved to Kentucky, where he has accepted a pastorate.

The work of Pastor Duyzers is opening up splendidly at Barron. Recently he baptized eleven persons and gave the hand of fellowship to sixteen.

Augusta Church, with Paul MacKinney as pastor, has recently expended some $2,000 in repairs and improvements and now has no reason to take a back seat on the appearance of its meeting house.

Rev. Anthony Jacobs, of Waupaca, who has been ill since the meeting of the convention at Des Moines, has been given a leave of absence by the church. Rev. W. H. Garfield is taking care of the work during Mr. Jacob's enforced absence.

Feb. 16-18 an intensive training school for church vacation school workers was held at Tabernacle Church. Dr. Thomas S. Young and Dr. Selden Roberts, both of the Publication Society, were the principal speakers, though a number of local workers also took part. It is expected that some of those taking part in this institute will help conduct smaller training schools out in the state later on. The movement is on to double the church vacation schools in Wisconsin this year.

Pastor W. T. Dorward, of Tabernacle Church, has been spending two weeks with Elkhorn Baptists in an evangelistic effort. We have not heard what the results have been.

The Drive

Wisconsin has been organized into districts with a leader in charge of each district. The reports have indicated a general rallying to the cause. Mrs. W. S. Lincoln writes that every church in her district has voted to get into the game. The other workers give just as encouraging reports. Dr. M. D. Eubank is spending a month in the state, and many questions are being satisfactorily answered. Where the questioner desires the truth it can always be given. It is only when some one is prejudiced that it is impossible to convince him of the cause and the need. Wisconsin aims to do its part in this great hour of need.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

MR. GEORGE E. MERRILL, architect-secretary for the American Home Mission Society, who is making an itinerary of the western conventions, left this field after several days spent in conference with various churches which are planning buildings now or in the near future. Mr. Merrill held conferences with the following churches: Sacramento First, Sacramento Shiloh (Negro), Locke Chinese Christian Center, San Francisco Hamilton Square, Central and Twenty-first Avenue, Burlingame First, Berkeley North Brae, Richmond First, Fresno First and Cosmopolitan Mission, Clovis First, and Reedley First. Mr. Merrill is an expert and gives the benefit of his wide experience gladly and freely. Generations to come will bless him for his wisdom in planning the church buildings now being contemplated in Northern California. Such buildings as he advocates not only serve the present generation, but will be adequate for generations to come, which is the type of church building needed today. It is to be hoped that every convention in the Northern Baptist field will avail itself of opportunity to secure Mr. Merrill's counsel on church edifice plans.

THE EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN is well under way, and is steadily gaining in interest and power. Meetings are in progress in Clovis, Sacramento Oak Park, Oakland Golden Gate, Coalinga and Ceres, and will soon start in Selma First, Chico First, Aromas First, and Fresno First and Powis Memorial together. A fortunate feature in this campaign is the assistance of Rev. Arthur V. Willey, recently of Idaho Falls, Idaho. Mr. Willey's work there has caused much favorable comment, and from the way he is taking hold of the work it seems that even greater results can be anticipated in this field. Stewardship and tithing are being especially stressed also, and at all times the complete success of the New World Movement is being worked for and prayed for.

MRS. W. T. ELMORE, FROM INDIA, who has been visiting this field in the interests of the Union colleges, has spoken to several purely Baptist gatherings, and her messages have been a blessing to all who have heard her.

EVANGELIST H. E. MARSHALL closed a two-weeks' meeting with the Susanville Church, Feb. 3. The numerical results are thirty-three candidates for baptism, thirteen by letter and restoration, and the usual "others coming." Spiritual results are shown in a church strengthened, a pastor made hopeful and a community ready to take notice.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

FIRST CHURCH OF PASADENA, Dr. John Marvin Dean, pastor, opened its School of Missions Feb. 15. The church is aiming at a minimum of 200 students in six classes. Feb. 5 the hand of fellowship was given to thirty-eight new members received during the last month. The most encouraging item in the church work at present is the exceptional attendance at mid-week service which has compelled the use of the main auditorium for some weeks.

Southern California Women in the Continuation Campaign

The work of the Continuation Campaign among the women of Southern California is well under way with great interest and enthusiasm. The state campaign director is Mrs. M. Grant Edmonds, who is the president of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Southern California; and the state publicity director is Miss Mary A. Green, who is the state secretary-director. Thus the plans are closely connected with the existing state organization, and are being worked through the state and associational organizations in the closest cooperation with the state board of promotion.

The women of Southern California, by vote of their state board, are undertaking to raise, by May 1, 1922, $80,000, of which $850 is to come from the World Wide Guild and $500 from the Children's World Crusade.

The campaign is being carried on by stressing prayer, stewardship and the needs of the New World Movement. To this end, four-minute speeches have been prepared to be read at each monthly meeting of the women's societies in the local church, presenting certain specific needs of the missionary work at home and in foreign lands, such as new churches, Christian centers, school buildings, salaries of missionaries, etc., each also emphasizing prayer, or stewardship or both.

A series of group meetings is now being held, arranged by the associational officers, of the officers and a few vitally interested women from each of the neighboring churches in the group where, in informal conference, all the plans and problems of the campaign are freely explained and discussed, and each local president is asked to appoint a campaign director and a publicity director for her own woman's society. So, when, in March, we begin, in cooperation with the Laymen's Council, to solicit the pledges and gifts, the last woman in the last church will have been informed and we trust will be ready to make an offering. Nine such group meetings have been already held, and in all there has been a very notable spirit of prayer, interest and enthusiasm. These conferences are personally attended by some one of the state directors, or in a few cases, by a volunteer officer of the South Pacific District. Eight more remain. There are also group rallies of the W. W. G. now being held, with the valuable aid of Miss Helen Hobart, field worker for the W. A. B. F. M. S. and W. A. B. H. M. S.

Everywhere the way has been wonderfully prepared for us by the remarkable special meeting of the state convention recently reported in THE BAPTIST, when over 700 delegates and a like number of visitors spent an entire day with Dr. J. Y. Althison and other leaders in the consideration of and prayer for the Continuation Campaign.

MISSOURI
FIRST CHURCH, KANSAS CITY, Dr. D. J. Evans, pastor, reports crowded sessions at each Sunday service and an attendance at the mid-week prayer meeting of from 200 to 275. The pastor is the teacher of the Business Men's Bible Class, which on a recent Sunday had an attendance of 387. The class meets in a tabernacle built for them close to the church building. N. W. Dible is president of the class. Its aim is 1,000 men in attendance by next fall. New members are coming into the church every Sunday which now has a membership of over 2,000. Total attendance at Sunday school is from 1,100 to 1,300. More room is needed and plans are on foot to enlarge accommodations in the spring.

MICHIGAN
A LEAGUE OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDS with thirty charter members pledged to tithing has been organized in Ovid Church. The pastor, Rev. Geo. Woolcock, in conjunction with the M. E. pastor is planning a pre-Easter evangelistic campaign of three weeks.

MINNESOTA
AN INTENSIVE TRAINING SCHOOL COURSE was conducted by the Publication Society, in cooperation with the committee on religious education of the Minnesota State Convention, at Bethel Institute, St. Paul, Feb. 5-7. Rev. A. J. Hanson, state director of religious education, acted as dean, assisted by Dr. Thomas S. Young, director of church vacation and week-day schools for the publication society; Rev. C. S. Osborne of Churdon, Iowa; Rev. E. Weisle, director of religious education in North Dakota; Rev. W. E. Woodbury, Rev. M. F. Sanborn and Rev. J. J. Runyan of Minneapolis; Rev. E. A. Vallant of St. Paul; and Rev. G. E. Wallendorf, state Sunday-school missionary. Special emphasis was given to the opportunities of religious education; the lack of devotional and spiritual atmosphere in the Sunday schools and vacation Bible schools, and how to remedy this. Practical and theoretic instruction was given on how to plan, organize and operate successfully a church vacation or daily vacation school.

IOWA
FIRST CHURCH OF SIOUX CITY, Lewis Jacobsen, pastor, has completed six months of progress, during which time ninety-two members have been received, forty-nine by baptism. The Billy Sunday meetings of early fall have influenced everything in the church. The Wednesday night services have maintained an average attendance of 200, and on some occasions 300 have been present. The meetings begin with a fellowship supper, followed by a prayer and devotional service. Simultaneously with the prayer meeting, a service for children under eight and another for members of the junior choir is conducted. On its total pledge of $50,000 to the New World Movement, the church has already paid over $19,000. In addition the church maintains two missions under the direction of Rev. J. L. Pickett. The church built a new chapel for one mission last year and recently purchased a site for a building for the other. The Sunday night services are more largely attended than ever before.

The spirit of cooperation is shown by the fact that on one Sunday afternoon canvassing teams secured pledges of over $10,000 on a total budget of $12,000 for local expenses the coming year. An assistant to the pastor has been secured. The Young People's Society and the Sunday school are undertaking large programs of advance.

INDIANA
REV. WILSON WHITNEY died at his home in Bedford, Jan. 18, at the age of seventy-six. He was graduated from Chicago University in 1871—the class of which Dr. H. C. Mabie was a member. He was married to Mary Aphia Goodell, of Washburn, Ill., the same year, and ordained to the gospel ministry the following September. He held pastorates at Rockton, Carbon-dale, Joliet and Messiah Church, Chicago, Ill.; Osage, Iowa; twice at Mankato, Minn.; Adrian and Rochester, Mich.; and Goshen, Bedford and Martinsville, Ind. He was superintendent of state mission work in Minnesota for three years. Brother Whitney was a preacher of unusual ability, a fine pastor and organizer, a true man of God. The widow, one son, Harry A., and one daughter, Mrs. H. I. Howe, survive. The service was largely attended. It was held in First Church Sunday afternoon, Jan. 22, the sermon being preached by the pastor, Rev. O. A. Cook, assisted by the pastors of other local churches.

OHIO
THE FIRST CHURCH, Ashtabula, Rev. Herman Lang, pastor, is experiencing a great revival. To date there have been eighty-five decisions, a dozen of whom are of young men between eighteen and thirty. Almost every service sees conversions. Nineteen have been baptized, and it seems likely that this number will be increased to forty or fifty. Mr. W. S. Dixon, of Wheaton, Ill., singing evangelist, has been assisting the pastor who has done the preaching. The church has been getting ready for months and is wonderfully organized for work. It has the confident expectation that by Easter Sunday there will have been at least 100 decisions.

DR. H. F. STILWELL was with Second Church, Toledo, on Feb. 12. There were about thirty professions of faith during the day. Especially fine results in Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. Dr. B. Abell is Sunday-school superintendent. This church now has the largest B. Y. P. U. in northwestern Ohio with attendance of seventy-five to 100 every Sunday evening. F. N. Davis is the president.

REV. R. BRUCE SMITH, OF FIRST CHURCH, Springfield, assisted by Rev. O. E. Hall, pastor, conducted revival services at Summit Street Church, Dayton, Jan. 26-Feb. 6, following a prayer campaign begun by the church two weeks previous. The most inspiring feature of the revival was the great number of young people who gave their hearts to God and consecrated their lives to his cause. In every sense of the term the revival was a success, leading to marvelous fruitage along spiritual lines.

Piqua Church extended an invitation to the churches of the Dayton Association to sit in council on Monday Feb. 20, to consider the propriety of ordaining Mr. Harry C. Ashley to the full work of the gospel ministry. Mr. Ashley is now a ministerial student in Chicago and will soon complete his course. Preceding the ordination service there was scheduled a New World Conference. Rev. Franklin Fenner, pastor, received more than thirty new members on Feb. 5 at the evening observance of the Lord's Supper. Large audiences gather. Mr. Fenner has been with the Piqua Church three months.

UNDER REV. THOMAS LASLEY, who began his pastorate Nov. 1, Second Church of Newark, is growing. A revival meeting held in January, resulted in a good increase in membership and much encouragement to the church. Jan. 29 seventeen were baptized, and the hand of fellowship given to twenty-six. Adult classes for women and for men have been started. Interest and enthusiasm in all lines of work is increasing.

ILLINOIS
THE WOMAN'S BAPTIST MISSION UNION met at the Woodlawn Church, Feb. 14, with a full and very interesting program. The forenoon was devoted to the Continuation Campaign. Mrs. John Nuveen, Mrs. George W. Taft, Mrs. W. P. Topping and Mrs. E. S. Osgood gave short talks on Woman's Responsibility. The alumnae of the Training School and Missionaries were guests of the day, receiving favors from the reception committee. Dr. Lathan A. Crandall gave a clear and delightful address in the afternoon on Lincoln, and Mrs. Smith T. Ford followed with an address on the New Emancipation of the Negro. The Spiritual Singers from the Olivet Church closed the day by singing several selections.—Mrs. CARL D. CASE, Sec'y.

THE FIVE EVANGELICAL CHURCHES of Carlville united in a series of special meetings January 23-27, for the deepening of the spiritual life of the community, with Rev. T. Harley Marsh, pastor of First Church of Decatur conducting them. On account of its large auditorium, the meetings January 23-27, for the deepening Church building. The meetings were re-

Since 1920 the Lakeport church has been one of the important churches. Mr. Lomax has labored with tireless energy and his departure from the state is regretted.

THE ANNUAL ROLL CALL was held by the Claremont Church Feb. 8 with a large attendance. After the supper and roll call exercises those present repaired to the audience room of the church and listened to a stereopticon lecture by Secy. D. S. Jenks on the work of Northern Baptists in the foreign field supplemented with slides on work in New Hampshire. The Claremont Church believes in the New World Movement and is progressing under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. W. A. Paige.

Thank Offering Call

The annual thank offering of the Free Baptist Women's Missionary Society will be observed as usual in the month of May. Send orders for supplies for this service to the treasurer, Miss Edna A. Folsom, 8 Pleasant Ave., Sanford.

As the nations of the world are today engaged in seeking a common ground of understanding, and selfish interests are being subordinated to a real desire to work in harmony for the common good, let us thoughtfully and seriously seek to discover in the present trend of affairs, every reason for thankfulness in the promise of better things that the future holds.

MASSACHUSETTS

AFTER A SHORT STAY AT BERMUDA, Rev. Arthur T. Brooks, pastor of the Dudley Street Church, is back in his pulpit, carrying on the work in full swing. Great congregations pack the large auditorium every Sunday evening. The largest budget ever assumed by the church was adopted at the annual meeting a few weeks ago, at which time the pastor was also agreeably surprised by an increase in salary to $6,000.

CONNECTICUT

FIRST CHURCH OF SHELTON, Rev. N. B. Prindle, pastor, led by the Rev. F. H. Divine has finished a financial campaign to raise $25,000 with which to enlarge the church building and provide adequate equipment for its growing work. The successful performance of such a task was deemed practically impossible by some of the members of the church and by almost every one outside, but under the inspiring and wise leadership of Brother Divine the church went "over the top" on Sunday, Feb. 12, with a subscription of $25,482. The finest feature of the campaign and its results was the great spiritual uplift which has come to the church through an increased vision of fellowship with Jesus Christ, and a blessed consciousness of partnership with him.

NEW JERSEY

IN FIRST CHURCH BAYONNE, C. H. Radnells, pastor, the work continues to prosper constructively. The men's club recently entertained the men's clubs of other churches of the city at which time the Hon. Dean Marie C. Lyle

The most important action of the Board of Trustees at their mid-winter meeting, January 31, was the election of Marie C. Lyle as dean of Keuka College. Dean Lyle is a scholar of recognized ability and an educator of successful experience. She brings to her important office the qualities of mind and heart which insure her success. Dean Lyle received her training in the University of Minnesota. She has taught in Stout Institute, Shorter College, and in the University of Minnesota. The students and faculty heartily welcome her as dean. Keuka College is to conduct a summer school beginning June 29. In August the Baptist Pastor Conference will be held. This conference makes it possible for pastors and their families to enjoy a real vacation on the shores of a beautiful lake at a minimum cost.

WEST VIRGINIA

FEB. 12, REV. CHAS. F. GRIFFIN began his third year as pastor of Twentieth Street Church, Huntington. During this period 174 persons have united with the church, ninety-eight by baptism. Missions have been cared for in a larger way than ever before; until this last year $4,648 was given for all benevolences. The Bible school has an attendance of nearly 500. The men's class, taught by the pastor, averaged 89 for 1921, and for the first seven Sundays of this year, 114. The evangelistic note is constantly sounded and the invitation given at almost every service. Jan. 18—Feb. 5 meetings were held in which the pastor was assisted by Dr. W. J. Cambron of Ft. Thomas, Ky. The church was revived and strengthened. Thirty-six have been baptized as a result of the meetings and fifteen await the ordinance. A unanimous invitation was extended to Dr. Cambron for a return engagement.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE FIRST CHURCH, MONONGAHELA, Rev. A. M. Gregg, pastor, on Sunday, Feb. 5, recorded the largest attendance at the communion service in a history of fifty years. Forty-four new members were received. Pastor and Mrs. A. M. Gregg kept open house to the members of the congregation, Jan. 27, in the new ten-room parsonage.

PARK CHURCH, MCKEESPORT, Rev. W. R. Hill, pastor, held its first baptismal service in the new church recently when six were baptized. Pastor and people are working on a five-point objective to be reached by Easter, which includes: Fifty new members; 50 per cent increase in prayer meeting attendance; every member at church services; 20 per cent of members in Stewardship League; quota for New World Movement raised.

ENROLMENT 197—ATTENDANCE 202 was the record of the Bellevue Sunday school on February 5th. The school has outgrown the present building and is making imperative the need for a new church edifice.

THE FIRST CHURCH, MCKEESPORT, Rev. J. S. Braker, has voted to observe February as stewardship month. A personal campaign was launched Sunday, Feb. 5, to secure a 100 per cent increase in proportionate tithe and storehouse gifts. The church already has a large stewardship league.

- (a) A state laymen's council;
- (b) An associational or district council;
- (c) A city council in each of the larger cities;
- (d) A church council in each church; all to be in numbers adequate to meet the particular situation, and all to be composed of men who will consider themselves under bond as volunteers to cooperate with the other groups and organizations to put the whole program over to a successful termination by April 30.

It should be understood that our work should be by MEN with MEN and for MEN, REAL, RED-BLOODED MEN IN DEAD EARNEST, undertaking to do a man's part in a big man's job. They should seek by every way known to men in the successful presentation of big tasks in business, politics or civic enterprises, to present the call of our present denominational situation so as to enlist the intelligent, enthusiastic, devoted and sacrificial response of every man in every church in every state within the bounds of the Northern Baptist Convention. The added element that in this effort we are seeking to be co-laborers together with God in the carrying on of the purposes and plans as set forth in his marching order to his people in the great commission, should constitute the supreme motive and appeal to us that we acquit ourselves as men, to the glory of God in this the day of our opportunity. We should also remember in the doing of this that we are the very agents or stewards of God and that "it is required in a steward that a man be found faithful."

He told how the nurses often run completely out of towels and vaseline and bandages, and showed how for 25 cents any boy present could supply one of those needs. But did my owner give me up? No, sir! He went and bought some flowers for some silly girl..... I nearly died with disappointment."

The third quarter had been sighing noisily for some time, and now broke in: "We certainly are close quarters, aren't we? I think it's really very strange when we have such a Christian motto stamped right on our faces—'In God We Trust.' You'd think our owners would be constantly reminded how very safe and pleasant it is to live in a land where there are churches on every other corner, and hospitals four blocks away, and plenty of ministers, doctors and nurses to keep soul and body comfortable. You'd think that those Young Reserves could never look a quarter in the face without realizing that it's pretty wonderful to live in a land where even the money can say to all the world 'In God We Trust.'"

The fourth quarter has been silent all this time: "I wish it said on us 'With God We Share.' Think what a reminder that would be to a boy like this fellow here, young Bob Spencer, who has just received us for a birthday present. Perhaps it would make him see that getting something with your money isn't nearly as much fun as doing something with your money. Perhaps then he'd share us. I've heard that those Young Reserves are all quite stirred up over something called a Continuation Campaign. Perhaps Bob will—"

"Don't count on it!" groaned the third quarter, "You forget there are marbles

Deagan
Tubular Tower Chimes
Electrically Operated

I have heard sweet
Chimes a-ringing,
Down the lanes of ivory,
Heard them calling,
Heard them singing
In the days that used to be
But the sweetest, purest,
Clearer,
Bringing angel faces nearest,
Making life divinest,
Dearest,
Are the Old Church
Chimes to me.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

Bob glared at them from his pillow and was about to say something very squelching indeed about such undeserved criticism when suddenly his mother hurried in! "Bob Spencer, get up this minute! I called you a long while ago—wake up, dear, it's morning!"

Bob rolled over in bed and stared at the carpet in surprise. Not a quarter lay there! "Mother," he cried cheerfully, "When is a dream not a dream?"

"I don't know," she laughed. "When?" "When it comes true, of course!" he answered.

Whereupon the quarters winked merrily at each other. "He means business!" they whispered. And even the most melancholy of them began to shine up the marvellous motto: "In God We Trust."

Our Book Shelf

An Introduction to the History of Christianity from 590 to 1314 A. D. by F. J. Foakes Jackson, Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, and professor of Christian Institutions in Union Theological Seminary, New York. New York: Macmillan Company.

An octave volume of nearly 400 pages. Of the scholarship and ability of the author little need be said. He needs no introduction to the Christian student. The volume is an attempt at the impossible, giving the story of Christianity through the dark ages, presenting facts out of musty records of legends, superstitions and semi-pagan conditions of the church through those times of ignorance and barbarism. We demur to the title of the volume after reading many of its pages; it is not the history of Christianity but of the papacy with its endless schemes for foisting on receptive ages its traditions, legends and fictions for the divine religion. The author's story of the beginnings of monasticism, the idle controversies on speculative theology, the struggle between pope and emperor, the development of friarism, monasteries and convents is most interesting. While the volume is interesting to any lay reader of history, still it is the logical book of the student and scholar. It is well named "Introduction," for it is too limited for a history of the dark ages in their relation to organized Christianity in Europe.

Assurance of Salvation and other Evangelistic Addresses, by J. W. Porter. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company.

We mark the contents are called addresses, not sermons, and properly so; for if we accept the common definition of a sermon these are not sermons, but they are exceedingly appropriate messages in evangelistic campaigns. They are common-sense, devotional, spiritual, Biblical, most pertinent to the times, and are brief. They are free from extravagances and distortions, and not wanting in pithy epigrams and pointed phrases. With the strong personality of the author behind them we readily appreciate their effectiveness. A few of the subjects discussed are assurance, sanctification, destroying foundations, individual evangelism (personal work).

The Wanderings of a Spiritualist, by Arthur Conan Doyle. New York: George H. Doran Company.

The book could easily be separated into two parts. The travels and observations of Doyle in Australia and his expositions of spiritualism, though the two contents are constantly woven together with only the mark of a paragraph between them. The author is at his best in the readability and fascination of this work. He is a zealous spiritualist, constantly holding converse with the dwellers of the ghost-world. He has a cordial lovelessness toward evangelical Christianity and toward materialism. He likes Unitarianism quite well. He sets Sherlock Holmes to describe St. Paul a la mode. His observations of world conditions are very interesting. After reading the volume without weariness, we recommend Conan Doyle's spiritualism as about the least insane of the books on that subject.

Teaching the Teacher, Philadelphia: The Westminster Press. Paper 60 cents, cloth 85 cents.

A first book in teacher training. Old Testament history is given by Dr. James O. Boyd; New Testament history and the life of Christ, by Dr. John G. Machen; An Introduction to the Study of the Mind by Walter S. Athearn; and the Church as a teaching institution by Dr. Harold McA. Robinson. The teacher who will master this book will have made a good start toward being able to do some intelligent teaching. He will have a general grasp of the subject matter and some knowledge of the pupil and of the institution which is introducing the Bible to him.

"It Is to Laugh"

Mrs. Gunn to Rev. Mr. Gunn, who is going to preach a funeral: "Now, John, don't stand with your bare head on the damp ground."—B. Y. P. U. News.

"I was driving along a rough country road the other day," said Lloyd George during an electioneering tour, "and at the foot of a steep hill I saw the signboard 'Please slacken the reins going up the hill.' While reading this it occurred to me that it might be well for people generally to be as kind and considerate in their treatment of their minister as they are of their horses, especially when the load is heavy and the road is steep."

There was a burst of applause from the audience, which appreciated the point of the premier's illustration, but the inevitable wag was present and he piped up, "Why not try a flivver, George?"—Boston Transcript.

The word vitamin, according to the colyumist of the Glasgow, Montana Democrat, is pronounced vit like fit, a like the middle one in Arkansas, and min like Min, a girl's name. The accent is on the vit. It is a thing that is found in food like calories only much more fatal if they ain't any. . . . If a fellow goes and eats say eggs, cheese, whole wheat, lean meat, spinach, and lettuce, he has got hisself well fixed with vitamins and need have no fear. Vitamins are not so expensive as calories was when we was eating them on account of the war but vitamins command fairly respectable prices.

A little girl who had mastered her catechism confessed herself disappointed. "Because," she said, "though I obey the fifth commandment and honor my papa and mamma, yet my days are not a bit longer in the land, because I am put to bed at seven."

ORGAN AS ADVERTISEMENT

If there is a better, cleaner, more up-to-date and more effective way to advertise a city than to have a large organ owned by the municipality we should like to know about it—and so would St. Paul, Minn. The fame of that beautiful city in the northwest is being enhanced daily by the fact that it possesses this splendid instrument and that it has an able city organist in Mr. Goldthwaite. From every source the newspapers and city officials of St. Paul are receiving evidence of the appreciation of their own citizens for the organ, and of the drawing power of the recitals which bring people from many outside points to hear the performances. Just one instance:

An extract from the bulletin issued by the credit men of Grand Forks, N. D., calls the membership's attention to the fact that when they visit St. Paul they should not fail to hear the organ. It says: "Forkers going to St. Paul should remember that one of the largest and best pipe organs of the country has been installed in the St. Paul Auditorium, where concerts are given every day between 12 o'clock (noon) and 12:45. In connection with the installation of this organ, St. Paul seems to have scored over Minneapolis. The organ was purchased by popular subscription at a cost of about $60,000. That sort of thing advertises a city and helps its growth materially."

St. Paul has been a prosperous city for many years, but too many people have looked upon it—mistakenly, of course—as merely a great junction point—a place where you change cars and where Jim Hill, the railroad builder, lived. This is very much as they have looked upon Chicago as a great packing-house and railroad center, not knowing anything about its other advantages, especially in music. The new organ seems to have awakened the country roundabout to the fact that St. Paul has an earnest love for the best in music and is willing to spend its money to get it.

This is not an isolated example. Portland, Maine, has found its organ a great advertisement for the city and an attraction to visitors. Salt Lake City today is famous for its organ more perhaps than for anything else.

But an organ is not enough. It requires a capable organist and a policy which makes the best use of the resources provided. In Portland, Ore., we have the other side of the picture. When the fine city organ there was installed a few years ago it was expected that much would be made of it. Instead there has been little use of the instrument—and then only secondary to some other attractions—and a silly policy has been adopted under which nothing but the most popular of all popular music is permitted to be performed. No desire is evinced to hear great visiting organists and recently when Bonnet passed through Portland he had to be heard in a church instead of on the city's large and adequate organ—a sad commentary on the way things are managed in the splendid municipality on the Columbia River.—The Diapason.

During the past few years the art-form known as "pianologue," or technically, "melodrama," or, in every-day English, "readings-to-music," has become increasingly popular. The progressive Chicago publisher noted above has done much to further this popularity and use by issuing some of the best numbers available in this form. The long and fine list of copyright publications from the Summy press includes works by such successful writers as the composer listed above, Natalie Whitted Price, Katherine S. Hazard, Jessie L. Gaynor, Phyllis Fergus, Vera Brady Shipman, Violet Mills, Frieda Peycke, and many others. One of the most individual and refined workers in this exacting field is Mrs. Williams. Her great vogue as a concert artist has undoubtedly assisted her own works in achieving such a wide distribution and appreciation; but much credit must also be given to the intrinsic value of the pieces themselves, the clever texts chosen, and the adroit manner in which the points of the words are reflected in the music. In the seven titles listed above will be found grave and gay, serious and frivolous; but all are golden manna for the gifted person who can adequately present the salient points of a good text to a background of appropriate music. Various poets are represented, Lieut. Colonel John McCrae, Edmund Vance Cooke, and the clever composer herself. The music is easy to play, the sentiments expressed are such as will appeal to any audience, the union of words and music is perfect. This group of readings should give much pleasure.

From this quality publisher come the above four numbers, issued for two-part chorus of women's voices, the last number also put out for mixed voices. All will make ideal material for the chorus or choir planning a secular concert or festival; they can also be used for duets, if desired. The first mentioned is a poetic setting of the fine poem by Isabella Crawford. "Clouds" is a march-like fantasy of instant melodic appeal, halted for a while in the middle by a colorful intermezzo of a pastoral nature. The third title is a setting of a lovely old German lullaby, offering unusual vocal opportunities to sympathetic voices. "In the Meadow" is a lively waltz movement, fresh in its lilt, and catching in its melody. All are quite easy, the chances for good, legitimate choral effects are numerous; they are equally fitted for church concert, school use, or for relief numbers between heavier selections on the choral society programs. The printing and general set-up of the choruses are unusually good.

Thank God You Can Give

THESE WORDS on a brilliantly lighted Billboard on Broadway catch your eye and follow you. They make the Sermon of the Billboard. The sign tells the need of subscription for relief work. But the pith is in the sentence

Thank God You Can Give

Have we thought to do that? We thank God for His "benefits toward us," His care and love. Do we ever think to thank Him for our ability and opportunity to give? How that point of view would change things! No more Church Treasurers dreading to plead for unpaid pledges. No more Pastors trying to work up interest in giving. No more Emergencies for Northern Baptists.

Thank God You Can Give

Some Japanese Petitions to God

"O God, help us not to be selfish. Give us strength to love all men, whatever their position, and all peoples, whatever their nation. May we love others as ourselves, even as Jesus commanded."

"Our Father, keep us from pride. Help us to realize the dignity and the value of every human soul. Keep us from judging men by their usefulness to ourselves."

"Beloved Heavenly Father, help our dear Japan to grow into the ideal of service. Help our country to do something great for the world and to love righteousness more than power."

"O God, help us to rise above the level of mere justice in our dealings with men. Help us to live by love and to gladly do for men more than they ask, and more than justice requires. As the owner of the vineyard gave the late-comers to the field more than they expected, help us to do more for people than they expect and more than our obligations require."

"Father in Heaven, bring wars to an end. Help us to love even our enemies, and help us to conquer hate and suspicion that eternal peace may come quickly."

(Jotted down at random from prayers made by Japanese young men in the prayer meeting held each Sunday after the Bible Class in a missionary's home. These are free translations, but preserve the meaning.)

Fresh from the Field

On Friday evening, Feb. 17, the debating teams of Colby College won a double victory over the University of Maine in a dual debate on the question, "Resolved: That the principle of the closed shop is for the best interests of the American people." Colby defended the affirmative at Waterville and the negative at Orono, securing favorable decisions in both cases. The Colby debaters are to meet teams from New Hampshire State College, Clark College, and Ripon College, at Waterville early in March. Later they are to make a 3,000 mile trip through the Middle West and South, debating at Antioch College, Western Reserve University, Kalamazoo College, Notre Dame College, Ripon College, Hedding College, Simpson College, Berea College, William and Mary College, and Blue Ridge College. Intercollegiate debating has held an important position at Colby for a number of years, but this is the most extensive program yet undertaken.

Rev. James Francis Goodman, formerly pastor of the Scotten Avenue Church, Detroit, has been called to the pastorate of the First Church (Federated), Brighton, Mich., and will begin his pastorate there March 1.

In pursuance of the findings of a regularly called council held in the Piqua, Ohio, Church, on Feb. 20, Mr. Harry S. Ashley, a member of the church at present in training at the Moody Institute, Chicago, was ordained to the gospel ministry on that same day. Rev. Henry Brandt was moderator of the council and Rev. O. E. Miller, clerk. The sermon was preached by Rev. F. F. Finner, the ordaining prayer given by Dr. U. M. McGuire and the charge to the candidate by Rev. M. F. Bagby.

A telegram received just as we go to press from Dr. W. B. Riley, pastor of the First Church, Minneapolis, reads: "Our ten-days' financial campaign led by the matchless Dr. S. H. Divine, of Brooklyn, N. Y., reached $355,000 tonight. Still going. This insures our great temple, the sixth building for the church and Northwestern Bible School. Rejoice with us."

Mr. Emery B. Gibbs, a member of the Brookline, Mass., Church and long notable in Baptist circles in Massachusetts died on Feb. 9 at the age of sixty. Funeral services were held on Feb. 11, conducted by his long-time friend, Dr. Geo. E. Horr, of Newton. Mrs. Gibbs died about two years ago. Two daughters survive.

By unanimous action of the Sunday-school Council of Evangelical Denominations, representing more than thirty communions, and of the executive committee of the International S. S. Association, representing more than sixty state, provincial and national auxiliary units, these two bodies have consummated the unification of their forces with a common program, personnel and objectives. This action was taken at Chicago in the annual winter meetings of these bodies held respectively on Feb. 15 and 16. The new name will be the International Sunday-school Council of Religious Education.

All contributions made by Long Island women to the Continuation Campaign, are to be regarded as a memorial to Mrs. Robert B. Montgomery, who died last winter after serving for many years as the head of the foreign mission work of the Long Island Board. This decision was reached at a meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, The Woman's Foreign Mission Society of Long Island and the Woman's Auxiliary to the Church Extension Society, held on Feb. 7 in Emmanuel Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. A service conducted by Mrs. G. H. Estey, was held in memory of Mrs. Montgomery and brief tributes were paid to her splendid character and work by Miss Mary Chapman, Mrs. R. J. White, and Mrs. Cornelius Woelfkin. A solo was sung by Mrs. Bessie Bowman Estey. Other speakers of the afternoon were Mrs. J. S. Comstock, Mrs. A. C. Hale, and the Rev. Mr. Stanley, director of religious instruction in the Metropolitan District.

During the fifteen months that Dr. Arthur S. Phelps acted as pulpit supply at the First Church, San Francisco, 125 new members were received.

Professor Henry A. Yeomans, in his report as dean of Harvard College, covering the academic year 1920-1921, says the students of his college are more mature, more responsible and more sensible of their obligations to the community than were the undergraduates of one or two decades ago. "They take a keener interest in the problems of the general community," says the report, "and react more sharply to its feelings and opinions. The use of alcoholic liquors, for instance, illustrates this tendency. Fewer students drink alcoholic liquors and fewer students drink to excess than ever before."

Rev. E. R. Hermiston, in charge of the Chapel Car "Grace," reports that the church at Chowchilla, Cal., was left in charge of Dr. Wm. Mathews and that he is having good success. At the first communion fifty-four were present and fifteen new members have since been baptized. More than 100 are enrolled in the Bible school and there is a full attendance at all church services. In chapel car meeting at Del Rey, Cal., there were fifteen converts and $1,500 was raised towards a pastor's salary. A union Baptist Sunday school, with fifty members was organized at Maloya.

Dr. Frederick W. Norwood, pastor of the City Temple, London, is to be in the United States during the spring and early summer. In May and for the first two Sundays of June he will supply the pulpit of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, in exchange with Dr. Chas. E. Jefferson. Already other engagements at state conferences and individual churches have been made lasting until the middle of July. Dr. Norwood is a native of Australia where in three pastorates before the war, during which he served as chaplain, he made a deep impression.

The Woman's Baptist Mission Union will meet at the Tabernacle Church, Chicago, on March 14. Pastor's Day will be observed. In the morning at 11 there will be four-minute speeches by Dr. Ross, Dr. Hoyt, Dr. Case and Mr. Jones. In the afternoon at 3:15 there will be singing by a quartette from the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, and an address by Dr. Sumner R. Vinton. Luncheon will be served at noon. Pastors and their wives will be the guests of the Union for the day.

There's No Secret Formula

"Have just finished a five-weeks' campaign on THE BAPTIST led by a committee of six persons. Have attained the goal of 10 per cent of the membership and an increase of 356 per cent in the number of copies of THE BAPTIST coming to our church. Had a fine celebration of the seventieth anniversary of the church. This is from a letter from the pastor, Rev. W. S. Stewart, La Crosse, Wis. Again let us say that there is no secret formula for securing large subscription results. Just a good business plan backed by good business methods. The results follow.

Killam's Kollum

Young Baptists To The Front

THE BAPTIST, through a working arrangement with the general organization of the B. Y. P. U. of A., is devoting two pages each week to the special work of Baptist young people. The young folks appreciate this recognition of their important work and are making a convention-wide effort to increase the circulation and reading of their denominational newspaper. The week of March 19-26 has been set aside for a drive for new subscriptions. The pastors will welcome the opportunity to back up the young folks in a work which will be helpful to the whole church. During the week March 19-26 they are going after 4,000 new annual subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. This looks like a big task until you see the distribution by states. See opposite page.

There's No Secret Formula

"The church at Granville, Ohio, recently conducted a campaign for subscribers to the denominational periodicals. The result is there now come to the homes of the church and congregation seventy-four copies of Missions, eighty-six of the Ohio Baptist, eighty-four of THE BAPTIST and twenty-seven of the Watchman-Examiner. This was the most thorough literature canvass the church ever had."—H. T. Houf. There's no secret formula. Any good plan backed by good business methods brings results every time.

Watch Elgin

This is not an ad for watches. Elgin produces other worth-while products. The First Church, Elgin, Ill., has been sending in fine lists for THE BAPTIST. The number has reached seventy, of which thirty-five are new.

There's No Secret Formula

Rev. A. V. Allen, director of religious education in Detroit, has accepted the repeated calls of the Jefferson Ave. Church in that city. He proposes to have a church which is alive to the Kingdom interests. In a letter just received he says: "A week ago last Sunday I preached on 'Denominational Periodicals' and have sent in nearly forty combination subscriptions to THE BAPTIST, the Michigan Baptist and Missions. This is only a beginning. We have set certain definite goals, etc." A similar result can be attained on any field where there is the same kind of leadership and definite planning.

Can We Win the Campaign?

We say:
It is too hard for us to do at this time.

GOD says:
"Behold I am the Lord. Is there anything too hard for me?" Jer. 32:27.

We say:
We have done our part by our own church, and that ought to be enough.

GOD says:
"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every living creature." Mark 16:15.

We say:
It simply cannot be done by April 30.

GOD says:
"And nothing shall be impossible to you." Matt. 17:20.

We say:
There aren't enough members in our church to do much.

GOD says:
"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 18:20.

We say:
We shall fail.

GOD says:
"There hath not failed one word of all his good promises." 1. Kings 8:56.

We say:
We have done our part.

GOD says:
"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Matt. 7:2.

We say:
We are a weak church.

GOD says:
"The Lord God in the midst of thee is mighty." Zeph. 3:17.

We say:
We cannot afford to give more.

GOD says:
"Take no thought saying, What shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed? For your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness." Matt. 6:31-33.

We say:
We don't know how to go about this campaign.

GOD says:
"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God." James 1:5.

We say:
We are afraid that it can't be done.

GOD says:
"Why are ye fearful, oh ye of little faith?" Matt. 8:26.

We say:
Only a miracle could bring success to this campaign.

GOD says:
"Ah, Lord, God, there is nothing too wonderful for thee." Jer. 32:17.

We say:
God with us, WE ARE GOING TO WIN.

GOD says:
"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28:20.

The Pageant of the Red Cross

The pageants presented in connection with the centenary celebration have now expanded into the great pageants with which the American Red Cross has been visualizing humanitarian work and Red Cross operations.

The first production of the Pageant of the Red Cross, put on at the National Red Cross Convention at Columbus, last fall, is now for the first time reproduced on the same large scale and with the same spectacular effects at Des Moines, Iowa, March 7-11. This is said to be the largest production of its kind ever put on west of the Mississippi.

Three thousand persons are now in training for this great event, under the supervision of the author of the pageant, Mrs. Ruth Mougey Worrell, and under the management of Mr. H. B. Dickson, both of whose names are familiar to readers of "THE BAPTIST" in connection with their productions of the centenary pageants.

Red Cross leaders from communities throughout the central west and the north-western states, forming central division of the American Red Cross, are planning to go in large numbers to see the pageant and take part in the division conference held at the same place, March 7-8. A total attendance of 20,000 is expected at these events. The program of the conference will concentrate attention for two days, March 7-8, on the soldier, health and junior programs that are confronting several thousand communities in these states.

Among the prominent speakers on the program of the conference are Mr. W. Frank Persons, national officer of the Red Cross, in charge of domestic operations, Dr. Richard Bolt, president of the American Child Hygiene Association, and leading officers of the American Legion and managers of the Veterans Bureau, as well as national heads of the Junior Red Cross, who will discuss other Red Cross services.

The pageant will present, in the huge coliseum at Des Moines, in a dramatic and spectacular way, the history and development of Red Cross work and vision for the future. Twenty-five hundred uniformed and costumed participants will be accompanied by a trained chorus of 500 voices and a band or orchestra of more than fifty pieces.

A trench battle scene will be reproduced by army regulars from Fort Des Moines and National Guard soldiers in the World War, and a large group of veterans, maimed, blind, crippled, gassed or shell-shocked, some from the Veterans Bureau Rehabilitation Schools, and seventy-five nurses, who were in the midst of the war overseas, will show the Red Cross following up the action.

Gov. N. E. Kendall, of Iowa, and his official staff, and other notable persons and actors will have prominent parts in the spectacle. From fifty to 200 people are being trained for each of the five scenes, depicting the nursing, health, soldier service, home service and junior Red Cross programs of the Red Cross, and for the groups in the historical presentations of humanitarian development through the ages, from the Good Samaritan to the Red Cross of today.

Thirty Babies Dead in One Hour

An American who had recently visited Russia brought back the following report:

Thousands of people almost naked, covered with vermin and starving to death, were staggering into the relief stations. An emaciated mother was standing in line with a tin cup for some soup; she was holding in her arms a shrunken baby, and was so intent on getting some food for herself and baby, that she did not notice her baby had died in her arms. This was the thirtieth baby that had died there inside of an hour.

The present famine in Russia has well been described as one of the most terrible calamities the world has ever known. Millions of men, women and children are starving to death.

Larger gifts will make available correspondingly larger quantities of food.

Immediate help is necessary. A delay of a week or even a day may cost many lives. The Foreign Mission Society is prepared to receive contributions for relief in Russia. Funds will be expended through and with the approval of the American Relief Administration, Herbert Hoover, Chairman.

The Baptist

What Is the Matter with the Association?

IN our Baptist system the Association has in the past occupied an important place. Free and independent local churches are subject to a law of gravitation which brings them into touch with other churches of like faith and order. So long as men have a social nature and as churches wish to do for their Lord the best possible work, this is bound to be so. There must be places where problems common to all the churches and ambitions which all share can be discussed and promoted. The Association is the next logical step beyond the local church and stands between it and the state organization. If it is strong, strength goes out from it both to the churches and to the state convention; if it is weak, its weakness is in turn passed along.

In the old days the Associations were largely attended. And in rural districts two or three days of the finest kind of fellowship were passed together by men and women who were more than willing to give their time and thought in the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. More recently, as reports from all sections of the country show, Associational meetings have in many cases lost their punch. The pastors will be found present at them, but an increasing number of such pastors is present merely for discussions or sessions in which they have particular interest. The religious "rounders," that is, those people who no longer have part in the active affairs of life and who enjoy participation in religious meetings, are always to be found in great numbers. But except where there are special meetings for them, the young people are conspicuous for their absence and there is year by year a diminishing attendance on the part of busy men and women of affairs who feel that they cannot afford the time demanded by affairs of this kind.

Letters which have come to this office in considerable numbers make it apparent that there is a good deal of feeling that something should be done. In isolated spots, new methods are actually being tried out. But a diligent search has shown as yet few workable plans for vitalizing the Association. Everybody wants to know what the other fellow is doing, but few have anything on their own account to tell the other fellow. It is for this reason that THE BAPTIST has gathered for this number from many sources some concrete suggestions. Whenever in our body an Association achieves a new and successful method, the rest of the brethren should be promptly informed.

An Association is likely to be, outside the local church itself, the most homogeneous body we have. It has more common interests than any larger body can possibly know. If its people get to talking of what they have been thinking and feeling there will be remarkable unity. For that very reason the sessions should not be used in that kind of talk but spent rather in a consideration of what can be done on the basis of this common life. Associations are succeeding best at the present time where the sessions are planned to give the working forces of the church special help along their particular practical lines of work. That is to say where the Association gives itself to the consideration of Christian service and the training for such service, there is to be found increasing interest.

Dr. Agar suggests that the time should be taken with conferences rather than addresses. People hear preaching constantly at home; what they wish, when experts gather, is a chance to talk back and to thresh through the problems by which they have hitherto been stumped. He suggests that in connection with each session there should be also periods of intercession and devotional study of the Bible. This is equally important. The great functions of Associational meetings are to inspire and instruct. These two ends will be attained as men prayerfully study the Word and then consider how they are going in their churches to make that Word a living force in the life of men. To have the devotional and inspirational sessions without the practical discussions would be to fail; but to have the practical sessions without the life which will come from the other is to invite disaster. A blending of the two is needful.

Why should we expect in our present busy life that people will remain for all the meetings of an Association? What reason is there why one session should not be specifically planned for one group and another session for another group so that all the interests of the church shall be included and that the workers who come can conserve both their time and their energy? Instead of expressing sorrow that people leave early why not encourage that very thing by filling the house with the new groups to which the fresh discussions are of concern. It would not then be found true so frequently that attendance at the many meetings is a weariness to the flesh and there is no profit in them.

This matter of the meetings of the Association is vital. Under efficient organization all along the line, the Baptist body can function as it should. But if there is weakness in any spot, that weakness is certain to be passed along and will affect all church and denominational activities. We owe it to our Lord to give our best thought to the revitalizing of the Association. If the brethren have additional suggestions of practical programs, THE BAPTIST will gladly pass them on.

Editorial Comment

SEATTLE WAS READY

It has come to the notice of some of the brethren in Seattle that an opinion exists in some communities that the reason the Northern Baptist Convention meeting was changed from Seattle to Indianapolis was that the brethren in Seattle were not ready for it. It is very difficult to understand how such untrue ideas originate, or why they should be entertained in spite of information as to the real reasons for a change.

The brethren in Seattle have been enthusiastic, and the release of their claim upon the Convention meeting was reluctantly given. They were amply able to entertain the Convention, and were busily engaged in preparing for its meeting. It required great courage on their part to express their candid convictions as to what was best for the denominational welfare when such convictions were entirely contrary to their individual and personal wishes for the presence of the Convention. It cannot be too strongly stated that the motives of the Seattle brethren were entirely disinterested, and that their assent to the prevailing opinion that our denominational interests would be better served by a meeting elsewhere than in Seattle was a triumph of an unselfish spirit which all of us should honor. Naturally and properly the brethren in Seattle are sensitive over the existence of the opinion referred to. Surely no one would want to do injustice to these great hearts that have thought and chosen only with reference to the welfare of the high interests committed to our denomination.

THE VALUE OF A "BABE"

What is the value of "Babe" Ruth to organized baseball? There is some difference of opinion on that point. In connection with his contract for 1922, he asked $75,000 flat, $500 extra for each home run, and no deductions for the twenty-eight playing days he will miss because of his suspension. The Yankees did not quite agree that this was a correct estimate but offered him $40,000 and $500 for each home run. Miller Huggins said of him:

"Babe undoubtedly is the greatest single human factor ever connected with baseball. Fans looking only at his home runs can never realize the fine points he continues to learn. He is more eager for knowledge than the greenest recruit on the squad, and he gets his full share. Even Babe himself does not realize the vast improvement he makes in his game each year. . . . And the thing that holds his grip on the public is that you never know what his limit is—he never yet has halted in his upward journey."

In any case, it would seem that "Babe" is, so far as salary goes in a class with the President of the United States and far above all such petty officials as judges and the like, even though one of the latter did call time on him a short time ago. He is almost in a class with the movie stars if one will disregard the morals of some of the latter and think merely of their income.

Does he earn this money? Opinions differ on that. Is he as useful a citizen of the world and of the Kingdom of God as many a man who is receiving $2,000 or less a year? He certainly is not. Is baseball a real man's job in a world as disturbed as ours is? Well, some will say that anybody who helps to keep others interested and happy is doing a real service. Others will make the same comment we find in one of our exchanges which quotes Abe Martin as saying: "Few things look so shiftless as a big, strong, full-grown man selling pop."

LEAFLETS PRODUCE RESULTS

There came to the editors this week a pamphlet, put out by a well-known anti-Christian publishing house, on the front page of which was written, without signature, this communication: "I was near baptism when I received these pamphlets and I don't know what to think now. What would you suggest?" One of the questions touched upon is the resurrection and we are asking one of our clear-thinking brethren to say something on that topic for our Easter number. Meanwhile our attention has been called to the value of the printed page and especially to the value of the cheap pamphlet scattered broadcast. In this particular case a bad pamphlet has created confusion; in many others the right tract at the right time has brought light.

We do not begin to use tracts and pamphlets of all sorts as we should. There is a ministry here which no church can afford to neglect. An increasing supply of pamphlets of just the kind needed is coming from the press. Live churches will begin using them among the people of the community. For their distribution will be like the sowing of seed which will germinate when it has been almost forgotten and bring forth fruit in quarters which have been overlooked. The reader will probably agree with this. But what will he do about it? Hell would not be so full if good men and women had done at once the things of which they approved but which they put off until some tomorrow.

ONE EVERY SECOND

Boston had its Ponzi. Chicago, not to be outdone by a little city of that sort, has several of them at once, and is now engaged in making an inventory of the wreckage, the worst of which appears to be among the Lithuanians who live "back of the yards," and who begged Bischoff, a twenty-five year old promoter, and several others to take their money and who asked nothing in return except a promise of large gains. To Judge Landis, this youthful Ponzi said, "I owe $4,500,000 and I have less than $1,000 in cash." There is some interest in the fact that these foreign-speaking people had so much money to invest, for that sort of thing would not have been true in the days before prohibition, even of the kind Chicago knows, came into being. But there is more interest in the new revelation of the fact that a sucker is born every second and that there is no difficulty in catching such folk with a glittering bait. Most of them do not read the newspapers carefully; many of them cannot read at all; and consequently they learn, not from other people's experience but from their own. The danger is that, when the break comes, habits of thrift and industry will be sadly broken down. The country is full of swindlers, and for every such there are a hundred "easy marks." Sometimes the swindlers sell stock; sometimes they are after graft in connection with new church buildings and equipment; ministers are said to be easy prey for each kind. Once again the warning is raised. He who does not heed has only himself to blame. Greed for quick returns destroys the eyesight of many good men. But they acquire hindsight.

WILL AMERICA COMMUTE THE SENTENCE?

Every consideration of humanity calls upon the Near East Relief to double appropriations to meet war and famine emergencies. But a depleted treasury has compelled instead a cut of 25 per cent in appropriations. That cut means death to thousands of little children. We should be horrified if these thousands were lined up and shot, but the result in this case is the same.

The committee is determined to save, and will save, the children already received into the orphanages and under American protection though at present the resources are not in sight. There are approximately 100,000 of them. These we have invited to our table, and we will not drive them away to die.

But there are at least another 100,000 orphaned children who eagerly wait to seize the crumbs that fall from our table. Many of them are now dying in spite of all we can do.

In addition to these children there are other hundreds of thousands of equally innocent and helpless adults—women and girls—driven in midwinter from the plains of Cilicia or destitute upon the war-swept, famine-stricken plateaus of the Caucasus. These Christian refugees in Bible lands now stand under the sentence of death by starvation.

Will America commute the death sentence for the children?

Five dollars a month saves the life of an orphaned child.

LANDIS CHOOSES BASEBALL

His duties as Federal Judge and as supreme boss of the baseball world conflict and the judge has chosen baseball. There are not hours enough in the day, he says, for a man to do both. Some time ago he said that if he ever discovered this to be the case, he would give up one of the two jobs, and he has now done just that. He also said that he would never quit under fire and he kept his word in that.

Words are not adequate to express the sense of loss which Chicago feels in the retirement of this man who has been for years the terror of law-breakers and of all who deal unjustly, but who has had at the same time the absolute respect and confidence of those against whom he had to exercise authority. His methods may not always have been legalistic but he always headed straight towards essential justice. He has a mind which goes direct to the point and which does not quibble. There are too few such men in the country and fewer still on the bench. Every man who loves decency and justice and an orderly life will regret that Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis feels obliged, now that the day has arrived when he must have regard to his future, to retire from his judgeship. One has only to live in Chicago for a time to realize what a feeling of personal confidence the entire citizenship has in this unusual man. Could there be a higher tribute?

RICH LAYMEN TAKE NOTICE

The following is taken from The Presbyterian of the South:

"On December 25, 1921, every active minister in the Synod of Arkansas received a one thousand dollar life insurance policy. The premiums are to be paid yearly through the liberality of Mr. A. B. Banks, a deacon in the Second Presbyterian Church of Little Rock. Mr. Banks has carried a similar policy on the ministers of his former Presbytery, Pine Bluff, for several years. When a man enters active service in our Synod, he becomes eligible for a policy."

We pass the suggestion along to our wealthy Baptist laymen, among whom there must be a few who have so much money that they do not know what to do with it. No man would want to menace the welfare of his children by leaving too much money to them, and all know that there is no place for money in the "city not made with hands." Why not help underpaid ministers get rid of the worry of thinking what would happen to their families in case of serious trouble? Life insurance is good. There is also an unusual opportunity offered through the Ministers and Missionaries Board. If any of the laymen referred to are in doubt where to begin operations, we shall be glad, upon request, to furnish confidential information. Carnegie said an earful when he spoke about the disgrace of dying rich. But to die rich in good works is not so bad.

PREACH CHRIST

A correspondent in a letter to the Living Church (Episcopalian) has this to say concerning preaching:

"May an habitual and lifelong hearer of sermons make a plea for an increased number of sermons that are distinctly Christian, in the sense that they are stressing the message of the incarnation rather than some point in morality or ethics. I know very well that Christianity gathers up into itself all that is true in morality and ethics, and that all these must be taught; and yet we are hungry for clearer and closer presentation of the "good tidings of great joy" in the actual presence of the Christ amongst us. I believe that if the preachers could realize the instant and eager response in the minds of their hearers when their words in some way present to the congregation a recognizable picture of the Christ, they would more often speak directly and simply of him."

Such counsel is profitable for any preacher or editor or layman. The world is hungry and will be satisfied with nothing but the bread of life which came down from above. Whatever other task lies upon the church today its supreme opportunity is in a lively witnessing for Jesus Christ.

The Association As I See It

By FREDERICK A. AGAR

Agarisms

A pertinent topic for discussion in an associational meeting might often be, "Do church letters to the association generally tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?"

A program of associational activities needs to be worked out. Helping weak churches during the year, caring for pastorless churches, enlisting in the denominational enterprises those churches that are non-participating, and the conduct of team evangelism are some of the vital things at issue. Too often we meet and talk about—, but plans are not consummated and it ends in talk or a resolution. Let's get to work this year.

Unless there is a young people's session the attendance at many associations is largely limited to old people and ministers. The former have nothing much else to do, so they come for the sake of old times, while the latter class come because they feel they must, but I notice they generally get away before the meeting is over. The attendance at rural or small town sessions is generally the largest. Though the enrolment at city sessions is large, the people attend some other place than the church much of the time they are in the city.

largely eliminated and conferences substituted. In every association there are lay and ministerial leaders who are able to produce certain good results along specific lines and they should teach the other churches how those results are obtained. The denomination wastes very large sums of money because a succession of traveling secretaries appear on the program for one address. Only one national representative should be given a place to work at the annual sessions and that one should be worked either till he has exhausted his knowledge or the people are full of his topic. If a denominational representative is not capable of interesting people more than once in three days someone else should be given the assignment. Most speeches should be followed by an open conference with the speaker.

Every specific group before beginning the conference on methods should have a period of intercession and devotional study of the work. We must never try to develop methods at the expense of spiritual power, but spiritual power should lead to a proper use of wise and efficient methods.

The following groups are especially concerned with such a program as I have in mind: Church officers, women, young people, men's brotherhoods, bible-school workers, church finance leaders and personal soul winners. The following special topics are in mind as of interest to the various groups: "Evangelism in the Local Church"; "The Sunday Night Service"; "Church Night as a Substitute for Prayer Meeting"; "Prayer"; "Stewardship"; "The Missionary Goal of the Church and Kingdom"; "Bible-school Methods"; "Women's Work"; "What to Do with New Members of the Church"; "Duties and Qualifications of Church Officers"; "The Unified Budget in Two Sections," and "Denominational Plans and Programs."

Local churches do not understand conditions in their own organization. They have not studied cause and effect in their church life. Of discipline the average church member or officer knows little or nothing. Statistics mean very little of consequence so long as figures seem to show a larger church membership, and in the association there is a real place to go into these matters where persons affected may be reached but personalities are not too close for helpful delineation.

There are some people who will say when they have read this that I do not know the conditions which exist and that my suggestions are not fair or pertinent. The trouble is that such critics have had their experience confined to one or two associational gatherings where some measure of reform has taken place. I am sorry to say that my experience covers many associations all over the land. Upon the basis of a wide experience and a deep love for my denomination, I say that the average association must reform its plans and programs and must become the factor it was intended to be when our fathers gathered in associations to represent their local churches for the purpose of helping each other to do bigger things in better ways.

MANY associational meetings have lost their punch, they have a name to live but are dead so far as good works and attendance at the annual session are concerned. The average church member will not spend several days away from home listening to the reading of self-esteeming church letters and hearing inspirational speeches and sermons that eventuate in no practical improvement in the life and work of the church to which he belongs. In my judgment he is wise not to do it.

The association must reform and put itself into definite lines of service and training for service. Wherever this has been done, even in part, attendance has increased and the churches have been benefited. Works not words must be the goal of the program and of the organization that makes it up.

The association meeting offers a splendid opportunity for the development of plans and programs for the work in the local fields. Generally the group is small enough to be of common needs and aims. Those common aims and needs can be inspired and achieved through cooperation developed in the sessions of the annual meeting. It offers, further, a chance to get together once a year most of the church officers for consultation and training. They will welcome such a chance I know, and an afternoon and early evening session should be set aside for this purpose so that they may return home that night. The automobile generally makes this possible. Any pastor can get most of his officers there if he really tries.

The association gathering provides a chance for cooperation between the strong and the weak local church. Each needs the other, but they are not well enough acquainted to understand how to help each other.

Nowadays people want to know what to do, and how to do it well. Most of the sessions should be planned so as to provide the working forces of the church with special help along their particular practical line. Attendance of church workers would then be secured for those sessions that particularly provide for special needs. Few people would remain through all the sessions; the day for that has passed. Addresses and sermons should be

The Gastronomic Appeal

Shall church women serve tables or the Lord, the stomach or the spirit?

By ONE WHO HAS SUFFERED

OF all the relics of our "fore-mothers," the idea that we must give 'em a feed" if there is anything doing at the church, is the one that dies hardest, and it seems to be a regular Shylock, in that it persists in exacting the last pound of flesh from the long-suffering womanhood of any community.

The time is coming, and that ere many decades, when it will dawn upon the powers that be, that the women in a religious organization are of far more value mentally than physically, and to use the cream of a congregation for preparing and serving a bountiful repast—be it ever so appetizing—is using up energy that might better be spent in preparing a missionary program, enlightening the mind regarding missionary achievement, or even in studying the Bible!

Just imagine a movie manager or a concert manager announcing that supper would be served, preceding the entertainment, at the bare cost of the food—his helpers donating the time and strength and vitality required in preparing and serving the meal, if the people would only come to the "show" afterwards!

Isn't that virtually what we are doing today?

This is not fifty years ago, when there were no hotels, cafes, cafeterias or "hotel de curbs," lurking every few hundred feet to entice the hungry mortal within their various priced portals—oh no, but we, alas, have not kept pace with the advancement, so must needs rack our bodies and dispositions—and I think I might add souls!—to prepare these constantly recurring meals.

Do you know, if a really first-class "kick" should come from the legitimate hotel keepers and restaurateurs, to the city council, protesting against the wholesale feeding and serving of banquets, as carried on by the church of today, I say, they could count on me for an A-1 stump-speaker, in behalf of their cause.

Talk about an eight-hour law for women! It is to laugh! Does not every woman have her own household cares every day in the week, whether or not she "helps" at the church suppers? Does it enlighten her home duties a whit because there are seven or eleven meals served at the church per month? I should say not! She must use just that much more energy, which really amounts to this: "Dear friends, I have come here and labored to serve you this meal, that you may be sure to come and enjoy the spiritual feast to follow, but remember, my vitality had to be expended to bring you here!"

Of course, the work is always going to be "divided up" among all the women, but I notice it is usually the same ones to whom falls the honor (?) of serving. I know of one church where exactly eight regular meals and four banquets were served in one month's time! And let me add, it is almost impossible to find enough capable women to teach the Sunday-school classes in that organization!

The Cost of Waste

If they would expend the same amount of energy in mental efficiency as they expend in the role of waitresses, there would be no necessity of any one woman serving in several capacities, no one of which she can capably fill when attempting to divide her ability among all departments of the organization.

In many churches, the "oyster suppers" and "chicken dinners" are served for the purpose of "raising money" (perish the phrase!), but I am not commenting on this phase of the question at all, as, what I might have to say regarding women donating the various articles served, and then giving of their own strength besides—I say, what I think of that might not be sweet music to the ears of some, so I will refrain. Suffice it to say, you might better give the price of your donation, and a little besides, for your energy and strength are worth more to your household than dollars and cents, and once lost can never be fully regained, for, strange as it may seem, you are growing older every day! Yes, you are, and you may as well begin to take stock!

I once heard an eminent minister express himself very tersely when replying to the question, "How to interest men in church work," and this one sentence lurked in my brain: "The gastronomic appeal lasts no longer than the flavor of the meal!" How does that strike you, sisters?

But to come down to brass tacks; let's analyze the proposition and find out why we do it, and what the result of its discontinuance would be.

Of the institutional church, I am not speaking; it employs proper and adequate help for all departments; nor am I speaking of the church serving the poor and needy—my quarrel is wholly with the average city church of several hundred or a couple of thousand members, which serves a better meal for twenty-five or thirty-five cents than can be served elsewhere, for the simple reason that the cost of service and rent and taxes have been eliminated.

Now, is that a Christian principle which will hold water?

Again, is there not a greater need for trained workers than any church can supply?

Does it not stand to reason that any woman, if properly equipped, would rather be a dispenser of intellectual food than a server of the choicest viands, so soon to be forgotten?

And here is a little personal question which you need not answer in public, but whisper it to yourself: How many of you have husbands who shout for joy when you tell them you are going to "help serve" again? Aha! so your husband does not relish it either? Neither does mine!

And is it necessary?

I say "NO," most emphatically; for the men and women for whose benefit we labor are supposed to be Christian men and women whose presence need not be bought, but who should attend the organization meetings irrespective of the lure of the flesh pots!

If your church is equipped for serving meals, and you wish your suppers together, then employ one of the coteries of waiters which make their living in that particular way, and of which there is any number in the larger cities. You may not get "more than your money's worth" from such a meal, but a clear conscience should count for something, to say nothing of the fact that the womanhood of your church is permitted to attend and enjoy and profit by the convention meetings and missionary programs and training classes instead of doing the grand march across a sixty-foot dining room with "Adam and Eve on a raft!"

A Statement from Philadelphia

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

ON Monday, Feb. 6, a company of about forty Baptist ministers and teachers of Philadelphia and vicinity met to consider well-known conditions of doctrinal controversy in the denomination and possibilities of great damage to our missionary work. The conclusion of this deliberation is found in the following statement.

This will have added weight in the denomination when the names of these who signed are taken into consideration. In the list are men of every theological attitude, including well known Fundamentalists. Many more signatures are being secured. The gist of this message is that we do not believe in controversy, do not think it necessary, and hope to see none of it any longer in the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention.

These are the signatures: Pres. Milton G. Evans, I. G. Matthews, Edward B. Pollard, Henry C. Vedder, of Crozer;

Secretaries—S. Zane Batten, H. Watson Barras, E. M. Stevenson, O. T. Steward, Charles O. Wright, Wm. H. Main;

A Statement

In view of the present deep interest in questions of doctrine and policy, we who are Baptist ministers, teachers and secretaries of Philadelphia and vicinity and who represent none but ourselves, desire to express our own convictions. We do this with the prayerful desire that this expression, which represents in a remarkable way the unity to which men of many minds can come, may help to promote similar unity elsewhere and so promote the cooperation of every element in our great denomination.

First: We find ourselves united in an expression of our faith. We hold with all Baptists of all times, with our fathers and their children, to what we regard as the fundamental and vital truths and principles which have been the bond of our fellowship.

1. One is our Father, even God, and all we are brethren.

2. The Lordship of our Saviour, Jesus Christ the incarnate Son of God, who reveals the grace and truth of God, our Heavenly Father; who for our sins died on the cross and rose again that he might bring us to God and who is now at the right hand of God the Father and will come again to judge the living and the dead according to their deeds.

3. The abiding presence and the illuminating and regenerating power of the Holy Spirit who is ever present in the Scriptures, in the church and in the individual believer, to guide us into all truth and the will of God.

4. The unique and divine inspiration of the Old and New Testaments as revealing to us the way of salvation and being the supreme guide of our faith and duty in life.

5. The duty of being loyal to Christ as our Lord by living to the praise of his glory, proclaiming his gospel in all the world and seeking to establish his Kingdom on the earth.

6. The equality of all men before God; their right to religious freedom and the duty of tolerance towards all who hold conclusions differing from their own.

7. The universal priesthood of all believers with the right of immediate access to God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

8. The freedom of the individual to search for truth; to distinguish between right and wrong; to choose the good and reject the evil.

9. The recognition of religious liberty by the state and the freedom of the congregation to develop itself and its work without the help or hindrance of the state.

10. The church is composed of believers who, having been regenerated by the Holy Spirit, acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, and who are baptized by one Spirit into one body. Such believers associate themselves together as a local church upon a confession of their faith, by observing the ordinances of Christ and by cooperating in the mission of proclaiming the gospel of Christ to all men.

11. We recognize two Christian ordinances, baptism and the Lord's supper. Baptism is the immersion of believers in water, thereby testifying to a faith in the forgiveness of sin, and setting forth a union with Christ as being crucified, dead, buried, and raised with Christ, and purposing to walk as children of God risen to a newness of life. The Lord's supper is the commemoration by the church of the life and death of Jesus Christ.

Second: As a corollary to this doctrinal faith, we are bound to express our sense of the importance of maintaining the distinct Christian influence of our denominational schools. That any teacher should anywhere in a Baptist school exert his influence consciously or unconsciously in such a manner as to harm the religious life would be a distinct betrayal of trust. On the contrary, we look for positive help from our schools in developing Christian manhood and womanhood. If any school is failing to fulfill this ideal, we believe its trustees should make such a failure a matter of great concern and eliminate promptly from its faculty those whose influence is subversive of true Christian faith.

Third: In order that there may be a fresh understanding by all men of what Baptists stand for, we favor the proposal made at Columbia, Mo., by representatives of North and South for a commission which shall represent our entire constituency and prepare a full statement of our historic Baptist position. We would add, however, that such a statement should be regarded only as explanatory, to be adopted by churches and individuals only as they desire in their liberty to do so and never to be used as a norm or official standard of orthodoxy.

Fourth: We declare our faith that the time-honored principles of Baptist history, soul liberty and the free union of churches for the common missionary task, should still be the working principles of the Baptist denomination. We recall that the Northern Baptist Convention was organized on a service basis only, not to control the churches but better to enable the churches to work together for the Kingdom. As such an instrument we feel it should represent all phases of our thought and belief in its boards and organization. In our boards and convention we see no place for factions but only for brother in Christ. Our experience has taught us how practicable it is for Christians of different schools of thought to work together in mutual respect and a common spirit.

Fifth: We declare again our faith in the great objectives of the New World Movement that the glory of the Lord may cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. We feel the pressure of the great task. In the days of reconstruction, the vast field seem in greater need and the doors to be wider open than ever before. The world needs a new spirit. It is bankrupt in its faith. It is searching, it knows not for what. In such a day we have little time for anything that may divide or weaken our strength. We must do the business of the hand, feed the hungry, heal the sick, lift up the fallen, release the captive and preach the gospel everywhere. Therefore we would devote ourselves with one purpose to the great task.

Good News for Low-Salaried Ministers

THE Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board has been greatly pleased by the response of our pastors to the cooperative Retiring Pension Fund. Acting upon the advice of actuaries, the board was confronted in presenting the plan by the necessity of asking ministers (or their churches) to provide the entire cost of membership the first year. Sound business required this payment of 6 per cent of the salary. Men receiving small salaries have found difficulty in meeting this necessity.

The board now is glad to report that a special gift has been received, designated to assist a few low-salaried men who would otherwise find it hard to join. This offer is temporary. It will be available, until exhausted, in paying 65 per cent of the first year's cost for membership for men whose salaries are $1,500 per annum or less. The donor thereby does for such men in their first year of membership what is done for all members in their second year.

Applications will be acted upon in the order in which they are received, and, until exhausted, the entire amount will be used solely for this purpose.—E. T. Tomlinson, Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Ave. New York City.

Can the Association Be Revitalized?

It is generally agreed that in the organized work of our denomination the Association is the best working unit. Can the Association be made to contribute more largely to the life of the churches? A picture of conditions with a few suggestions.

New Significance

THE associations in Maine are showing a new strength and significance of late. The attendance and representation has considerably increased. Live issues are presented by men from the mission field, state workers and pastors and there is free discussion of all issues.

In most of our associations, quarterly meetings are held which having less of business have more time for inspirational and devotional meetings. Special topics are assigned about which the thought and prayers of the meetings center. The pastors find strength in the fellowship of their brethren and an increasing attendance of laymen extends the influence of the meeting.

E. C. WHITTEMORE.

Thoroughly Organized

THE six associations of Connecticut are fully alive to the importance of their place in our denominational life. Each association is thoroughly organized, with live committees on evangelism, stewardship and promotion, the organization running out to each of the churches. Frequent conferences are held in each association, all three departments working in closest cooperation.

Vermont

WE HAVE changed the dates of the annual meetings of our associations and convention. Formerly the associations were held in the spring and the convention in the fall, but now we send out statistical blanks to all the churches and gather up the statistics May 1 and then the convention is held the last week in May. The associations are held in October when educational and inspirational programs are given. I believe this is a help to the pastors at the beginning of the winter's work. For the past two years these meetings of one day's duration have been largely attended.

W. A. DAVISON.

Wisconsin

I HAVE felt for some time that our associations ought to be functioning much more than they are, and suggested some things to the moderators and clerks when they gathered in my office at the state convention at Beloit last October. But thus far, I have seen no real results.

There were two things I suggested: First, that every association ought to have a live missionary committee—a committee that would really function. I feel that the associational missionary committee ought to keep in special touch with pastorless churches of the association, especially if such churches are weak or passing through a special crisis. In a case like that the committee might be of immeasurable value. Second, I have wished that the associational officers might take a special interest in such matters as might be put before the various churches of their associations in the line of our larger denominational movements. I wish that whenever literature of special import went out from this office, or whenever something of especial interest was presented to the church, that the associational officers might send follow-up letters and thereby get a more ready response from the churches.

To illustrate: Last fall we were working for minute men and women in every church in every association. I then asked the associational officers to see that every church made such an appointment, but few of these officers actually functioned. Had they done so, they might have been of immense help to us and brought forth much larger results.

Ohio Associational Debates

OUR plan for a debate given in our convention a year or two ago was a beautiful one, but we found it difficult to put into execution because the young people needed were busy in school or offices and little accustomed to thinking of religious or missionary subjects in terms of work or effort on their own part. We asked the various churches in the association to interest their young people and try to induce them to enter the series of debates on the following plan:

Three young people from one church would challenge a similar group in another church. We had hoped to have at least eight such groups of young people preparing for the debate, all, of course, on the same subject. This would mean four debates and as a result, four groups of young people would be winners. These four groups were then to be asked to debate against each other in two meetings, and the winners, as a result of this contest, were to debate before the association. Our subject, "Resolved That Our Mission Work in West China Has Been a Failure," proved to be too startling and it seemed to some one-sided; as a consequence we were not able to get the response we had hoped for.

We did have a debate in the association, but did not work out the whole series quite according to schedule. At the state convention we had a very interesting debate between young men of Toledo and Cleveland on the subject "Resolved, That There Are Better Business Openings for Young Men in Central Africa Than in China." It was interesting and gratifying to see how this form of presentation appealed to the audience. There was real excitement at times and frequent applause. The young men themselves became intensely interested in their subjects and an amount of really vital information was put across to the audience.

I am convinced that more of this sort of missionary education will make the subject live as a vital issue in the minds of many who think of it as of no particular importance. The award for the debate at the state convention was a scholarship at the Denison University and this added interest to the occasion. From my experience I should say that the chief difficulty is arousing enough interest to get the debate started. That takes time and patience, but I assure you that the feeble results which we produced, more than repaid the effort we put into it and we hope to do more with the plan in the future.

Associations Revived

THE New World Movement has brought new life into a number of the associations in Pennsylvania. I might cite, for example, the Beaver Association, which through its associational board of promotion is thoroughly active in the promotion of evangelism, stewardship and missionary education. Its board meets monthly and its members are divided into groups, each charged with definite responsibilities. The plan is working excellently in promoting the whole cause in that area.

The same is true of the Philadelphia Association. Under the auspices of the Baptist Union of Philadelphia and vicinity a board of promotion has been organized. This board is an active, energetic body. It has committees covering every phase of our denominational promotional work. Last year, as the result of the activities of this board, Philadelphia churches reported over a thousand accessions by baptism. Just now the board is putting special emphasis on stewardship. There have been results achieved which are traced directly to the activities of this local board.

WILLIAM G. RUSSELL.

Indiana

FOR the past four years we have been placing more and more emphasis upon the importance of the association. We now have a board of promotion in each of our associations. This board meets once each quarter. At these meetings the roll of the churches is called and reports are made covering the various phases of our work. If any church is in need of help, arrangements are made at these quarterly meetings to furnish that help, which is supplied from the resources of the association wherever possible. Our aim is to have this board pass upon all matters of our Baptist program and where any new organization is needed it is worked out at these meetings. Our district superintendents attend all of the meetings in their district. We have found that associational boards with their quarterly conferences have been very helpful in the developing of our work. In this way we are also developing more leaders than we could have done otherwise. Our plan is to have each church represented by its pastor, one woman and one man. All associational officers of any kind are also members of this board. If we can bring it about so that each association shall carry the burdens of the work in its own territory we shall greatly strengthen our Baptist forces.

C. M. DINSMORE.

Miniature Conventions

THE associations in Western Washington have been able to secure a larger attendance at the associational meetings and a deeper interest in the programs of the associations during the past two years. This hopeful condition has been brought about by departing from the custom of having the associational meetings take the form of miniature conventions. The new program provides for inspirational addresses and sermons, but the larger part of the program is devoted to conferences on matters affecting the life and activities of the churches and special interesting features of the denominational program.

J. F. WATSON.

Emphasizing the Association

IN OUR denominational activities I think we have not emphasized as we should the associational unit or made as much use of the associations as we might. A carefully selected executive committee, consisting of the moderator and clerk and as many other members as seems wise, which functions all through the year can be of great help to the weaker churches in the association and can enlist the cooperation of the churches in the association in our denominational enterprises.

If the associational organization is functioning as it should, it can be made an efficient link in bringing to the churches all plans of the denominational societies and leaders.

The annual associational meetings can be made occasions of devotion, inspiration, fellowship and a clearing-house for the practical discussion of all associational and local church problems.

Minnesota

THERE has not been very much revitalization of the associations in Minnesota. I think that their best contribution would be of an inspirational and informational character. Some of the young people's associational meetings are quite strong.

E. R. POPE.

Springfield Association

THE program of activities for the board of promotion adopted by the Springfield (Ill.) Association at its last session adopted the following recommendations:

I. That the constitution be amended to cover the two following points: 1. That the association board head up the entire denominational program of the association. 2. That the association board of promotion consist of five members as follows: three to be elected by the association to serve for the periods of one, two and three years respectively; and that the moderator and secretary-treasurer be members ex officio.

II. That the board of promotion be entrusted to arrange for rallies and campaigns in the churches of the association to promote the following four objectives: 1. Bible conferences. 2. Evangelistic services. 3. Religious education. 4. Church organization and finance, as concerns the local church and as to denominational interests.

III. To promote pastoral efficiency in the following ways: 1. To create a closer fellowship. 2. To quicken the intellectual life. 3. To provide a pastoral retreat.

IV. To cooperate with churches in securing pastors.

V. That churches confer with the board of promotion in the ordination of pastors.

VI. That representatives of the board of promotion visit each of the churches in the association, presenting purpose and plans of the board.

VII. That the work of the board of promotion be financed by an offering from the local churches.

Note first, that the association board, heads the entire denominational program of the association. This broad range of activities permits the board to function as it could not do were limitations put upon it. Each of the four objectives in the program outline, is headed by a team with a chairman in charge. These groups are selected with a view of the work to which they are best adapted.

Since the association meeting, the board has been promoting in a special manner, Bible conferences, evangelistic campaigns and aiding pastorless churches to secure efficient men. Religious education has been promoted but will receive special emphasis a little later in the year, in the form of Sunday school organization and equipment, vacation Bible schools, and summer assembly. A number of successful evangelistic meetings have been held and several fine Bible conferences conducted. Just now the promotion board is in charge of the campaign in the Springfield Association. It is generally felt that this is the natural unit through which this

Dr. Agar Says:

Any one who sits and listens to the reading of as many church letters to the association as I do comes to the conclusion that some new phraseology might well be employed by the writers or else that many of them are trying to cover up the same sort of thing.

Just to read a lot of statistics is a waste of time and energy. To study them intensively is of very great value even when they are far from accurate compilation. For instance, relate the additions by profession, to the giving life of the churches, or vice-versa. The bogey that looms up in any real honest study of church figures is, "Oh, you will offend people!" or, "I am mad, you had no right to draw attention to that condition in our church." Well, it would seem as if the time had come for work, for action, for frankness, and for loving truth about church life. Better to make some people mad than have them die of ease and failure. It is seldom however that they need to go away mad if they are handled properly.

work can best be promoted. The organization of the campaign is well under way; and we believe will succeed as it could not possibly do were it not for this board of promotion.

One encouraging feature is that there was a unanimous vote at our association for the program adopted which has resulted in a most splendid cooperation on the part of both pastors and laymen. There has been a long-felt need of a closer coordination on the part of churches and pastors, a friendly intercourse and fellowship heretofore lacking. The promotion board seemed to be the connecting link necessary to accomplish this as well as develop a much-needed associational consciousness.

Generally speaking, we are much pleased with the results of our efforts along this line. We are convinced that the association is the natural unit through which to bring the local churches in touch with the state and denominational program. And since there is a general promotion board, and a state promotion organization, an associational promotion board would seem to be the logical thing.

VICTOR N. WITTER.

Bloomfield Baptist Association

THE Bloomfield Baptist Association consists of forty churches and is located along the Indiana line in east central Illinois. It covers a territory of approximately 300,000 people. For the most part agricultural interests constitute their chief occupation. Yet Champaign-Urbana, Danville, and Mattoon are thriving young cities with growing industrial interests. This association contains some strategic points for religious work. Danville, Champaign, Mattoon and Villa Grove are all railroad centers. At Champaign-Urbana is the University of Illinois. There is doubtless no equal agricultural area in the world that embodies more wealth than is to be found within the bounds of this association.

The last annual reports shows that the churches of the Bloomfield Association have property of approximately $700,000; a membership of 5,000; Sunday-school enrollment of 4,030; twenty-six women's societies, membership 750; twenty-seven B. Y. P. U's, membership 996. The churches contributed for benevolences $27,638 and spent for home use the sum of $51,000. The association was allotted $553,000 in the New World Movement and underwrote the sum $130,000. A few of the churches did not participate but for the most part the association entered into the spirit of the movement. Two of the smaller churches went over the top; the stronger churches subscribed about half of their allotment. A small group felt that the allotment was too overwhelming and did little on their quota. The churches reported about 400 baptisms last year and 200 by letter.

The last associational year was one of cooperation and success. The committee on promotion marked out a definite goal of educational propaganda and in cooperation with the director of religious education of the association put across a splendid piece of work. Conferences were arranged in the local churches and a team representing women's work, young people's work, and the Sunday school, under the direction of the associational committee on promotion, carried out the programs. The returns from this work were most encouraging. The executive secretary, Miss Bessie Winchester, reports: "Conducted sixty-four group conferences and 269 personal conferences, visited the regular sessions of twenty-four Sunday schools, twenty-eight B. Y. P. U's, twelve women's societies, taught eighteen Sunday-school classes, spoke in twenty-two churches, gave twenty-six addresses on religious education, wrote 898 letters, addressed 8,566 people, assisted in organizing seven women's mission circles and three B. Y. P. U's." In addition to this was the work of Mr. Koehler, Mrs. Comrie and others in carrying out the programs.

If a local association is organized on a practical basis with hustlers and shovers behind it much good work can be done with a small outlay of money. The association constitutes the working unit once removed from the local church and is yet to be recognized and utilized by the state and national bodies. There needs to be worked out a standard organization for the associations which will prevail in all our state conventions. The Illinois State Convention at its recent meeting in Rockford took steps to recognize the local association in that it gives the association representatives on the state board.

C. C. LONG.

The Alton Association

THE Alton (Ill.) Association covers eight counties with thirty-eight churches—country, small town and city—and nearly 7,000 members. Due to geographical size and several centers of population the preservation of a vital bond of union among the churches is a problem, yet few associations have a finer spirit of fellowship or are doing more along the lines of self-help within the association than is the Alton.

The chairman of the missionary committee, for four years, has made himself responsible for the life of the association. Five times or more a year he calls the pastors, and sometimes certain committees, to a general conference. The meeting place is First Church, East St. Louis where all lines of transportation converge. Travelling expenses are equalized so that each person pays the same amount. The expense ranges from $1.10 to $1.50. The hour of meeting is 10:30 to 12:30. Usually the time is spent in considering needs of weaker churches. Where there is not sufficient knowledge some one will be asked to investigate and report. Certain ones will be assigned tasks and at the next meeting will report. Suggestions are freely given and decisions quickly made. The feeling of all who attend is that the conference is necessary, that matters are considered in a fraternal way and that no time is wasted. The general result is a fine feeling of fellowship and a sense of responsibility for one another's welfare.

A brief recountal of work accomplished in a year's time, ending with the present, will illustrate how the association works for itself.

A pastor of a weaker church wished to have evangelistic meetings. Three of his fellow pastors and several laymen carried on the meetings for three weeks. A young church in a growing community faced a building proposition with courage due to the counsel of the associational leaders. When a decision had to be made between a roofed-over basement or the whole superstructure buildied but unfinished on the inside, it was again wise counsel that led on to success. A discouraged church in the worst community in Illinois was without a pastor. Through the association hands were laid on an enthusiastic man who was impressed into the service. A body of Baptists with a Sunday school and a prayer meeting needed a building on finely located lots. Counsel and cooperation resulted in an appropriate building and an organized Baptist church which is being mothered by the near-by churches. A church comes into the association just as it dedicates a roofed-over basement. Delegations from other churches visit it to make it feel at home. It needs a pastor and wants evangelistic meetings. The association secures the pastor and arranges for the visit of a state evangelist. Two neighboring churches which have not had pastoral care for a number of years are urged to consider one of the pastors in the association who had resigned. He is now the pastor of the two churches. A church with a brick building on the edge of the town park had preaching services only four times in two years. A Sunday school was kept up. A pastor and a lay preacher were sent to the town. They visited every Baptist family in the village. They suggested a program with preaching twice a month with the man provided. The church is now being splendidly served. A newly organized church meeting in a schoolhouse is being led to purchase lots and take up the wholesome obligations of church life. Laymen's meetings and women's meetings are being arranged for in support of the emergency campaign of the denomination now on. At the first meeting in the fall, in accordance with a resolution passed at the meeting of the association, the Associational Workers' Conference laid a levy of $500 on the churches of the association—the money to be used for work within the association. Appropriations are made from this fund to provide preaching to needy churches. A young church meeting in a building 40x60 has an attendance of 125 in the Sunday school. It must have more room. Plans for enlargement have been adopted. The associational conference appropriated $100 which is to be matched with a like amount by friends.

It is the conviction of the writer that almost any association could as easily meet most of the problems within itself as the Alton Association has done. The associations need it for their own good. It would relieve the state convention of a good many time-demanding duties and leave it more free to devote itself to the development of suburban fields in growing industrial centers.

The Story of Urasaki Eishin

By WILLIAM WYND

URASAKI EISHIN, with his wife and two daughters are a few out of many who during the year have been won for Christ in the Loochoo Islands. Mr. Urasaki is a fine type of a Loochoo gentleman, strong in body, genial in disposition, and with a big loving heart. He is about fifty-five years of age, and has had an interesting career, first as a teacher and then as a principal of one of the big country schools that dot the islands, and give evidence that the Loochoo folk are following hard after the people on the mainland in their race for education. From childhood he was prejudiced against Christianity, not actively opposed, but like most of his class simply regarding it as a western superstition which Japan could well do without, as she happened to have plenty of her own. His chief interest was in his educational work; his great source of joy and happiness was his home and his family of two girls and one boy. Two years ago the boy went to Tokyo to complete his education, and that left a vacant place, but the girls were with him and they were as the apple of his eye. The girls were also teachers and when the day's work was done and they gathered in their village home, drank their tea and talked over the interesting events of the day there was not a happier family in the empire.

But a storm was already hovering over the home of Urasaki, such a storm as often bursts over the islands when the sun is darkened, the typhoon shakes the hills and drives the people cowering into their homes to watch and wait for what fate may bring. The elder daughter was stricken with a strange disease. Some said that she had lost her reason. Others said that she had incurred the displeasure of the gods. The Jews would have said she was possessed with a devil. The stricken girl herself believed that she had been changed from a human being into an animal. Now she was a dog foaming at the mouth, barking, biting, walking on hands and knees and going through all the motions of a wild dog. A little later she would imagine herself to be an ox and would look and act so like one that it was weird to watch her. Her strength became prodigious, and though her father is a man of powerful physique he could not hold her. Like the devil possessed man of Cadara who dwelt among the tombs and could not be bound even with chains of iron, the Loochoo girl could not be restrained. The parents were distracted with grief. Everything that could be done for their daughter was done but the malady baffled the doctors. The priests were called from the temple but the girl drove them from her presence in a torrent of wild anger. Over in the next valley, in a little thatched hovel, there dwelt a woman well known in the neighborhood as one who was possessed with occult powers. The neighbours told many strange tales about this woman, and though none cared to be closely associated with her there were few who did not carry presents to her and ask her help when sickness came. Urasaki San thought himself far above the credulities and superstitions of his neighbours, but his need was great, so he carried his gifts to the "Yuta" (So these women are called in the islands) and implored her help.

She came and went. She performed her incantations on the hill at the lonely spot where the sacred pine looks out on the sea. But this disease was not the kind that could be charmed away by any of the devices known to the "Yuta." Day by day the daughter grew worse, and in the heart of Urasaki a settled melancholy took the place of his former joy. Lines grew deep on the face that till now had been unfurrowed, and he came home from school with a heavy step. One day when he came home he found Uehara San, the Bible woman of the Naha Baptist Church, sitting by his daughter's side holding her hand and looking into her fevered face with a look of deep compassion. Urasaki San was more than surprised. He did not know who the Bible woman was, but he did know that his daughter hated the sight of strangers and generally drove them off with anger, yet here she was quietly allowing her hand to rest in the hand of the stranger and looking more peaceful than she had done for many weeks.

"I do not pretend to know how it was done," the father said as he told us the story. "I do not pretend to know that, but I do know that the touch of that Christian woman was the first thing that brought the feelings of a human being back to my beloved child, and that afterwards the gospel message completed the cure and transformed her. Once more she became the joy of her parents, and in a new sense the light of our home. We studied the Bible together. We sought the Lord together. We went together to the church at Naha from whence the messenger of God came to us. And now comes the completion of our happiness for today the four of us have been baptized together while my son in Tokyo has also become a Christian."

A Seafarer's Sketch Book

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

NO. 5. THROUGH THE KAISER WILHELM CANAL ON THE CAPTAIN'S BRIDGE

FAR back in 1896—everything before the war seems long ago—the world awoke one morning and learned that an important waterway had been completed which connected the North Sea and the Baltic Sea. It was one of the most constructive achievements of the German Kaiser and in his honor it was at once named the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal. Today the maritime world is trying hard to get adjusted to the new name Kiel Canal after the name of the town at its eastern entrance. Of course the canal was widely advertised as having been constructed for purely commercial purposes in order to save time and fuel in the dangerous passage around the Denmark peninsula. Many wiseheads however immediately recognized the naval strategic importance for the Kaiser since the canal meant that he could in the short space of twelve hours transport his entire navy from the North Sea to the Baltic Sea without having a single ship leave German territorial waters.

It was my unique privilege to sail through this famous waterway on the steamship "Estonia" with her precious cargo of relief contributions from Northern Baptists. Through the kindness of her captain I was permitted to stand on the bridge with the captain, the first officer and the German government pilot. This very rare privilege afforded an unusual opportunity to observe this strategic canal to best advantage. Its long, narrow, heavily concreted approaches and its immense tidal locks are marvelous pieces of maritime engineering. In the years just prior to the war the canal was extensively enlarged and improved, again ostensibly for commercial purposes, and yet doubtless primarily because of the increasing size of the German ships of war. The width of the canal is now 343 feet at the water level and 147 feet at the water bottom with an average depth of water of thirty-six feet. Thus it is possible for ships of the largest tonnage to sail through and in view of the width it is easily possible for two ocean going vessels to pass each other. The new sluices or approaches and locks at the ends of the canal are 1,000 feet long, so that there is at present in the world no ship too long to be accommodated. All of these extensive improvements were completed in 1913. One is sorely tempted to speculate as to whether the great war would have come any sooner if the canal had been completed a few years earlier.

The canal is cut through charmingly picturesque country dotted with many small villages and farms. Although winter was upon us and although dusk had fallen when we passed it was still possible to note that the country was largely used for the grazing of cattle. This doubtless explains why this region is so famous for its rich butter, cheese and other dairy products. At several points great steel railway bridges cross the canal, all of them single span or arch and lifted high above the canal so that ships with tall masts have no difficulty in their passage. Since the country is fairly level this means that the tracks have to approach the bridges on long grades over wide sweeping curves. In the afternoon before reaching the canal we passed the famous and now dismantled fortress island of Helgoland. It was easy to understand how this immense fortification protecting the approaches to the waterway had been such a source of anxiety to the British during the war.

At the western approach of the canal is situated the port known as Cuxhaven. Here the "Estonia" stopped for nearly three hours to discharge mail and a few steerage passengers. On the docks German policemen were walking briskly in a manner that suggested very strongly the characteristic steps of a captain or major of infantry. The first persons aboard the ship were the port officer and the quarantine officer. With military precision they clinked their heels together and smartly saluted the ship's officers. It would be a safe guess that the port official had served in France as a German staff officer and that the quarantine officer had seen service as a major in the medical corps. As soon as these necessary and several other lesser officials had come aboard permission was given me to step ashore. Proudly I walked across the gangplank and after eleven days at sea I had the delicious, refreshing, inspiring experience of stepping ashore—an American on German soil.

Here I was cordially greeted by five distinguished gentlemen, Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, our Baptist Commissioner for Europe, Dr. F. W. Simoleit, secretary of the German Baptist Home Mission Society, Dr. B. Weerts, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Berlin, Rev. Arnold Metz of Vienna and Rev. John Ricar, of Prague, now in Czecho-Slovakia. These brethren had come to meet me in conference regarding the problems of distribution of clothing and shoes in Germany, Austria and in Czecho-Slovakia. After our preliminary greetings we returned aboard the ship and in the dining room, after tea had been served, we had our conference. All our conversation was in the German language and it doubtless would have sounded very strange to an American Baptist to hear even Dr. Rushbrooke and me converse with each other in German. During our delightful fellowship while he was in America last summer, when together we called on the President at the White House and on Secretary Hughes at the State Department and on Secretary Davis at the Department of Labor, all of them Baptists, we had never used German. There is something of more than passing significance here for in this conference was an Englishman and an American conversing in the language of a former common enemy and on German soil. It was an episode in the reestablishment of fraternal international relationships.

I wish with all my heart that my typewriter were adequate to the task of repeating to the readers of THE BAPTIST the expressions of deep gratitude and profound appreciation conveyed to me by these brethren. I shall never forget the closing moment of our conference, after all details of transportation and distribution had been arranged, when one of them speaking for all the others and in a voice filled with deep emotion and on behalf of the needy men, women and children in their respective countries, tried to assure me again how overwhelmed they were with gratitude to Northern Baptists for this great expression of disinterested service, of fellowship and of brotherhood in the spirit of Christ. Truly indeed the "Estonia" had been to them a ship filled in fellowship.

And then later on the captain's bridge as I sailed through the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal I wondered what the Kaiser would have thought when he started to build the canal thirty years ago if at that time he had known that some day a ship filled in fellowship would sail proudly through that canal on her errand of mercy to needy humanity whose sufferings from the war have not yet come to an end.

NO. 6. THE FREE CITY OF DANZIG

EVER since the Peace Conference at Versailles, which appears to have created about as many problems as it solved, I have been wondering what was meant by the free city of Danzig. Here was a fairly prosperous city of a mixed population of 300,000 inhabitants, including the surrounding country, part of whom are German and part of whom are Polish. There are also some Russians and some Jews. Formerly the city belonged to Germany. Now it does not belong to Germany and it does not belong to Poland but is under international control through the League of Nations; yet it is supposed to be a free city. I wondered what it meant.

After a restful voyage across the Baltic Sea, as smooth as a fountain pond in public park, the "Estonia" sailed into the harbor of Danzig and up the Vistula River to the pier. It seemed to require no less time to get the ropes adjusted and the gangplank connected. There were scores of men on the pier but no one seemed to have sufficient ambition to hurry matters along and I wondered whether this was one of the free aspects of the city. Leisurely and at the proper time the officials came aboard and as a Cuxhaven they clicked their heels together in military fashion and smartly saluted the ship's officers. Of the cargo in the "Estonia" in my care, 800 bales of clothing and shoes, sixty-five barrels of soap and twenty barrels of toys were to be discharged here for distribution in eastern Germany and in Poland. Since several hours would be consumed in unloading mail before discharging those bales, I stepped ashore and went to visit this quaint old European city with its low, sloping roofs and its fourteenth century towers.

First I exchanged ten American dollars into German marks. I had heard much of the depreciation of the German currency in recent years and had followed the fluctuations in international exchange with more or less interest. However, I was not prepared for the actual surprising transfer. For my ten dollars I received 2,200 marks. Before the war the equivalent value was more than $500. I wondered whether this was a case of almost getting something free. Perhaps this was why they called it the free city of Danzig. With this large amount of paper currency my coat pockets bulged and I was grateful for the concealment and protection of my overcoat.

I then took a trip on a little ferry across the river. The fare was one mark—less than one-half of one American cent. A this rate six ferry trips could be made across the Vistula for the price of one trip across the Hudson at New York. This was almost free. Leaving the ferry, I boarded a quaint little electric street car with two tiny trailers dragging behind for a twenty-minute ride into the city. The fare was one mark, again less than one-half of an American cent. Certainly this was almost free for at that rate twenty rides could be had at the cost of one street-car fare in Boston. At noon I went to a restaurant in the heart of the city and ordered a sandwich and a cup of tea. While I was enjoying this luncheon, a waiter passed behind me carrying a huge plate of oozy apple sauce for the man at the next table who had ordered roast duck. Another patron putting on his overcoat bumped into the waiter and the oozy apple sauce ended its illustrious career on my right shoulder. At last I had discovered something absolutely free in this free city of Danzig. Of course everybody expected that I would at once raise a hue and a cry and demand a new suit. The poor waiter was panic stricken. With feverish hands and a clean towel he endeavored to cleanse my coat. The head waiter came and seemed to expect that I would demand to see the proprietor and insist on the discharge of the waiter. As I was purposely wearing an extremely old suit for rough travel on the continent and since apple sauce leaves no stain I merely smiled, referred casually to amusing accidents and looked upon the incident as a joke. To the waiters and the diners this seemed incredible. Finally I heard some one say "Ein Amerikaner." This evidently explained the situation and all turned again to their plates. The head waiter was most profuse in his apologies; indeed, I cannot recall anywhere in my travel experience meeting a head waiter in whom genuine courtesy was so completely personified. It was refreshing to find such free courtesy in the free city of Danzig.

After luncheon I called at the office of the German consul in order to have my passport viséed. A letter from Herbert Hoover promptly secured the desired audience and although twenty others were waiting the consul viséed my passport first. When I explained further my mission in Europe and that part of our relief supplies were to be distributed among needy people in Germany he was greatly pleased and waived the customary fee, thus viséing my passport without charge. Once more I realized that I was in the free city of Danzig. Then I had an opportunity of rendering a slight service to the German consul. A half-naturalized Russian stood beside me and was having great difficulty in explaining how it happened that he had both a Russian name and an American name. The consul could not possibly understand why a man had two names and naturally refused to visé his transportation papers. The Russian was in dire straits, for since he was not yet a fully naturalized American citizen he was obviously a man without a country, and as such had no passport. I looked over his papers, saw that his name had been legally changed through court action in New York and then explained to the consul how this was quite customary in America. The consul accepted the explanation and viséed the papers; the Russian was profoundly grateful while the others in the room looked on in amazement. When I left the building it was already dark, for in this latitude there are only a few hours of daylight at this time of year. As I wandered down the dimly lighted streets in this quaint city in the darkness at four in the afternoon it occurred to me that perhaps this excessive amount of darkness in every twenty-four hours was another free thing in this free city of Danzig.

My chief interest here, however, was the discharge of part of the cargo on the "Estonia." All during the day the crew on the ship and the longshoremen on the pier were kept busy unloading that part of the cargo intended for distribution in Poland. Later in the afternoon and evening I had a conference with Rev. K. W. Strzelec, our director of relief in Poland. Rev. Otto Lenz, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Lodz, Poland, Mr. Max Fuerster, a business man of Lodz, who had kindly offered to handle all matters of transportation, and several other pastors of Poland. In the comfortable parlor of the "Estonia" we considered all the problems of transportation and distribution. Once more I find myself unable to express to the readers of THE BAPTIST the overwhelming gratitude and profound appreciation felt by these brethren. The stories of unspeakable poverty, of incredible destitution, of unbelievable conditions of need which these men told me concerning their districts were such as to touch depths in my soul that I never knew existed. Where people mix sand with their water because they have no soap, where women never leave their houses because they have no clothes, where pastors and missionaries go barefooted even in December—the reader can imagine with what joy these men welcomed the arrival of the ship of fellowship. And when I pointed out again that all these gifts were to be distributed to all who had need irrespective of racial, political or religious differences; that all these gifts were absolutely free and that the Polish government had authorized their entry into Poland free of all customs charges, I wondered whether they also realized that, like myself, they were in the free city of Danzig.

Religion in Maine Schools

By REV. ALLYN K. FOSTER

I HAVE just finished three quite remarkable campaigns in Maine, at Colby, at Bates and at Hebron Academy. The tide of religious interest rose higher in these three schools than in any others for more than a year. "Statistics" are meagre, for some things are too big to measure, even as kilowatts report only a part of the current. In these three institutions in eleven days I spoke over sixty times and always to responsive audiences. You see I am trying to interpret learning, trying to piece together the picture puzzle of the "Ologies" into a unity which shows the pattern. No specialty like biology or mathematics or theology has the right to a final verdict upon the universe without consultation with all other specialties. Metaphysics not so long ago was the infallible pope of our thinking; then biology usurped the place and was a trifle more dogmatic than its predecessor; now psychology is displacing biology, but the closest observers of our time report that the tone of final authority as inhering in any one department of knowledge, is sensibly growing weaker. There is a widespread conviction that the monarchy or oligarchy of thinking, like our political arrangements must democratize, and that we shall only have authoritative judgment when all the sciences cast their votes in an assembly of the whole. The next great stage in education will be the age of interpretation, when part will be pieced accurately to part, and a real whole, a cosmos, will appear. Like our thirteen colonies after the Revolution, each commonwealth of knowledge has been sufficient unto itself, and tyrants have arisen in rapid succession. The Republic of Learning will some day have a central government, which will leave each state freer than before.

So my work falls into two sections mutually complementary. I make the effort to show how any natural study if pushed far enough, exhibits a process similar to God's processes everywhere else, and quite definitely in many cases leads straight to a spiritual interpretation of the universe. I ask for instance in classes in biology where we should be if we had no Bible, and if we were forced to form our conception of life's relationships from biological data alone, and when I talk of "the biological God" it is the same personal God that has dealings with us and of which the beloved Scriptures have told us all along. In short our college constituencies are going to be saved to the church not by exhortation or exorcism, but by interpretation. The appeal must be to the intellect "as well as to the feelings." Revelation comes down to earth from heaven with a message to man; science, true science with its accurate details and its judgments based upon the whole, begins with the earth and climbs toward the essential matters of revelation. Religion therefore is our reasonable service.

Bates College received me warmly and in numerous meetings responded splendidly. That splendid faculty from President Gray to the last instructor showed every sympathy possible. This faculty, as I can report from many another, is chiefly interested in the lives of the students. I should betray confidences if I told how tender was the manifestation of interest in students which these men and women showed. Someone is sure to ask "Do you have any conversions?" Well, here at Bates let me tell you of one, one worth all my two years of effort among colleges. A strapping, athletic, red-blooded boy, masculine from center to periphery, unreachable apparently by the usual religious agencies, came three times to the meetings on the first day. Everybody remarked the circumstance. The next day he got more in a class or two, and by that afternoon when interviews were due, he came, without an appointment, and said somewhat excitedly, "I want to talk to you." I saw what was coming and I took him to my room, set him squarely in front of me and said, "Now, what's on your mind? Shoot!" Then followed what I have no words to describe, but an incident that will live forever in my mind. Step by step, stumbling and with ill-concealed emotion that boy got it all out. I didn't help him, for I knew it would be better for him. It was veritably a soul coming to its birth, and when at last, the story was told, I reached out my hand and said, "Old man, then you have found Jesus Christ, haven't you?" "Yes, sir," he said, "You bet your life I have!" You may be sure that while I live I shall not lose track of that boy.

Perhaps the most important of all my meetings at Bates were in the dormitories, where large voluntary groups gathered around ten o'clock at night for prayer. Nothing has stirred me so deeply as these groups of stalwart young men, eager for God and his Spirit in them and on their campus, meeting in this way, seeking by prayer the release of divine power upon them.

At Colby much the same thing can be said. These two colleges always work me harder than any others, but where there is such genuine interest, the next speech dissipates the fatigue of the last. At Colby I had a full chance at the whole college, professors and students alike. I do not wish to see a more devout and earnest faculty than that at Colby. They are shaping life, and their teaching is the cure of souls. I was particularly struck with the number of men studying for the ministry. Let me say it again: Christian colleges like these are saving the religious and educational system in America. The great universities specialize and grow great departments—as President Butler said, teach man how to make a living, whether in Greek or agriculture; the Christian college interprets knowledge in terms of life and of religion. We have on the one side our great state institutions publicly owned and governed, in which religion in any vital way may not by law be taught. That means that the very great majority of our educated men and women, passing through their most sensitive period of life without academic recognition of religious forces and without the place of those forces upon them, are entering life spiritually unequipped for their tasks. It is not that these institutions oppose religion but rather that they refuse to make it of serious academic interest. It will be an anomaly in education some day that a university could give its highest recognition to a man who gave an accurate account of the physical forces at work in the metabolism of an amoeba, while it did not deign to undertake the study of the dynamics of those forces which play everlastingly upon the human spirit. On the other hand we have our Christian colleges in which the effort is distinctly made to add to exact and extensive knowledge the interpretation that inevitably leads to Christ. We do well to hearten these sacrificial men and devoted women.

My visit to Hebron Academy seemed to be the climax erected on what occurred at these two colleges. Here again there are no figures for the associational report. But this great thing happened; the feeling deepened with every meeting until the last. At that gathering my talk was on taking an active attitude toward the religious life. It was a straight evangelistic appeal ending with an urgency to confession and to concerted prayer. At the close by some automatic process some twenty-five boys came up and surrounded me on the platform. I saw something had happened and I suggested, "Why not begin our prayer group right here?" They agreed eagerly and standing as we were, that group lifted its heart to God, and boy after boy prayed his earnest prayer. Later in the evening at ten o'clock a request came for me and I went over to the boys' dormitory where practically every boy in the school had gathered. There a movement of prayer started that I believe will lift the whole level of that school. I tell you again, all over the country the hearts of our boys and girls are sound and wide open to a sane genuine gospel. God save us from being so busy here and there that we lose them!

Orthodoxy and Missions

By MORNAY WILLIAMS

ORTHODOXY is right thinking about God, His law, and his kingdom.

Missions are the sending forth of God's children to teach and to preach.

Heterodoxy is the opposite of orthodoxy, as a non-missionary church is the opposite of missions.

Unfortunately too often in practice, orthodoxy means my doxy, and heterodoxy, other people's doxy, and work and giving for missions mean working and giving for what I approve.

Now in a day like this when on all sides men are discussing and debating what they call the fundamentals of the faith and, not infrequently, accusing each other of heterodoxy, it is not out of place to consider the relation of orthodoxy and missions. Two questions arise: (a) Is supposed lack of orthodoxy a justification for not supporting missions? (b) Will orthodoxy be promoted by such a course?

For the present writer it would be impossible to define what the fundamentals of faith, that is, foundations, were, even if the task did not seem futile in the light of the Apostle Paul's assertion, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Taking this assertion as it stands it would appear that there was but one foundation and that it was finished—"is laid."

Starting, then, from that premise, what has our Lord Jesus Christ to teach us on this subject? The orthodox party of his day were the scribes and doctors of the law, commonly known as Pharisees. They were the legalist party, emphasizing the obligations of the law, to which they added a vast body of tradition. That this was their place both our Lord and his disciples attest, in spite of his numerous and severe denunciations of them. In the opening verses of the twenty-third chapter of Matthew we find Jesus saying both to the multitude and to his disciples, "The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat; all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do, but do not ye after their works, for they say and do not." If, then, we would endeavor to discover our Lord's attitude towards the relation of orthodoxy and missions, it is here we must look. Nor shall we look in vain. In the tenth chapter of St. Luke's gospel there is recorded a most illuminating anecdote. It had been a most significant day. The seventy, sent forth on their great mission, had returned with joy, and the Lord himself had rejoiced in spirit, and had given thanks to the Father that the Lord of Heaven and earth had had these things from the wise and prudent and had revealed them unto babes. Then, following on this scene of rejoicing, a man of the Pharisaic party asked a question, and, on Jesus' instigation, answered his own question and answered it correctly. Jesus himself being judge. But the manner of asking this question as to the way of individual salvation was so strange that the evangelist records it thus: "A certain lawyer stood up and tempted him, saying, 'Master what shall I do to inherit eternal life?'" Quite apparently the motive of the question was, as it is to be feared it sometimes is with modern inquisitors, not enlightenment but a trap, and when the Socratic method which our Lord employed in this instance had had its intended effect of self revelation to the questioning lawyer, the evangelist proceeds, "He, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, 'And who is my neighbor?'" It is not necessary to repeat the familiar parable of the Good Samaritan, which was our Lord's answer to this faint-hearted quibble, nor to point out how in the parable the unorthodox Samaritan is contrasted with the orthodox but indifferent priest and Levite. It might seem that the story was clear enough in its teaching that deeds not professions are the important things in God's sight, but in this case, our Lord departs from His usual custom and appends a moral, "Go thou and do likewise," a moral which would seem to give a most emphatic negative to the question. Is supposed lack of orthodoxy a justification for not supporting missions?

Surely the whole narrative is a clear and convincing commentary on another saying of our Lord, "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have we cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work ungenially."

Credo, or verbal statements of belief, are at best, but very imperfect and inadequate evidences of faith, and an orthodoxy which relies on them is as errant as its evidences. The just judgment proceeds on fruits, not words; it is the standard which our Lord prescribes for us, and his standard at the day of judgment.

Now the great commission—the making disciples of all nations—repeated in varying language in all four gospels, is the supreme command of our Lord, and the inescapable duty of his church. It is the will of the Father, and as it is carried out it carries with it the special blessing of obedience, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine," for orthodoxy in its highest sense is the result of obedience.

To turn, from this layman's attempt to treat the question from an expository standpoint, to conditions which obtain today in the world and the church, we are presented with a sad but not a strange state of things.

To any serious-minded observer of the churches in the lands nominally Christian, it must be apparent that for many years the lines of demarcation between the church and the world have been breaking down, not so much from the church overcoming the world, as from the world coming into the church. We Baptist folk, clinging with a truly creedal tenacity to a separation between church and state, have been too often interested spectators at the marriage of Respectability and Christianity. Then came the World War and the years that have followed, in which the nominally Christian nations have demonstrated to themselves and their neighbors on all roads (not merely that from Jerusalem to Jericho) how these nominal Christians could beat and kill one another and how they could hate one another afterwards. Is it a matter for astonishment

AN OPEN LETTER FROM A CONSERVATIVE

Dear Brethren in Christ Jesus:

Permit me a word in the interest of peace and progress.

I am known as a conservative in our denomination. I may be properly classed among the Fundamentalists. Without controversy I have held closely to the old-time doctrines of the Baptist faith. Sometimes it has been hard for me to keep still when I have read or heard that which I considered a departure from the truth. I can say, in all sincerity, I have preached the riches of God's saving grace with all my soul throughout all my ministry and have been heartily engaged with my brethren in every great enterprise of our denomination. For these simple reasons I ask to be heard now upon a matter which I consider to be vitally important to the best interests of the Kingdom.

I have just read the circular letter by my dear friend and brother, Dr. John Roach Straton, of New York. He and others who agree with him are sincere, noble, godly men. They unquestionably seek the highest good of our Baptist cause. In many respects I heartily agree with them. Just now, however, it seems to me that to insist upon, or to encourage a propaganda against the present leadership would be to divert the minds of our people from the great goal before us in this critical hour. Such propaganda would be most fatal, and in my judgment, well nigh a calamity. Brethren, I beg you not to do it!

As a mighty body of believers in Christ we were led to adopt a worthy program at Denver. As Baptists the majority rules. This five-year program was accepted by the denomination and its representatives. We entered upon that vast undertaking as one body in Christ. We are now in the midst of that great advance movement. Marvelous victories have been won. Tremendous advance has been made in all departments of our great denominational enterprises. Unheard of sums of money have been secured for the Kingdom. Thousands of souls have been won to Christ. Our educational institutions have been put upon a much firmer and safer basis. Great progress has been realized in the mission fields. God has set his approval upon our efforts. But the goal has not been reached. We are facing a crisis. To falter and fail now would bring disgrace to the denomination and dishonor to God!

The mission fields stretch out their hands to us in pleading pathos. The evangelistic department of our work in home and foreign lands calls for immediate advancement. Our universities, colleges, seminaries are yet inadequately endowed. Our ministers and missionaries fund is far from being sufficient for the vast needs. And so the whole work of the Kingdom so far as we are concerned as a great people awaits our united effort to reach the goal set before us. We must finish the task. The present pressing call is the finishing of the one hundred million dollar campaign. Nothing else should engage our attention now. No one should divert a single soul from the accomplishment of this great purpose. United we succeed, divided we fail!

Brethren, for the sake of our honor, our denominational loyalty, our interest in the salvation of the world, and constrained by the love of Christ, let us lay aside any differences relative to doctrine, leadership or methods and let us finish this blessed task through one great united effort. I do not, I will not surrender my convictions of truth. No man asks me to do that. But I hear the call of God, "Go forward!" So much as in me lies I am ready to co-operate to the best of my ability with my great denomination in reaching this goal. For his great Name's sake let no one of us in this critical hour of our history discourage or divert the minds of our people by setting before them a different goal!

Designate your gifts, if you must, that is your privilege, but let us have one goal, one purpose, one united effort on the part of all Northern Baptists from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In this vast undertaking to meet the world's need, in this momentous period of Christianity's witness to the nations of the earth, let not our Baptist brotherhood be found broken, weakened, defeated by division.

"Lord God of Hosts, Be with us yet, Lest we forget! Lest we forget!"

SHOULD THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION ATTEMPT TO ADOPT A CONFESSION OF FAITH?

It has been announced that action will be taken at the next meeting of the convention to get a so-called confession of faith adopted at that meeting.

1. We believe that an effort to get the convention committed to such action would not only be useless, but would lead to dissension and produce discord in the convention, greatly hindering the transaction of business coming within the province of that body.

2. Such an effort to get the convention committed to adoption of a confession of faith would be valueless because the convention has not the authority to formulate an official declaration of faith for the Baptist churches within its bounds and it would not be binding upon them.

3. The suggested confession of faith, that adopted by the pre-convention conference at Des Moines, does not designate the convention as a body composed of Baptist churches. (a) The articles composing the proposed confession are not distinctive Baptist views. (b) The confession does not differentiate the Baptist from other Christian bodies of believers.

4. Would it be wise then for the Northern Baptist Convention to attempt to adopt a confession of faith? It certainly would not. It has not the authority to do so, as its mission is only advisory, and not legislative, to the churches.

5. No confession is needed as the Bible has always been "the only rule of faith and practice."

"SHOOT ON THE WING"

The article by Rev. W. H. Adams in THE BAPTIST of Jan. 28 brings to mind an incident years ago, when Brother Adams was a missionary under the state mission board of West Virginia. The New River coal fields were fast "opening up"; a migratory mining population coming in; local churches in settled rural communities were supported by the farming residents; and "preaching appointments" in the opening nearby coal fields were being made from time to time, as a schoolhouse, an empty store-room or the shade of a hillside clump of trees, could be utilized for a preaching service; no attempt was made to organize Sunday schools or churches.

The state mission board was doubtful whether any good could be accomplished by sending a missionary into such fields, and at a meeting of the General Association that year, the matter was discussed; and Brother Adams was called before the board to give his observations and experience and to tell about the floating population on the coal fields. After telling that he had visited the coal fields, had made appointments from month to month, preaching at regular stations, but seldom to the same mining people; he told the board that, in preaching, he had to "shoot on the wing"; for, before another "appointment" many of that congregation would "float or wing" to some other coal-mining section.

Happily for all concerned, these pioneer days are in the past; and church buildings and schoolhouses have become a necessity at every coal mine; and the horse and the saddle-bags have been replaced by railroads, chapel cars, churches, and settled pastors.

The first gun for the Des Moines 1923 C. E. convention was fired at the University Church of Christ in that city on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 5, when Dr. Ira E. Landrith spoke on "A Forecast of Des Moines in 1923." At the close of the meeting an opportunity was given those present to register, bringing the present total to near the 500 mark.

The Chimney Corner

Up and Down Jacob's Ladder

WHEN young Mr. Doolittle heard that this story was to be written he insisted that it really ought to be called "The Seven Years for Rachel"; but personally, it still seems to me that "Up and Down Jacob's Ladder" will fix the moral of the story more firmly in your minds, so that a ladder against any building will henceforth make you look with new eyes and a warmer heart at the Jacob who may be carrying bricks up and down it—and who knows but that, like Mr. Doolittle, you may entertain angels unawares?

This fortunate circumstance came to pass because something was the matter with young Mr. Doolittle's roadster on the day of the story, and although the chauffeur crawled underneath the automobile, unscrewing all the things that might need unscrewing, and oiling all the things that might need oiling, it still refused to budge. So young Mr. Doolittle decided to walk downtown, otherwise you might never have heard of Jacob.

Mr. Doolittle, Jr., had so seldom walked downtown that he decided to go by way of side streets, and at a certain point off beyond the railroad tracks he saw rather a good-looking building going up, so good-looking in fact that he was astonished, since the neighborhood was entirely tenements and factories. Picking his way gingerly across the broken ground to a workman who was straddling a window opening, young Mr. Doolittle called out: "See here, my man, would you mind telling me what you are making here?"

"Sure!" said the workman cheerfully, turning to climb inside the building, "I'm makin' $5 a day, sir"—and with that he disappeared.

Thomas Doolittle chuckled: "When is an answer not an answer?" he said to himself, adding: "When it doesn't make sense, c-e-n-t-s!" But, nothing daunted, he picked his way over the debris toward a second workman, examining some architect's blue-prints. "Excuse me," Mr. Doolittle interrupted, "but what are you making?"

This workman laid a grimy finger on the blue-print: "See that spot? Well, I'm making that cornice on the roof; she juts out here and is dented in there. Going to be pretty, ain't she?"

"Um'm," agreed Mr. Doolittle doubtfully, and decided to try a third laborer whom he saw descending a ladder with a brick hod on his shoulders. But he had the surprise of his life when he asked for the third time: "Would you mind telling me what you are making?"

For this was Jacob! And Jacob knew what he was making! He nodded his head wisely and his eyes twinkled as he said: "Sooner I sees you walkin' over, I thinks 'Here's another of them Baptist gents come to hustle us up.' But say, mister, Jacobi he hustle with all the hustle he's got. For why? For because sooner Rachel's kids has this building to come on, then Rachel and he can have a marryin'! See?"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Thomas Doolittle looked at Jacobi with interest: "What makes you think I'm a Baptist? I didn't know it was stamped all over me!"

Jacobi grinned: "Sooner anybody comes nosin' round this here place it's sure to be Baptists watching how their Christian Center goes up! Course you're a speck younger'n some of 'em, but I tells Rachel as how I spots the same eager in them as she and I got over it!"

To his surprise Thomas Doolittle found himself asking: "And who is Rachel?"

Jacobi laid down his brick hod and wiped his hands on his overalls: "It's this way, mister. Me und Rachel been walkin' out together for goin' on seven year. But she won't never come marryin' me. For when first I goes proposin' on her, she plain sniffs, und says how she won't have a fellow what drinks up all his moneys in saloons. Und that was sure me, mister, drunk most nights! Then me und another fellow got jailed over nothin' much, but Rachel she won't marry no fellow what's been prisoner. So then you bet Jacobi walk straight for goin' on three long year, savin' his moneys; but if Rachel's mudder don't up und die, und leaves all them five kids on Rachel's hands. Yes, sir, five little bits of kids—babies und twins und so on. Und Rachel she can't come marryin' me mit five kids on her hands! So she says on me, 'Jacobi,' says she, 'there's other sweethearts in town for you,' but I says: "Not for me, mine Rachel!"

"So I just waits und waits on her, these four year, when along come this building. Say, see those there sunny windows? Well, they tells me how inside them windows should be something called a kindergarten, where little bits of kids is to sit on little bits of chairs by little bits of tables, und play safe und sound all morning long when mudders is most glad to get rid of kids at home. Now ain't that fine for Rachel when me und she gets ourselves married? Then see them side windows up on the third floor, mister? Well, that's a place what's to be a sewing room, where on afternoons little girls whose fingers is all thumbs will be learnt how to hold needles und sew. So ain't that fine for Rachel's kid sisters? Why sure! Now just walk this way, mister—see them windows, second floor back? They tells me how in that there room fellows will be learnt to hammer nails und be carpenters, which will be awful handy for Rachel's brudders. So now you see what Jacobi's makin', mister: a place where the kids roundabout here can be fetched up, proper—Rachel's kids mit all the oddsers. Und in that there downstairs front room will be a nurse for mendin' smashed fingers und colds in the head, und for visitin' sick folks roundabout. Also them big windows in the gym, where fellows can be kept from public poolrooms und where us old married couples is to sit for entertainments. So I guess me und Rachel has got reasons for feelin' friendly over you Baptists."

It was at this point that young Mr. Doolittle felt the first startling wave of pride ripple over him; suddenly he was overwhelmingly proud of being a Baptist! What a perfectly splendid thing it was for his denomination to be putting up this building in the neighborhood of tenements and factories where it was most needed. He shook hands with Jacobi heartily, and it was as if an angel had wrestled with him, for he went away saying to himself:

The Business Man's Prayer

LORD, give me vision that shall see

Beyond the profit of today

Into the years which are to be,

That I may take the larger way

Of labor and achievement; so

Help me fashion, staunch and sure,

A work my fellow-men shall know

As wrought to serve—and to endure.

I seek for fortune, Lord, nor claim

To scorn the recompense I earn;

But help me, as I play the game,

To give the world its just return.

Thou mad'st the earth for all of us,

Teach me, through struggle, strain and stress

To win and do my share, for thus

Can profit lead to happiness.

Guard me from thoughts of little men

Which blind the soul to greater things;

Save me from smug content and then

From greed and selfishness it brings;

Aid me to join that splendid clan

Of Business Men who seek to trace

A calm, considered working-plan

To make the world a better place.

Lord, let the faith of these be mine,

A creed creative, simple, true.

Let me but aid in their design,

Let me but share the work they do;

Teach me to hold this task above

All lesser thoughts within my ken,

That thus I may be worthy of

The name of Business Man; amen.

"Tom Doolittle, you're a nice sort of Baptist, you are! Model citizen, college graduate, and so forth; but as dead as a doornail about events even in your own city. Sat in church Sunday after Sunday, haven't you, old man, and heard about a thing called The New World Movement? But I declare if that Jacobi fellow isn't a million times wider awake to it than you are. Only last Sunday weren't they telling how Baptist laymen were backing this enterprise; how $20,000,000 must be paid in by April 30? And all the time you thought of indefinite work somewhere or other—whereas now, old tightwad, you're on to the fact that all over the map are these very definite Jacobis watching and waiting for the Doolittle family to do something! All right, sir, just keep your eye on us during the month of March. We've said goodbye to the Rocking Chair Fleet forever..."

The Young Reserves

Pussy Wants a Corner

HER name was Katrinka. Surely you agree with me that it was a dear name, unusual, too, and quaint. Somehow it seemed to fit Katrinka from the crown of her head where she wore a shawl to the soles of her feet, where she wore patched shoes far, far too big for her. Indeed, I think it was those shoes plus that shawl which made the other children in school poke fun at Katrinka's name. It was such an easy name to poke fun at, provided you were the thoughtless, heartless kind of girls and boys who attended that particular school.

"Hello, Cat!" they would snicker at her as she walked past them. And Katrinka would hang her nice little head and wish she could sink through the earth. But the earth is as hard as some children's hearts, and not one single inch did it open—so there stood poor Katrinka, helpless and awkward and ready to cry.

Pointing at the shabby shawl over her head and even coming near enough to stroke it, they sang tauntingly:

"I love little pussy her coat is so warm
And if I don't hurt her she'll do me no harm;

I'll sit by the fire and give her some food.
And pussy will love me because...I...am good!"

Katrinka would stamp her big clumsy shoes furiously: "You no good—you bad! Bad!" And she would run away, while all those dreadful childrep sang in chorus "Katrinka is a 'fraid cat! A 'fraid cat! O poor pussy! Poor pussy!"

So before long, dearly as Katrinka loved school itself—with the neat rows of desks where you wrote things with pencils—she decided that all the king's horses could never draw her inside those walls again to be made fun of. So she stayed at home. Or rather, she stayed in the alley. For it really could not be called a home: that one dingy gloomy room where all her family cooked and ate and quarreled and slept. Katrinka never dreamed that America was a land where a little girl could not hide in her own alley if she chose to stay away from school. But of course you and I know that there is such a person as a School Visitor to come inspecting you with questions a mile long: Why this? and why that? about your absence.

Katrinka's parents scolded her hard and fast: "For why had she been so wicked a girl and hid in the alley? Did she want pollicemen to fetch her to jail? Huh? Answer me that?" they roared, adding that America was a place where you must go on the schoolhouse, yes, every morgen, as regular as the sun—

So Katrinka never said the littlest word about girls who poked unpleasant fingers at her outlandish shawl or made unpleasant jokes about her name. Like the heroine she really was, she marched bravely back to school wearing the same old shawl and every noon those hateful voices chanted: "I love little pussy, her C... O... A... T... is so warm." But Katrinka seemed to have turned to stone: stolidly she munched her pretzels and listened to them singing. Sometimes of course she placidly marched away, and this was so provoking that the Naughty Six invented a new torture,—they blocked Katrinka's pathway where she started to go and they sang sneeringly: "Pussy want a corner?"

It was great sport for them. But rather dreadful for Katrinka. I imagine some of you are muttering: "Wish I'd been there to fix those little wretches.—"

But the truth of the matter is that you were there, all of you, just around the corner, where our very own Christian Center stood. And one surprising day when Katrinka was being chased along that street she ran in through our front door, little dreaming that all her troubles were about to vanish into thin air. She held the door-knob tightly and poked out her exasperated little tongue as far as it would go at the six small maidens standing outside that glass door shouting: "Pussy want a corner? A corner? A corner?"

It was there that we met her, you and I, for our missionary hurried out to discover the trouble—and all that she could see was seven tongues poked out as far as they would go. On general principles she objected to such a sight, and told Katrinka then and there that tongues were meant for talking and eating, but as for poking—and why was she using hers that way, anyhow?

Katrinka found herself sitting on the missionary's lap telling the whole absurd story of being too poor to wear shoes and coats and hats like all these other Americans, so day in and day out she had only mutter's oldest shoes to shuffle around in and grossmutter's poor left-over shawl, and even when she tried to stay home from the torture of being called "cat" pollicemen came and fetched her back.

"Oh me, oh my!" she wailed. Then one by one her sobs ran themselves down, and the missionary said soothingly: "Katrinka dear, if you had only laughed at all those horrid little girls I believe they would never have teased you again! Supposing that tomorrow when they call you 'Pussy' and stroke your 'warm coat' you pretend to purr and say 'Me-ow! Me-ow!' They will be so completely surprised and amused. And as for clothes, how would you like to join a class of girls upstairs this very minute who are learning to sew their own clothes? Suppose you dry your eyes and we'll go up and watch them."

All the world grew brighter for Katrinka from that very hour. No sooner had she seen other little foreigners sticking needles into bits of cloth than she knew that she herself would love to sew. After sewing the class played games, to stretch the muscles which had been cramped too long. And after the games there were stories. Katrinka loved it all so much she almost felt as if she sailed home—so light and airy was her heart!

Moreover, the next day after school, when the Naughty Six screamed: "Hello, you old cat—scat! scat! We're going to chase you," they had the surprise of their little lives when they chased Katrinka into the doorway of a certain house. "Pussy want a corner?" they questioned tauntingly; but behold, there stood poor pussy grinning from ear to ear and crying: "Me-ow! Me-ow!"

For once in their lives the Naughty Six stood rooted to the sidewalk, plainly struck dumb, while Katrinka, still smiling cheerfully over her shoulder at them, calmly opened our front door and walked inside. For even then she knew that she had found a corner in America: one dear beautiful place where she would always be welcomed and loved and helped!

"WHAT DOES FOLLOWING CHRIST MEAN?" Matt. 16:24-26; John 10:27-30; 12:26

Note

If following Christ means anything, it means a stewardship of life, possessions, prayer, and time. Stewardship Program III by O. F. Laegeler is presented below.

Stewardship Principles and Programs

PROGRAM III

"God's Trust in Youth." 1 Cor. 3:1-17.
Hymns:

"Oh, Master, Let Me Walk with Thee."
"Oh, God, Who Workest Hitherto."

"The next great adventure is with man's spirit." The needs of the hour have demonstrated that only as we "seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness" shall these needs be met. The recognition of God as owner and man as steward of all life is the modern revelation of God's desires for his children.

Discussion of Topic

I. If all that we have and earn and are is his given in trust to us, then we must administer rightly the trust given to us as his stewards. "Christ and the world are waiting to see what can be done by a generation of young Christians trained and consecrated from their youth to put first God's Kingdom and his righteousness."

To dispose of a portion of God's possessions in his work must be the first task of a Christian steward. "Giving is God's remedy for selfishness and Christian stewardship is one of his approved methods of developing Godliness—likeness to God, who so loved that he gave." The Scripture says, "Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Mal. 3:10.

"Freely ye have received, freely give."
Matthew 10:8.

MY MONEY CREED

I Believe

1. My MONEY is mine only in trust. It belongs to God, just as I do.

2. This MONEY is not filthy lucre. It is not the devil's coin. It is stored-up human power. It is so much of myself which I can set at work in China or India or New York or Colorado.

3. God is counting on this money for his work. It is to build his churches and preach his gospel, train his workers and send them out, teach and heal and save his children, and help bring in a new kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood and peace.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

4. To spend my income rightly is one of my first tasks as a Christian. Until I settle this, my prayers and confessions will be like saying, "Lord, Lord," and not doing the will of my Father.

5. I should set aside a definite portion of my income for the church and the service of others. I do this in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty over all my material possessions. I do this to guard against my own selfishness. I do this because it is business-like. Giving by impulse without system does not accord with the importance of this work.

6. THE PROPORTION to be set aside for these purposes should not be less than one-tenth of my income. The Old Testament enjoined the tithe in Israel, and surely I am receiving far more from God than did the men of my former generation. Nevertheless, one-tenth is not to be the limit of my giving. I should not begin with less than one-tenth. I ought to give more if I am able.

7. I should invest this money for God as carefully as in my temporal business and keep strict account of this fund. I should study the church work that I may give wisely. I should give systematically. I should pray with my giving.

II. The blessedness of giving. In 2 Corinthians 9:6-15, Paul gives a long list of the blessings that come to the liberal giver. Read the passage, and notice the following:

Verse 6. God provides enough for all our needs.

Verse 7. God's approval rests on us.

Verse 8. God gives us ability to help in many ways, and not alone in giving.

Verse 10. God bestows a great increase in right living in all the relations of life.

Verse 11. Our giving brings praise to God from others.

Verse 12. Our giving brings joy to others, and they thank God both for his goodness, and our generosity.

Verse 13. Our giving proves our spirit of willing obedience to God.

Verse 14. Those who are helped by our gifts love us greatly for our generosity. Verse 15. We ourselves are given a grateful heart to God for his unspeakable gift to us.

Questions for Discussion

Discuss the fairness and right of the seven points in the "Money Creed."

How do you determine the proportion to give? To spend? To save?

Hymn:

"Take My Life, and Let It Be"

An Evening with Chicago Oskies

A Geisterian Party

"I loved her before I ever met her, and after I met her, my ideals were realized." So was Miss Edna Geister introduced to the young people of Chicago by "Pa" Phelps. They all succumbed to her charms, despite the fact that attention was called to their various beauties, such as small feet, gracefulness, good looks, brilliant minds, red hair, 'n everything.

The best looking men and women marched in a grand parade, displaying their grace by skipping around the room until they could go no longer.

Several very thin people and some medium sized ones demonstrated "pick up your chair and walk," only they were inclined to run. (Needless to say, the medium ones won.) And such music! Up and down the scale they went, as the men kneeled on the chairs and looked at their partners.

By mental telepathy one young man guessed (?) what the others were thinking of; ghosts were seen everywhere as Shakespeare was dramatized, but especially on the floor.

The young ladies showed just how well they could catch young men, and vice versa, much to the amusement of the on-lookers, and to the chagrin of those left without partners.

Another interesting feature was—ice cream and kisses, yes, each one being a prescription, for on the wrapper of each kiss—candy kiss, to be explicit—was printed:

"If you want to keep sweet attend

B. Y. P. U. of A. CONVENTIONS
Ask an Oskie."

The Oskies of Chicago are very willing to follow the rules, so watch for them at St. Paul.

If you want to know more about the Geister parties, consult future editions of THE BAPTIST.

His Gift and Mine

OVER against the treasury
He sits who gave Himself for me.

He sees the coppers that I give
Who gave His life that I might live.
He sees the silver I withhold
Who left for me His throne of gold,
Who found a manger for His bed,
Who had not where to lay His head.
He sees the gold I clasp so tight,
And I am a debtor in his sight.

As each book of the ten is read the individual will report to headquarters and receive for each unit a seal to be placed on the card over the proper figure. On completion of the ten units the individual will send the enrolment certificate to headquarters and receive in return a Young People's Reading Course Certificate. No examinations are given on the units. No fees are required in this course.

Correlation with the Missionary Reading Course

The Young People's Reading Course has been worked out in cooperation with the Department of Missionary Education. The two mission study books in the Young People's Reading Course may be credited on the Missionary Reading Course for young people, which is a part of the national reading contests issued by the Department of Missionary Education. The points gained by reading the mission study books in either course may be counted to the credit of the Young People's Society and also to the credit of the church as a whole.

It is also recommended that there be read the young people's missionary bookshelf contained in the model missionary libraries as promoted by the Department of Missionary Education, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

No Interchange of Credits

Since no examination is required on the above books, there is no interchange of credits either on the Standard Teacher Training Course, or the Christian Culture Course. There is no exception to this rule. If you desire credit it will be necessary for you to register for the study courses.

All work will be directed from the office of the Director of Young People's Work, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Books may be obtained from The American Baptist Publication Society at Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Los Angeles, Kansas City, Seattle and Toronto.

OREGON

The tithing commissioner for Oregon orders a large supply of tithing pledges, stating that he hopes to reach the state goal by July. Rev. G. H. Young is director of religious education. Special attention is also being paid to Bible study and life service activities.

ALABAMA

The state secretary reports 209 new unions organized during the year. Twelve district associations were organized, making a total of twenty in the state that have regular conventions. Mr. J. E. Lambdin is state B. Y. P. U. secretary.

NORTHERN INDIANA

The associational organization suggests certain goals local unions may adopt: 1. Double up membership. 2. Each member an active worker for the society. 3. A Baptist trained leaders' class. 4. Every member enrolled in the Quiet Half-hour League. 5. One-fifth of the membership tithers. 6. Every member attending every church service. 7. One or more members enrolled in the Life Service League.

Why Not a Graded Church?

By WILLIAM H. MAIN

NO. 2. THE METHOD

IN THE article of last week we discussed the importance of a graded church. In this one we desire to study the method which one church has used with success. The plan was put into operation about fourteen years ago, and is in full operation now with growing interest and efficiency.

We might call it educational evangelism, which has as its aim the turning of the life to Christ, beginning with the first word of instruction spoken to a child, and continuing to the last message of comfort to the aged.

We must not limit Christian experience to that very important moment of yielding the will to Christ, for it means, because of instruction, an intelligent surrender of the whole life to our Lord.

A boy ministered in the temple.

"Samuel!" It was a Voice calling, and the boy arose and went to Eli.

"I did not call, my boy, go and sleep again."

"Samuel!!"

"No, no, my boy, you are only dreaming, I did not call you!"

"Samuel!!!"

"Surely, Eli you called me. This is the third time I have been called."

Then Eli perceived that God had called the child.

A sleeping child! We all know these sleeping children, for they are still ministering in the temple. Lovable children who entwine themselves around our hearts—children of greatest possibilities.

A calling God! The little faces grow serious, the lips quiver, the eyes fill with tears. God is calling them.

A sleeping guardian! "No, no, my child! you are too young, you do not understand the importance of this—go to sleep again."

An aroused guardian! Three calls from God to a child, and Eli woke up. God was calling Samuel to a great career.

Years ago the then pastor of the First Church of Philadelphia, went to a little suburban church to preach. In the audience was a boy of thirteen, trained to attend services of worship. He heard and heeded the call of God in that sermon, and gave his life to Christ. He became the head of the great and useful Crozer family. Surely every student who goes out from the Crozer Theological Seminary ought to emphasize the conversion of children.

Can we begin too soon in molding Christian character? It is like carving the image of an angel out of a piece of marble—a difficult and slow process. Character forming is like an icicle—the character and color of each drop of water has its determining effect upon the whole. If each drop be pure the icicle will be pure, and reflect the glories of the sun.

We have been taught that the more complex the organism the slower the process of development. Surely, then, we need to begin on life as soon as life begins. Alexander's army was said to have been mighty because the soldiers had been born and raised in camp. There is such a thing as atmosphere in the moral and spiritual realm.

Now, as to a practical method.

Link the children to the service of worship.

Dr. Lyman Abbott once said that as a young student in New York he attended many churches but seldom heard anything said to children, and little about them. Many others, as they look back, can say the same thing.

The habit of church attendance is most important, and the earlier it begins the better. You can hold the children's attention if you talk to them and then give them something to do as a part of the service.

Organize a children's choir. In almost any church it will not be difficult to have it number more than fifty. What better service can three or four musical people render than to teach children to sing praises unto God!

Have a processional. This gets the children to church early, and marching in together is much better than to straggle in, as the manner of many older people is. When the time for the children's part comes, let them bow their heads and softly sing a brief ascription.

Then preach a little sermon to the children. One of the best ways is to use some object from which you can draw a lesson. Always use a verse of Scripture as a text. The object sermon is not so difficult as one might think, for often, such is the interest of the older people, they will bring you objects to use. This has become a habit in the church I have in mind.

I have used many hundreds of objects in the past fourteen years, a few of which I venture to mention: Compass, phonograph record, magnet, photo plate, shears, lily, Easter egg, magnifying glass, good and poor watches, try-square, lamp, piece of cable iron, sling, tuning fork, weapons, wireless outfit, bulb of flower, cup running over, ear of corn, cups of salvation, eye glasses—far and near vision—blocks of wood bound together, sugar and coal, alarm clock, bags with holes, lock and keys, bunch of keys, scars from nails, dollar bill (any pastor can borrow one), sponge, candle, hour-glass, rags, thermometer, bread, horse-shoe, snare, scales, salt, perfume, coins, tape-measure, flag, tele-

International Uniform Lesson for March 19

THE DOWNFALL OF ISRAEL

Lesson: 2 Kings 17:1-18. Golden Text: Proverbs 14:34

Setting

Following the death of Jeroboam II, the last great king of Israel, one ruler followed another in quick succession, only to be assassinated after a short period. The chaos of the times religiously is graphically described by Amos and Hosea. Weakened by internal conditions, the nation stood in more than usual danger of its enemies, Assyria and Egypt. Judah, with which the tribes of Benjamin, Simeon and Dan had been merged, constituted the Southern Kingdom. It survived the stronger Northern Kingdom by nearly 133 years. The reason for this lay in its very weakness and isolation. In 588 B. C. it was taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar.

The Lesson

Israel and Judah were nations under God's direct guidance. Their rulers were chosen by him and prophets sent to them to reveal his will and the duty of the people as a nation. In return for this they were to be Jehovah's special people, worshipping him and putting all other gods from before them. Minor punishments came upon them in the form of blighting mildew, famine and failure of crops. Prophets warned and continued to warn in the face of threats, but "the children of Israel did secretly things that were not right against Jehovah; they built them high places (for idolatrous purposes); they set up pillars and Asherim upon every high hill, and under every green tree; and there they burned incense in all the high places as did the nations whom Jehovah carried away before them; and they wrought wicked things to provoke Jehovah to anger; and they served idols . . . they would not believe, but hardened their necks. . . they rejected his statutes and commandments that he made with their fathers. . . and they followed vanity and went after the nations that were round about them."

First God sent to Israel the prophets, preaching, warning but "they would not hear." Then was manifested the just anger of a just God. "Therefore Jehovah was very angry with Israel and removed them out of his sight: there was none left but the tribe of Judah only." Thus ended the Northern Kingdom in the "Lost Ten Tribes."

Leading Thoughts

1. "They followed vanity and became vain," what humankind follows after that it becomes. 2. The wages of sin never go unpaid. They maybe deferred but the account is surely settled in the end. 3. "The soul that sinneth it shall surely die" (Ezek. 18:4), so also the nation.

Our Own Folks

Rev. David Heagle

Rev. David Heagle was born in Amsterdam, N. Y., April 15, 1836, and died in Chicago, Ill., Feb. 13, 1922. His father was Jacob Heagle and mother Susan S. Heagle, to whom were born six children, one of whom, Mrs. Frank Leonard of Denver, Col., is still living. Dr. Heagle was educated in the grammar schools and colleges of the country and proved himself a student of high capabilities. He was married on June 22, 1865, to Dorcas Nichols Heagle. From this union, there were born two children, both of whom are still living, Mrs. Susie Kirk of Springfield, Ill., and Mrs. Willard D. Brode of Chicago, Ill. When the Civil War broke out, Dr. Heagle became a chaplain in the First Regiment of the Michigan Sharpshooters. He was recognized to be an able preacher and teacher of the gospel of Jesus Christ. on account of his scholastic standing, the degrees of doctor of philosophy, doctor of divinity, and doctor of laws were conferred upon him. During his active ministry he occupied some of our most important Baptist churches, the last being the church in Valparaiso, Ind. In all of these churches he did a splendid work. Dr. Heagle was one of the founders of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary of Chicago, Ill., in 1913, and for six years was one of its most faithful and most efficient professors. He was not only a teacher, preacher, and educator, but an author as well, having written a number of books upon religious and other themes. Some of these books are: "Translation of Bremen's Lectures from German," "Do the Dead Still Live?" "The Blessed Hope," "The Lord God of Elijah," and "Moral Education." The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. J. Ross, on Feb. 15. Brief addresses were delivered by Bishop Fallows, a life-long friend and comrade, Dr. James P. Abbott, upon behalf of the seminary, and Dr. M. P. Boynton, on behalf of the Baptist Minister's Conference of Chicago. Miss Frances Fredrickson rendered two appropriate solos. The whole service was a testimony to the character, life, and achievements of a faithful brother and a true minister of Jesus Christ.

World's Student Christian Federation Conference in China

THE 1922 Conference of the World's Student Christian Federation will be held at Tsing Hua College in Peking, China, April 4-9. The general committee of the federation will meet the week preceding, and Dr. John R. Mott, the chairman, is now on his way to China. During the weeks following the conference the various student centers of China will be visited by international deputations of conference delegates who will convey the Christian message of the federation to the students of China. In this way the influence of the conference will be extended throughout the country. Regarding the importance of the conference in China at this juncture, Dr. Mott has expressed his views in an editorial in The Student

World, a quarterly issued by the federation for its special purposes. We feel sure our readers will agree with him as to the large spiritual possibilities inherent in such a gathering at this time, when the supreme need of the Oriental nations for Christianity is felt as never before. His statement follows.

Dr. Mott on the China Conference

The conferences of the World's Student Christian Federation have exerted an enormous broadening, mediating, unifying, and vitalizing influence. They have given to students of many lands the world-wide horizon of Christ; they have brought about in countless cases a right understanding and feeling between the students of widely separated and sharply differing nations; they have welded into triumphant solidarity a multitude of coming leaders of various races and communions; they have been generating and propagating centers of altruistic and spiritual forces which have profoundly affected the ideals, the outlook, and the service of students the world over. The approaching conference of the federation to be held in Peking, China, April 4-9, 1922, assumes in some respects greater significance than any of its ten predecessors.

There is a marked appropriateness in the coming together in China of the representatives of the Christian movements of the student world. China has ever been a land of scholars. In no other nation for such vast periods of time have students wielded so great power and influence. In recent years China has come out of her position of isolation. Her ancient system of education has been abandoned and one thoroughly up-to-date is rapidly taking its place. Students of the New China, as of no other country, are today streaming out over the world, and are most responsive to the voices and demands of the modern age. Chinese students at home, not simply those who are studying abroad or who have studied abroad, are keenly interested and concerned in international questions and relations.

The Peking conference is one of great timeliness. For a decade the attention of the federation has been fixed largely upon Europe. This was inevitable. Now suddenly the center of gravity of the world's interest and solicitude has shifted to the Pacific Basin and notably to the Far East. With an intuition and a strategy due to more than human power, the leaders of the federation decided to meet in China before it was known that the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armaments and on the Far Eastern Questions was to be held. Whatever the ultimate conclusions of the Washington Conference, the coming gathering in Peking will assume larger meaning. In vain "the association of nations" at Washington, in vain the League of Nations at Geneva, unless their work be supplemented by the world-wide and intensive spiritual efforts of such Christian movements as the federation. The drawing together in good-will and unselfish cooperation of rival nations and races is not alone or chiefly a matter of external political understandings or arrangements but one of internal spiritual changes. The federation and all the national Christian student movements of which it is composed are, therefore, striking at the heart of the international problem in pressing their program, which seeks to influence aright by power human and superhuman the ideals and outlook, the attitude and motives, the ambitions and spirit of those who tomorrow are to become the leaders of the nations. It would be difficult to overstate the extreme importance of having such a conference meet at this fateful moment in Far Eastern affairs and in relations between Orient and Occident.

The conference in China is urgently needed. In pressing their invitation, the representatives of the Chinese Christian students set forth vividly the facts about the Renaissance of New Thought Movement now sweeping among the studying youth of that land. Their plea is that the students of China must hear a positive, convincing Christian message at this time from their fellow-students of other lands or be lost in the materialism which other western leaders have been presenting to them.

Not only do the Christian student movements of China need the help of the movements of other countries in this time of crisis, but the movements of the Occident need to come into living contact with the vital and promising bodies of earnest Christian students of the Orient. While and five mission stations. Reports from America and Australasia, and parts of South America and Africa will be represented, the Peking gathering will be predominately Asiatic. The flower of the men and women Christian students of China, Japan, including Korea, India, Ceylon, Siam, and the Philippines will be present. It is believed that the effect on the federation itself will be profound and far-reaching. Without doubt the federation today is too largely Occidental. It needs that which will come from the message, experience and leadership of the prophetic and Christlike leaders and members of the student movements of the East.

Dr. Allyn K. Foster at Broadus College

By EKANAH HULLEY

Dr. Foster spoke to the students and faculty on Sunday morning, Feb. 12, and again in the afternoon he addressed the women and the men of the college in separate groups. At 11 o'clock in the morning he spoke to a packed house in the Baptist church and in the evening to a crowded house in the same church. On Monday he addressed the entire school at the chapel service and then in the different class rooms he spoke to the classes. In the evening immediately after dinner he again spoke to the student body and faculty. Further than that he lived among us for three days, a perfect exponent of all the truths that he was preaching.

As the student secretary of the Board of Education and as a messenger and ambassador of Christ, Dr. Foster is true to his great mission of assembling the scattered fragments of truth and uniting them into one harmonious whole for the benefit of the students and even the teachers of our colleges, seminaries and universities, who sometimes get lost in the labyrinth of tradition or in the blind alley of some branch of learning which they themselves have detached from the rest. Clear as the bell on some ocean buoy that rings out the message to the mariner, so his voice invites the hearer to keep to the channel that carries the water of life. True as the magnetic needle that ever points to the lode star, so he points to Jesus as the author of all truth and life and the Savior of mankind. Free from dogmatism, splendidly trained for the service, rich in experience, stripped of the trammels of ancient tradition, young in heart, buoyant in spirit, full of sympathy for the young; interested in their problems, he comes fresh as the breezes of the spring time, carrying the message of life.

His presence in Broadus College has been a distinct blessing to the college community and to the people of the town as well. The longer he stayed with us, the more enthusiastically was he received and there is no question in the mind of the writer that he is making a very deep impression upon the lives of the students and teachers in the college and university world.

A Week for the Children

Herbert Hoover says: "The race marches forward upon the feet of its children." As Baptists we have faith in those children who have been "shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace," who "do the will of God from the heart," who have the "shield of faith" and the "breastplate of righteousness," and have "the sword of the Spirit."

Children's Week, April 30 to May 7 is a golden opportunity to become more intelligent in impressing our ideals on the child-life of home and church. Send to Miss Meme Brockway, director of children's work and obtain free of cost fitting programs for public observances during this week of nation-wide interest in child welfare. American Baptist Publication Society, 1703 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

months were First Church, Seattle, 335; First Church, Tacoma, 250; White Temple, Portland, 228. Results will be wired by each of the Sunday schools to the other two every Sunday morning so the results will be announced from the pulpit. The object is to awaken activity on the part of the members of the school to secure permanent growth.

FIRST SWEDISH CHURCH, Tacoma, Rev. Charles Asplund, pastor, held two weeks' of evangelistic meetings in February under the leadership of Rev. Gideon Sjolander, of Portland. After the evangelist left, Rev. Earl Cochran helped the pastor a few days.

SOUTH TACOMA CHURCH, Rev. D. W. Thurston, pastor, has had a debt on the building since its erection in 1912. Feb. 12, the mortgage was burned and a dedicatory service held. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. F. Watson, executive secretary.

MAINE

A SERVICE OF DIGNITY, tenderness and beauty was conducted by Dr. Birnie S. Hudson, pastor, at Free Street Church, Portland, on a recent Sunday. It was the annual roll call to which absent members sent expressions of love, while practically every member in the city was present. A tender tribute to the memory of those who died during the year was given by Miss Gould, prayer was offered by Deacon Lamson, new members received the hand of fellowship and all joined in the observance of the Lord's Supper, while the spiritual presence of him who gave the ordinance was deeply felt. The work and influence of Free Street Church and its pastors have been a power for good in Maine. By its liberal contributions its influence extends to every department of denominational activities.

THE MID-WEEK SERVICE at First Church, Waterville, as suggested by the new pastor, Rev. Walter Quarrington, is one of wide interest. The church, its friends and its children come together at 6 o'clock for a supper, served at a low price, followed by thirty minutes of what is called the "fun period." At the last meeting the musical clubs of Colby College gave an interesting program. Then came the missionary dramatic half hour in which an Indian program was put on under the direction of Mrs. Whittemore. A prayer meeting of great interest closed the evening. A program for the children is carried out in another room. The new pastorate is opening with hearty cooperation on the part of all.

SINCE THE COMING of the new pastor, Rev. G. J. Gilbert, to Ft. Fairfield in the early fall, the church has been making remarkable progress. A revival of great power first manifested itself in a prayer circle among the men who met once a week for prayer with a definite list of names as subjects. Immediately the women formed a similar circle. Twenty-nine baptisms have occurred at Sunday services in January and February. Over fifty decisions for Christ have been made. The Sunday evening congregations have outgrown the church building. The church has greatly increased its contributions for missions as well as for home expenses. The attendance at prayer meeting is large. A B. Y. P. U. has been formed. Pastor

NEVADA-SIERRA CONVENTION

REV. J. D. CHAPPELLE, the new pastor of Alturas, is doing a splendid work. The attendance at all services has increased 150 per cent and a number of baptisms have taken place.

UNDER REV. C. H. H. HAYDEN, Elko Church, Nevada, is encouraged and there are additions to membership and increased attendance at all services. This is an important field and has the only Baptist church between Winnemucca, Nev., and Ogden, Utah.

REV. C. MOORE, THE NEW PASTOR of Susanville, Cal., has won a high place. The church is growing in all departments. Rev. Thos. Flynn, of Bishop, Cal., and Rev. C. C. Rickman of Fallon, Nev., are doing excellent work. If these new men can be kept on the field for three years, there will be a constituency in this convention field that will mean much to the kingdom of God on earth.

THE NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED at Winnemucca, Nev., by the late Mr. Reynolds, is prospering under the leadership of Mrs. Meda Hostetter, evangelist. She is serving until a regular pastor can be secured. The churches at Reno and Sparks are doing well. Rev. Brewster Adams is the popular pastor of Reno and after a pastorate of twelve years has as great a hold on the community as ever.

THIS WHOLE CONVENTION has been revived and prospects are splendid for a good increase in membership. The continuation campaign is being put on by the director of promotion, and the people are responding as much per capita as the Baptists of any state in the union.

OREGON

REV. MILO G. BENTLEY, state evangelist, has closed successful meetings at Lents Church, Portland, Rev. E. A. Smith, pastor, at which there were sixty professed conversions and forty-five additions to the church membership. Meetings at Brownsville resulted in fifty-six conversions.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

FIRST CHURCH, SEATTLE, First Church, Tacoma, and White Temple, Portland, Ore., began, Feb. 5 a contest in Sunday-school attendance to continue until April 9. The Sunday school showing the greatest increase in attendance over the average of the previous six months will win a silver cup. Averages for the past six and church are looking forward with hope and with the purpose, "that the Bethel Baptist Church shall become a real Bethel to hungry souls."

NEW JERSEY

EVANGELIST WILLIAMSON has closed a successful campaign in Baptistown. The church and community were stirred mightily by the power of God. Dr. Williamson is now working in Camden. From there he is to conduct a union meeting with the Presbyterian and Baptist churches of Wildwood. He has open dates for the post-Easter season and may be addressed, Pitman, N. J.

NEW YORK

FOR THE PAST TWO YEARS, Geneva Church, Harvard Griffith, pastor, has been placing emphasis on its educational program. It now has three teacher training classes with a total of twenty-eight pupils. One class is closing its third year's work. The other two are taking first year work; one meets at the Sunday-school hour and the other does intensive work for a week at a time, and takes an examination at the end of the week. The week-day religious school, started in September, has proved a success. The pastor superintends the school and teaches the highest grade. The men's club, organized by the pastor, recently began its third year with an attendance of seventy-five men; this club is now the strongest men's club of the city. Congregations have been good and the work of the church is now moving toward Easter, with the expectation of an Easter ingathering.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS CHURCH, New York City, reports morning congregations large and evening congregations increasing. Several people were admitted into the church Feb. 5 by letter and five by baptism. The annual report showed an increase in contributions. In 1911, when Dr. Harold Pattison took the pastorate, the offerings for benevolence were $1,100; last year they were $9,000. For current expenses in 1911 the offerings amounted to $9,000; last year $14,000. The young people have started out with good prospects for 1922. Sundays at 5:30 they have a tea to which they welcome strangers and all who care to come. This is followed by the Young People's Service at 7 o'clock. The pastor recently preached at Northfield, addressing the pupils there, and later in Vermont preaching to the students at Middlebury College. At the last monthly missionary meeting Dr. Eleanor Campbell told of her work at Judson Health Center, and at another meeting Mr. Anton Hok gave a graphic description of his work among Czecho-Slovaks.

MRS. MARY AUSTIN DIED JAN. 24, at the age of eighty-six. She was a member of the Baptist Church of Morton for sixty-three years, and a teacher in the Sunday school for over fifty years. Her life was marked by deep spiritual fervor and a great faith. She was greatly interested in missions and liberally supported this and all other enterprises of the church by giving her tenth and more. The Morton Church is rich in having possessed her.

PENNSYLVANIA

Ten Mile Association

The Ten Mile Association is one of the most distinctly rural associations in Pennsylvania. The territory is richly underlaid with coal which is beginning to be developed. The incoming mining population will, in the next few years, add greatly to the obligation resting on the churches.

At the annual meeting of the Association held with Jefferson Church in October, Rev. Paul Brown, of Jersey Shore, was called as associational pastor, beginning his service Nov. 1. Mr. Brown has strong evangelistic qualifications. In the early winter he conducted meetings with the New Freeport Church, giving to that struggling body a new vision of possibilities. He has closed meetings at Jefferson where there were 70 confessions and is now conducting evangelistic services at the East Bethlehem Church.

A program of missionary education is being arranged for May. There will be six teams of workers, each team appearing once in nearly every church of the association. These teams will be composed of local pastors, laymen, returned missionaries and representatives of the board of promotion. The stereopticon will be largely used.

As a means of keeping the work of the denomination before the churches, the association is publishing a monthly paper and in conjunction with it is being issued the Keystone Baptist.

Jan. 1 Rev. J. Stanton closed his pastorate with Bentleyville and Pigeon Creek churches to become pastor at Berlin, N. J.

Rev. R. B. Dunmire, of Ohio, has accepted a call to John Corbly Memorial Church at Whiteley, and will begin his service on Apr. 1.

KEYSTONE ACADEMY has just begun the second semester with an increased enrollment, the total for the year being ninety-three. Confidence in the Academy has been restored since the education board of the Pennsylvania General Convention has taken control of the school. The graduating class numbers fifteen, most of whom are planning to enter college. Among the students are a son of Dr. and Mrs. Wm. A. Leslie, Baptist missionaries to Africa, a son of Dr. Edgar T. Shields formerly missionary of the Baptist Board to China, and son of Rev. G. G. Gogolyak, missionary to the Magars of Ohio. Nine students are preparing for ministerial or missionary work.

FIRST CHURCH OF CONSHOHOCKEN celebrated, Sunday, Feb. 5, the twentieth anniversary of the coming of Rev. Abner James Davies to its pastorate. Mr. Davies came to the church fresh from his graduation at Crozer Theological Seminary, and was ordained in the old chapel on April 10, 1902. This is the longest pastorate in its history. During these two decades, people and pastor have worked together in providing new auditorium, social and Sunday-school buildings. The close of the war saw the last of the building debts discharged. The new structures have been of great help in the deeper matter of the advancement of the Kingdom. The anniversary Sunday was made memorable by the baptism of sixteen candidates by the pastor, the fruits of a campaign of personal evangelism which has been conducted since the first of the year. On the Wednesday evening following, the C. E. Society tendered a reception to all the church to mark the twentieth anniversary and to welcome the new members. Mr. and Mrs. Davies have received many expressions of congratulations.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE EXERCISES OF DEDICATION WEEK of the Park Church, McKeesport, Rev. W. R. Hill, pastor, reached a climax Sunday evening, Jan. 22, with the formal dedication of the fine edifice. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Dr. Emory W. Hunt, president of Bucknell University. The pastor led the responsive service in the act of dedication and the prayer was offered by Rev. W. C. Chappel. Rev. M. B. Sloan and Rev. J. T. Davis assisted in the evening's program.

REV. A. J. R. SCHUMAKER, director of religious education, is in charge of the work at Ambridge for a month, filling the pulpit, calling on the members of the congregation and making a careful study of the field.

A NEW FEATURE of the extension-work of the Beth Eden Church, Pittsburgh, is a Sunday evening meeting for the children of the community, from 7 to 8. The pastor, Rev. E. W. Rumsey, has been giving illustrated sermons.

EMMANUEL, N. S., PITTSBURGH, Rev. J. A. T. Marsteller, pastor, recently welcomed three new members. The first part of the threefold goal adopted by the church is to gain fifty new members by May 1.

CLARION ASSOCIATION engaged a missionary pastor at its last session, the State Mission Society paying half the salary. He is laboring with the Franklin Union Church, the only one in the association without a pastor. Jones, at New Bethlehem; Smalley, at Clarion; Bealand, at Old Union; Gwyn, at Corsica; Kennedy, at Homewood, and the writer at Kittanning, are among the older pastors. Thomas, at Richardsville; Van Gorder, at Brookville; McKinley, at Deannville and Oakland; Freeman, at East Brady and Kaylor; and McPhail at Salem, Montgomeryville, and Pine Creek; and Wheeler, the missionary pastor are among the new men. Reports are encouraging from nearly all fields. The spirit of God seems to be working and souls are being saved. Kittanning has just celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary by a week of meetings. All the former pastors were present, and other participants were Rev. J. E. Darby, of New Brighton, Rev. H. J. Whalen, of Greensburg, Rev. C. F. Smalley, of Clarion, and Rev. Harvey Jones of New Bethlehem. The celebration began with the Lord's Supper on New Year's Day, when 90 received the hand of fellowship, a part of nearly 150 who have been received in the last two months. Within the last four years, the church has paid off its indebtedness, bought a parsonage, put in a new furnace, renovated the church building, added a balcony seating 160, increased the pastor's salary $690. It has a large tithe's league, and a number of 50-50 givers. It gave out a large number of Christmas baskets to the needy, has taken the full freshman class in the theological seminary at Ramapatnam, India, to support for the next three years, is conducting a mission in Kittanning, has five ordained ministers in its membership besides the pastor. Every Sunday night some of its members are preaching the gospel. One Sunday night recently members were preaching in six different places. All departments are flourishing and both school and church facilities are overtaxed.

BAPTISTS OF ELIZABETH HAD A FIRE, other than the one in the furnace, at a recent service. It was the burning of the note of indebtedness incurred shortly before the world war, at the completion of a basement for Sunday school and social uses. This last payment makes about $1,200 provided—since the impetus of the New World Movement—for local property improvements. The celebration was carried forward on a week night at an indoor picnic amidst a grove made up of former Christmas trees. It took the form of a reception also to new members of the church who have been received in such large numbers by Rev. Eugene Neubauer, pastor, that the church is declared to be the first in the Pittsburgh district to reach the evangelistic goal of the Northern Baptist convention. Twenty-one came at one communion. Beulah, the newly organized outlying church, has set Jan. 29 for the opening of special meetings; in which the evangelists are to be Secretary W. C. Chappell and Rev. Eugene Neubauer.

NEBRASKA

AFTER A RECENT SERMON by Rev. B. J. Minort of First Church, Alliance, on "God a Propagandist" three young people offered themselves for Christian work—two young men for the ministry and a young woman for missionary work. One of the young men, consecrated to the Lord as a baby, was a son of the pastor. Work is prospering among railroad men and First Church plant will soon have to be enlarged or progress will be arrested. The building is filled at every service and usually packed in the evening. Additions to membership are frequent.

KANSAS

FEB. 12 DR. WILSON MILLS closed a two weeks' meeting at Hamlin Church, Rev. R. N. Hillyer, pastor. The church received a definite uplift. It received fifteen members, two by experience, thirteen by immersion.

AN EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN was opened Feb. 19 at First Church, Kansas City, by Rev. J. N. Edmundson, of Atwood, Ill.

AFTER A LONG ILLNESS, Mrs. Flora E. Everett, mother of Mrs. Bowerman, wife of the pastor of First Church, Kansas City, died Feb. 11. Brief funeral services were held at the residence. Dr. and Mrs. Bowerman accompanied the body to Quincy, Ill., where funeral services were conducted by Rev. R. V. Meigs of Central Church. The interment was in Woodlawn, overlooking the Mississippi.

IOWA

REV. JOHN H. TRELOAR is at Humeston and the work is opening promisingly.

A SUCCESSFUL CHURCH SCHOOL of missions has closed at First Church, Creston, Rev. J. Hamilton Woodsum, pastor. Five classes, according to age, were held Sunday evenings the hour before the regular evening service, the B. Y. P. U. voting to give up its regular meeting for the period and form one of the classes. The class leaders were trained through a course of study conducted by the pastor in fall. The missionary committee, Mrs. J. McNees, chairman, had charge of the arrangements. The men's class, taught by Prof. O. W. Crane, superintendent of city schools, and the women's class, took the "Survey" as their textbook. "From Survey to Service," "Playing Square with Tomorrow," and "Under Many Flags" were the textbooks used by other classes. Special effort was made to present the lessons in a concrete manner, using as many class members as possible to assist. Maps were put on screens with pictures cut from Missions showing scenes in lands represented. Bulletin boards in the church vestibule were covered with striking missionary pictures. The average attendance for the course was 102, the lowest being eighty-seven, the largest 125. At the close thanks was given to the teachers and a request made for a church school of missions next year.

THE MINISTERS' EVANGELISTIC QUARTETTE—R. D. Kinney, I. E. Edwards, W. G. Jones and D. Alexander—of Cedar Rapids Association, are holding meetings in churches of the association. They began Jan. 1 at Central City and recently closed at Vinton. Feb. 20 they opened a campaign at Grundy Center, thence to Cedar Rapids. The morning is used for singing in business places, afternoons for Bible study and prayer, the evening for evangelistic effort. Each man preaches in his turn and all sing at all services. The quartette will use its vacation period this year for an evangelistic engagement if invitation is received. Address Rev. W. S. Jones, Vinton, Iowa.

MICHIGAN

DEAN SHALER MATHEWS was heard at First Church, Lansing, Feb. 12, on "Manufactured Gods" and "The Rising Generation and Its Moral Task."

REV. CLARENCE W. KEMPER of First Church, Lansing, reports Sunday evening services built up on equal attendance with the morning services.

THE LANSING COUNCIL of Religious Education was recently formed including representatives from all churches, the Ministers' Association, the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. of the city. From this larger organization was chosen the Lansing Board of Religious Education. Rev. Clarence W. Kemper was elected president of this board. Plans are under way for fostering children's week, daily vacation Bible schools and a city school of principles and methods of religious education.

Hillsdale College

An offer of $100,000 for the endowment of Hillsdale College is a part of the distribution of $1,250,000 to a number of educational, Christian and other organizations by the Ball brothers of Indiana. The provision for Hillsdale is notable not only in amount, but also in that it was unsolicited and unexpected, from men who were never students in the college. Some years ago the same men, without solicitation, endowed a professorship at Hillsdale in memory of their father and mother, and on several other occasions have given moderate sums to the college.

Hon. Lewis Emery, Sr., of Pennsylvania, an early student at Hillsdale, went through the financial condition and accounting system of the institution, and said that it needed now the income of $600,000 additional endowment to "capitalize" the difference between present fixed income and the outgo required for a balancing budget sufficient for a present-day college, without calling annually for current-expense gifts. He made an unsolicited offer of $100,000 for this end. In late years he has endowed the professorship of chemistry for $50,000, has given $10,000 for its better equipment, is paying for the equipment of a large additional laboratory whose building is nearly complete, and says that he will provide any additional funds which the department of chemistry can use to good ends, in addition to this last offer of $100,000 for general endowment.

The construction of the new chemical laboratory, required by an increase in students, and a radical rebuilding of the heating plant which serves five of the seven college buildings, are under the same contract. Both are imperative needs. The college did not have sufficient funds applicable to such improvements, and the Ball brothers gave the major part of the cost before they made the above named offer of $100,000.

Board of Woman's Society Meets

The executive board of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society met in Woodward Ave. Church, Detroit, Feb. 14. Mrs. Bowen, secretary-director was present after a severe illness. A cordial invitation was sent the district board to hold its annual meeting in Michigan. Mrs. Leslie Smith reported having secured two more associational secretaries and organized two new chapters. Miss Howell, children's secretary, sent a personal letter to all children's bands and links had been sent to all leaders. Three new companies had been organized. Miss Brounley, missionary secretary, has resigned because of poor health. Miss Cooper spoke of a new departure in the work of the women of the Detroit Association. The associational officers with ten other ladies form an auxiliary to the Detroit Union. One of the committees has charge of securing voluntary workers to help the missionaries. Miss Heaton spoke of the work done by the W. W. G. girls in White Cross work. Mrs. Weaver needs old cotton, pieces of gingham, flannelette and silk. Her committee meets second Thursday of each month in Woodward Ave. Church. Day of prayer will be observed by women of the Detroit Association on Feb. 24 at Temple Church, Detroit. A supper and rally of W. W. G. girls will be held in the evening. The inter-denominational day of prayer will be held in St. Johns Church, Detroit March 3. Mrs. Chas. Richards, Mrs. Daugherty and Mrs. Ingersoll were appointed to prepare a program for basket meeting to be held March 21 at First Church, Detroit.—JANET BURGESS, Cor. SECY.

ILLINOIS

THE VOM BRUCK evangelistic party, of Chicago, conducted evangelistic services at First Church, Waukegan, Jan. 29-Feb. 12. 241 cards were signed by new converts, reclaimed persons and in consecration. The week previous to the services, cottage prayer meetings were held and during the services each day groups met to pray for the meetings. A feature was made of the music. Many will join the church, in some cases entire families, as a result of the meetings.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES led by Rev. M. F. Gilbert, with Rev. J. L. Meads preaching closed at Willisville. Fifty-one were converted. Five received into full fellowship and twenty-four are candidates for baptism.

THE CHURCH at ALTON is prospering under the direction of Miss Helen K. Wallace. Congregations have increased during the nine months that Miss Wallace has ministered here. Miss Wallace took the pastorate of the Alton church last May upon the death of her father, Rev. O. H. Wallace, who had served the church but one month before his death. Miss Wallace was asked to serve the church until April 1, 1922. At the present time more people are attending church in Alton than for some years. Seven were baptized on a recent Sunday evening.

Y. W. C. A. Lectures in Chicago

Miss Bertha Conde, inspirational lecturer on the National Board of the Y. W.

C. A., will be in Chicago March 21-31 under the auspices of the Metropolitan Religious Education Committee of the Chicago Y. W. C. A., to conduct a noon-hour series of lectures on "A Renaissance in the Christian Life," at Central Branch, 59 East Monroe St. The course will consist of five lectures, as follows: March 22—"The New Proof of the Old Faith"; March 24—"The New Stewardship"; March 27—"The New Christian Career"; March 29—"A Cure for the Ills of Society"; March 31—"The Christian in an Unescapable World." Both men and women will be admitted to the course, which is especially planned for church workers and leaders of young people. Registrations will be received at Central Branch, 59 East Monroe St.

A second series of four lectures for Evanston and North Shore women will be held at different Evanston residences at 10:30 o'clock March 21, 23, 28, and 30, when the topics will be respectively "The Social Hunger," "The Social Center," "The Social Fabric," and "The Social Service."

Miss Conde has been for many years a leader in the Christian student movement throughout the world, representing American students on the executive committee of the World Student Christian Federation. She is the author of several books, among them, "The Business of Being a Friend," and "The Human Elements in the Making of a Christian."

OHIO

ZANESVILLE: After over three years' successful work, Rev. S. E. Davies has resigned from Fair Oaks Church to accept the pastorate of First Church, Darlington, Wis., his work there to begin April 1. Rev. O. L. Martin, First Church, is giving a series of talks on "Why Men Do Not Go to Church." At Market Street the pastor, Rev. Clarence M. Eddy, is giving sermons on "The Prodigal Son Up to Date." The B. Y. P. U. is successfully working the group plan. Evangelists Kramer and Mitchell begin a campaign here March 5.

OBERLIN: Rev. H. T. Hill, a former pastor, is supplying First Church. Prof. Geo. D. Hubbard, of Oberlin College, has spoken on themes suggested by his recent visit to China.

BOWLING GREEN: Eight persons were recently baptized and plans are on for a revival in March. Since Rev. C. J. Hazen and his wife, formerly Rocky Mountain missionaries, came to labor here, Jan. 29, 1921, membership has almost doubled. An optimistic member of the church and choir has been elected city mayor.

ATHENS: THE FIRST CHURCH. Rev. Homer C. Smith, pastor, is a new one holding services in the music hall of Ohio University. It has contracted for a $5,000 property. At a recent Sunday morning service $600 was raised toward the first payment of $1,000. Athens is the county seat and the student body of the university numbers 1200.

NEW STRATTSVILLE: Sunday school has more than doubled in attendance in the last year, with a men's class averaging seventy and a women's half that number. There are thoughts of enlarging the two-room building. Although the village has been practically unemployed for over a year all church bills are paid, including the pastor's salary.

MT. CARMEL DEER PARK CHURCH has progressed despite the fact that members are on salary and have had wages decreased. Thirty-one were added to the membership last year and twelve more are about to unite. A new furnace has been installed, church building redecorated outside and in and other improvements made.

PORTSMOUTH: Feb. 17 Pastor Kayser closed his fourth year with Calvary Sunday school and church. Attendance has increased; a modern parsonage has been built and the church rebuilt.

Cleveland Notes

The Cleveland Ministerial Conference and the trustees of the Cleveland Baptist Association united in a complimentary luncheon to Dr. and Mrs. A. R. Stark, Monday, Feb. 6. For almost ten years Dr. Stark has been pastor of Glenville Church. Ten years ago he found it a struggling cause and a burden to the denomination. He leaves it with a modern church building and a growing membership that make it a real asset to the denomination, and a source of influence for good in the city. During his pastorate Dr. Stark has won a large place in the affections not only of his own people, but in denominational circles in the city and state. A host of friends follow him with their best wishes to his new home in Cambridge, where a united people await his coming with high anticipations for the future.

Rev. H. C. McLendon, to the great regret of his people at Calvary, has severed his connection with that church. He leaves behind him a united and enthusiastic people. His intention is to spend some time in Bible conference and evangelistic work.

A new Italian chapel, recently purchased by the Cleveland Baptist Association was dedicated Sunday, Feb. 5. The beginnings of this new work are most interesting. In order to make it possible, four men in a new Italian settlement undertook, some months ago, to build a chapel without any assistance. Two of them mortgaged their homes in order to get the necessary finance. The undertaking proved to be too much for them, and the association has come to their rescue, and purchased the building. A great interest has been awakened among the Italians in the neighborhood, and the opening services augur well for a successful missionary enterprise. Rev. Vito Cordo is the missionary in charge.

The recent workers' training schools conducted simultaneously in the Euclid Avenue Church and the Christian Community Center, were splendidly successful. In the Euclid Avenue Church alone there was a registered enrolment of about 800. The Publication Society provided a faculty of seventeen people. Under their leadership the classes grew from the opening exercises until the closing meeting. It is hoped that we shall be able to secure a religious educational secretary who will follow up this work in the individual churches.

Notes from Columbus

Tenth Ave: Dr. V. S. Phillips, pastor, is preparing for an evangelistic meeting in cooperation with the evangelistic board of the state convention. Congregations have been on the increase and the Sunday school doing splendid work.

Memorial: Dr. G. R. Robbins, pastor, just closed a meeting with Rev. Earl Favro, evangelist. The leadership and singing of Mr. Fulton, a local man, helped very much. Ninety-one cards were signed. Forty-seven persons are expected to unite with the church.—Perhaps others later. Sixteen go to other churches.

Linden: Pastor V. P. Powell is in special meetings with good prospect of results. Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. growing. Mr. Powell just closed a meeting at West Jefferson in which twelve were added to the church.

Tabernacle: T. F. Sowers, pastor, baptized several. "In the midst of a tremendous revival." Will begin series of meetings Mar. 12. Very happy in the outlook.

First Church: Dr. D. F. Rittenhouse, pastor. Budget has increased from $5,500 to $21,000 during present pastorate. Has organized two groups of "Secret Service" men and women to work for the growth of the church. Is emphasizing "tithing."

Gibbard Ave: Charles Bebb, pastor. A quiet revival spirit prevails in the services. One or more have publicly confessed Christ each Sunday this year. The pastor preaches to the whole Sunday school. The morning sermon is especially prepared for the boys and girls. Sunday school has grown to be more than double the resident church membership. Will begin series of evangelistic meetings soon, with Rev. G. D. Billeison assisting the pastor.

Hillcrest: Rev. E. E. McFarlane, pastor, has recently come to the field. Is conducting evangelistic meetings which promise good results. The members are rallying to his aid. Seven have accepted Christ since his coming.

Hildreth: Rev. G. D. Billeison, pastor, has received eight members since recently coming to this church from Louisville, Ky. The attendance at Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. is increasing as is the attendance at the morning and evening services. The outlook is good on this difficult field.

Southern Ohio Letter

By J. W. WEDDELL

From Oberlin to Marietta, where your correspondent is now acting pastor, is something of a leap—the length of the state, but it is still in Ohio, and from one goodly historic point to another. In a general way it is from the top of the "Underground Railway" to the bottom. Both places are under strong college influences. Marietta College and campus are just across the street from the Old First Church and the atmosphere makes one feel at home. Here Dr. Geo. R. Gear, still pastor emeritus in his eighty-first year, wrought for so long a time; here Rev. I. N. Carman and his musical family preached and sang the gospel, his scholarly son, Dr. A. S. Carman, now of Chicago, after a lapse of years following his father for a cherished decade in the ministry; here the eloquent Dr. L. Kirtley had his last full pastorate; here Dr. John F. Mills, following the writer later at Davenport and now serving in California, built the handsome stone edifice of the church in the heart of the city; here Rev. H. T. Houf, the popular young pastor at Granville, spoke his ringing message, and here Rev. C. H. Stull expounded the word with rare skill till called to be director of evangelism, a service which he is rendering with conspicuous success across the state. This is the home of the Ewatts, Villers, Leonard Riley, and, close at hand, George Burlingame. They are straight, evangelical Baptists here—if there really are any other sort—and they love the truth, the whole of it. It is a privilege to minister to such a flock, 730 strong. Cambridge and Caldwell are near at hand and Zanesville is just above; strong Baptist centers, well manned.

I have just been to Ironton, exchanging with the successful pastor, Rev. M. A. Summers, who, under the Ohio evangehistic plan of pastoral interchange, which Doctors Stilwell, Brelsford and Stull have inaugurated, has been the fortnight preacher at Marietta. Rev. S. J. Cleeland, now of Mt. Vernon, prepared the way for him as he did once before for your humble servant at Dover, Del. It is interesting territory you pass on the way, leaving this city where the Ohio Company first launched in 1788. I have been down to pay my respects to the memorial stone where the Muskingum flows into the Ohio—Blennerhasset Island, close to Parkersburg a few miles below Marietta. It seems strange that so desolate a mud bank, though with a farm-house or two upon it, should once have been the scene of the bower of beauty that drew thither Aaron Burr with his wild ambitions. Old Newport is near at hand. Point Pleasant of Revolutionary fame and fine old Gallipolis are glimpsed on the banks of the Ohio, though on opposite sides of the oddly winding stream. Metamoras, not far distant, is pastorless just now. Middleport and Pomeroy are a surprise, stretching along the river, their smokestacks belching forth the signs of an active industry. Before you get to your destination you touch Catlettsburg and Ashland, Ky., of like commercial ambition, with coal mines and oil and gas wells in every direction. Huntington, W. Va., is the great city of these parts.

Last of all, a flying visit to Louisville to speak a time or two to the students of the seminary on Bible study themes gives one a stirring glimpse of how strong southern Baptists are in their new men for the ministry. Four hundred there are besides a goodly number of elect women under Bible instruction, and the air is full of ozone. Who can address such an alert company without being uplifted? And no one can go into the scintillating atmosphere of the great classes under Professors Mullins, Robertson, Carver, Powell, Wayman, and others without feeling the thrill of it and wishing in these vital days he were back in divinity halls. Well, while the work lasts we shall never get far away.

Evangelism in Wisconsin

By EVERSON R. MACKINNEY, Director

Ontario Pastor Hartsough: "Am assisting U. B. minister in meetings. Have held two weeks of meetings with high-school pupils, and two weeks with the grades, in Ladies' Guild Hall."

Rhineland, Pastor C. J. Bergstrom: "We have secured Ian MacDonald, the blind evangelist of Duluth, Minn., to help us."

River Falls, Pastor Bowe: "We plan to hold a Bible conference in the near future."

Wild Rose, Pastor Mansfield: Omits evangelistic meetings until after Easter to engage in the Continuation Campaign.

Janesville, Pastor Pierson: "Shall either go into a union effort or hold a week of meetings later."

Campbellsport, Pastor Taylor: "We shall either have meetings in the near future or rely upon an intensified campaign of personal evangelism. Prayer and personal work are the vital essentials."

West Allis, Pastor Parsons: "Am to have the University Evangelistic Band, March 3-5."

Takernacle (Milwaukee): Pastor Dordward will be assisted by Dr. Hoyt of Belden Avenue Church, Chicago, the last week in March.

Rev. Harold Olson, of Woodville, is holding meetings at Cady Creek, an inland town.

Pastors Vreeland, of Ogdensburg, and DeVries, of Wisconsin Rapids, have arranged to each help the other in meetings.

Pastor Robert Lincoln Kelley is scheduled for a week-end mission at Superior, assisting Pastor Deake.

Baraboo: Pastor Savage will be in a union meeting in March.

Hudson: Pastor Robbins expects Pastor Deake of Superior to assist him in meetings to be held in the near future.

Brethren, let us hear from you regarding your plans, or news of meetings if you have held them. We are ready to serve you in any way possible. We have the names of many Wisconsin pastors who are willing to assist in evangelistic meetings. You will receive a communication with suggestions in a few days. Let us each pray for the others daily, that we may have sure leading in this great campaign for winning people to our Lord.

More City Mission Reports

Minneapolis

By JESSE J. RUNYAN

IN the city of Minneapolis, 380,582 population, the Baptists have an aggressive work. We have eleven American churches (including two Negro), three Swedish, one German, one Norwegian-Dane, one Slovak, three missions run by churches, two missions conducted by the Baptist Union and plans under way for opening a third.

During the last five years we have developed one of our missions into the Lake Harriet Church, that commands the interest of the community where it is located.

The Slovak Church has been organized with a membership of eight-five and is now worshipping in its own building on property worth $10,000.

Since the coming of Dr. N. B. Henderson to the University Church, three years ago, project for a new church building has been undertaken. This building is now about half completed, and the work under Dr. Henderson's leadership is proving an effective means of reaching our large number of Baptist students at the University of Minnesota.

Buffalo

By E. H. DUTTON

PROTESTANTISM in Buffalo faces certain collapse unless her ministry to the new-American population is adequate and efficient. For the native Americans in Buffalo have increased only 10 per cent in fifty years, while the influx of foreigners has resulted in a total increase of 400 per cent. Today three-fourths of our population is of foreign birth or foreign parentage, and their children grow up as a rule in neighborhoods which Protestant churches and Protestant families have deserted.

The Baptists are not first or second, but fifth in point of numerical strength, but they are doing as much as all other evangelical bodies together to prevent the collapse of Protestantism. How are they doing it?

First, by giving unanimous support to the New World Movement. They attained the highest percentage of any of our larger cities in their effort to reach the quota assigned. The work of the Buffalo Baptist Union has profited greatly by the movement, although we have come to a time of retrenchment that threatens serious loss to strategic spiritual interests.

Second, by entering upon a new stage of practical unity and cooperation, in which the strong bear the burdens of the weak, and all move forward together. The volunteer service method by which the independent churches assume responsibility for certain neglected groups is one form of expression of this spirit.

Third, by planning to capture the "church of the future," the boys and girls, through work which heads up in the director of religious education and the boys' work director of the union. Last summer we conducted twenty church vacation schools.

Fourth, by giving first place to evangelism. More than a score of evangelistic campaigns were conducted last autumn—most of them in November, which was observed as evangelistic month. Baptisms and the net increase in membership of our churches were larger the past eighteen months than for the ten years just preceding.

Fifth, by challenging successfully some of our sister denominations to face and meet the spiritual crisis of the city before it becomes a tragedy.

Saint Paul

By E. A. VALIANT

THE capital city of Minnesota has thirteen organized Baptist churches and five mission stations. Reports from the different fields are very encouraging. Baptist pioneers look upon the situation as most promising. Many of the churches have increased in membership. The first unit of a new building enterprise is under construction in the Lake Park district, where Baptists are the only denomination on the field and where they ought to thrive, as it is the home of our Bethel Institute and theological seminary, of which the esteemed Rev. G. Arvid Hagstrom is the president.

Two methods of work adopted by the Baptist Union of St. Paul produce excellent results: First—The services and help of the superintendent on one of the weaker fields. In this cooperation the Immanuel Church was put on its feet and the Cypress Street, in its beautiful new building, is fast coming to the front as one of the strong churches of the city. Second—In co-operating with a church or mission field in the support of a young woman missionary who gives part of her time to the church and the balance of the time to the general work in the city. A great wave of enthusiasm is fast sweeping over St. Paul on account of the coming of the Baptist Young People's Union of America's Thirty-first annual convention in June, and the German Baptist Triennial Conference in August. On Sunday morning, Feb. 12, the Cypress Street Church made good on the slogan "100 per cent of the resident members of the church registered in the B. Y. P. U. of A. convention." It took just four minutes to kick the goal, and a few more minutes brought it up to 120 per cent. Then about an hour later the Woodland Park Church registered for the same convention 185 per cent of the membership of the church. This makes a total of 800 registrations for these two churches. Who's next?

that the churches—the Baptist churches, and indeed all Protestant churches—find themselves in a very similar situation to the world in general with increasing divisions, increasing burdens and growing discouragement?

Brethren we have all sinned; let us all repent. "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments."

This is his commandment, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

A Graded Church

scope, idols, electric bill, papyrus, coral, acorns, strings, hands of clock, cocoon and butterfly, pins, picture film, fountain-pen, calendar of year, diary, ring, rotten heart of tree, counterfeit coin, carbon, Turkish fez, seashells, the right hand, goad, apple blossoms, maple sugar, army kettle, paper sheep-fold, oriental mill, paper serpent, will and testament, brick, weather-vane, chestnut burr, stone from step of pyramid, light under bushel, violin, life insurance policy, letter and seal, beans, broken vase, electric bulb, medicine case, root and stick, pruning knife, gold and gold-plated rings, pocket-book, vine and branches, faded flowers, true and false diamonds, valentines, free transfer, violin string, handle and tools, water-jug, thumb prints, cup of cold water, iron cross, electric battery, crown, veneered wood, coal and slate, U. S. bond, rose, knife, time-table, wooden cross, and other simple objects that can be found all around us.

Now have the children sing. This is greatly enjoyed by them and also by the older people. In the Bible-school session it has been the custom to have the children tell about their sermon of the morning.

Now some one will say that such a morning service must be very long. Not so. Allowing ten minutes for the talk to the children, and thirty minutes for the other sermon—this is always time enough—the morning service need take but an hour and a quarter. Do not have the children leave the worship service when their part is finished. Teach them the sacredness of the whole service, and, incidentally, self-control. In all these years we have never been disturbed by the children during the entire worship service.

Have a week-day training class. But do not call it that! Let the children come directly from day school, and then turn them loose, the girls in one room, the boys in another. Have games of all kinds, anything good to limber them up, and don't be afraid if they yell. The church officer who said: "I don't like this! This chapel was dedicated to God!" changed his mind when he heard the reply: "Yes, and we are dedicating these young lives to God! What a happy coincidence!" Lives are more important than buildings.

After the children are physically tired have them assemble for singing. Here is an opportunity to rehearse the music to be used on the following Sunday. Have a story period which always greatly interests the children. Then let the pastor have an instruction period, teaching spiritual truths, which ought to be closed with prayer. It is well to have the children organized, with officers and business meetings. Such a gathering will become one of the great events of the week.

What next! Graduate them! Into what? Here is just where we are in danger of loss, for from thirteen to twenty is the crucial period of youth.

Graduate the girls into a girls' club. Our girls' club has never been so prosperous as now. There are all sorts of classes, and the gym floor to which they go with delight.

Graduate the boys into a boys' club. Have classes of all kinds, an address on current events by the pastor, and have a competent physical director, for work in the gymnasium. Basket ball! Our boys just love it.

Now assign places in the church auditorium where the girls' club may sit, and another place where the boys' club may sit. This has worked wonderfully well, but lately we have noticed one girl leave the assigned place for the girls' club, and one boy leave his assigned place in the boys' club, and later be seen together on the back seat of the church. This seems to be catching, too. But the number in the assigned places does not seem to grow less.

By all means let the young people form a Sunday evening chorus, and sing, and help sing. But what of the spiritual effect of all this? The very best. The boys, girls, and youth have learned to love the church. It has become the social center of their lives. They are being instructed in the best things, are led to Christ and into the church, and they stay there. Many of our church and Bible-school officers have come through these organizations mentioned.

The more I think about it the more I get out of patience with the prodigal son, and the more I admire the elder brother, because he stayed home, and minded his own business.

The American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill., is experimenting in the creation and distribution of small leaflets and pamphlets which present in brief readable form the best religious thought of the day. Especially does it wish people to see how the gospel of Jesus fits into our modern life. Pamphlets, priced for distribution at two cents each are on such subjects as "Why I Believe in God," "Why I Believe in the Bible," "Why I Believe in the Church." Further information may be secured by addressing G. L. Chamberlin, Executive Secretary.

A new book by the ever-versatile Mr. Babson. Like every other book of his, it is worth while. The Friend on the Road, by J. H. Jowett.
New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

A little volume of spiritual counsel drawn from the four Gospels and taking its title from one of the fifty-nine brief chapters. Each of these chapters has first a striking title, then a text and a meditation, marked often by a sudden and unusual insight in Scriptural meanings. The volume is somewhat after the pattern of those which came from the pen of George Matheson and which had so wide a reading. Dr. Jowett's messages are always comforting and inspiring.

Bible and Spade, by John P. Peters. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.75.

A most fascinating account of the significance of recent archeological discoveries in Palestine in their relation to the interpretation of the Bible. The book will be a revelation to those who have not kept posted. Pastors especially cannot afford to neglect this kind of a book. It is one of the volumes of the Bross lectures, delivered before Lake Forest College, the present series having been given in 1921. Especially interesting are the chapters on "History and Prophecy," "The Exploration of Palestine" and "New Testament Times."

Blackboard Efficiency, by R. F. Y. Pierce. New York: F. H. Revell Co. $1.50 net.

This book embodies a suggestive method for the use of crayon on the blackboard. It does not pretend to teach drawing, assuming that the reader knows a little about that, but gives many sketches and lines, quickly drawn, appealing to the imagination, and showing how pastors and teachers can by such work convey a lesson. The movie film has reminded us of late how much we learn through the eye-gate. Consequently a book like this, rightly used, will be very useful.

Mr. Bryan has the courage of his convictions and realizes that world religion must rest squarely upon the validity of its revelation."

PITFALLS OF PROGRAM-MAKING

The hackneyed character of their programs is the most frequent criticism urged against concert-givers today. A reviewer who has, perhaps, heard the same song several times a week and with the season only begun, may be forgiven for getting weary and longing for something new, nevertheless there is a measure of injustice in the criticism.

A recital is given primarily for the pleasure of the public, and not for the pleasure of the reviewer, and the average concert-goer has not attended so many recitals that he tires of the compositions he hears if they possess merit. In fact he wants the songs he knows. A clever artist usually realizes this and, like a competent salesman, he tries to please his customers; otherwise, he would soon be ranked as a failure. As Riccardo Martin pointed out in an interview: "Everybody loves Dvorak's 'Songs My Mother Taught Me' and other's staple favorites. When we leave them out, there is an instant outcry. They are what the people love—and what they are paying for. So do not blame the singer."

A controversy anent this subject has been waging in the columns of the New York World between Deems Taylor and Reinald Werrenrath. Mr. Werrenrath asserts that "what American audiences want is a program of good stuff, leaning more toward the emotional than the intellectual, with at least one-half of the numbers in English, and to that they are entitled." He feels that critics are wrong in demanding a high standard for all songs on all programs, believing that "a recital is like a meal—if there are several courses of meat and nothing else, indigestion threatens."

Each side has good arguments. Program-making is not easy, and the public must be considered, but a musician who can build a good, unusual program has an advantage over his less fortunate fellow-artist who may, in other respects, be his superior.—The Musical Leader.

MUSIC REVIEW

From the H. W. Gray Co., New York, N. Y.
"Quarterly No. 42"—Anthems for Easter and General Use.

Another one of those fine sets of selected anthems, bound under one cover in most substantial style and distributed gratis to choir directors in order to supply the busy musician with practical church-music suggestions in a handy form. The present set contains much excellent material. A complete Lenten cantata by Webbe—"The Story of the Cross"—is included. This splendid service work was recently reviewed in these columns. We are glad to call attention to its great value again. Also presented are worthy anthems by such fine composers as Lutkin, Hall, Gaul, Webbe, Lefebvre, Rachmaninoff, Kastalsky, and Tschaiowsky. Careful examination of these selections and wide use of the same would certainly add to the musical value of our musical fare this Eastertide. Announcement is made in the cover-pages of a change in policy of the periodical of organ-music published by this publishing-house—The American Organ Monthly will be changed into a quarterly, beginning with the March issue. Each issue will contain 48 or more pages of organ music, together with notes of interest and pertinent articles by authorities in the field of church and concert music. The subscription price will remain the same—$4.00 per year. Single issues will be priced at $2.00. Another notice of interest is the new school or method of organ instruction just published by this firm; a monumental volume—"The Technique and Art of Organ Playing" by Clarence Dickinson; certainly there is a wide need for such a book, and Mr. Dickinson is as certainly the man to perform such a task with absolute success, for he is preeminent both as organist and as editor and composer. The practical and the theoretical should find perfect balance at the hands of such a man. The book is priced at $5.00 for the paper boards edition. Bound in cloth, with gilt edges, the price is $6.00.

Saviour, I Follow On.....($12)
Happy Band of Pilgrims.....($12)
Jerusalem, the Glorious.....($10)
Beyond the Starry Skies.....($10)

A group of four excellent anthems for chorus of mixed voices by the late and lamented composer of Minneapolis. The first mentioned is effective for use by a quartet; primarily, the latter three are better fitted for chorus use. All show the happy melodic flow so characteristic of this composer, together with a fine weaving of the parts and deftness of harmonic emphasis to be found only in the experienced composer of choral music. An unusually valuable set of service numbers, worthy of the time and efforts of any organization, and of musical and religious value sufficient to pay a great deal of interest on the care expended. Such music assists the service and interests the choir.

From the Arthur P. Schmidt Co., Boston, Mass.

The Flower Will Bloom.....Barbour ($6.00)
My Song to You.....Kisher ($5.50)

Two effective songs by two very successful American women composers. The Barbour song, published in two different keys, is an imaginative setting of the lovely lines of Keats, "Shed no tear!" Commencing in a suavely lyrical mood, the song unfolds itself to a massive climax, dying away again to a whisper at the poetical close. A song for the singer who can truthfully claim the possession of a good vocal technique; a concert-song of the better class. The other song is more of a teaching song. The melody is appealing, the range called for is such that it is possible even for an untrained voice, and the accompaniment is purposely simple. Consequently it should find a wide use; it is worth such encouragement, for it is well written and well expressed.

From the Lorenz Publishing Co., Dayton, Ohio.

The Choir-Leader for February.

This regular monthly issue of an invaluable choir-magazine is full of good anthems and meaty articles dealing with the practical problems facing the average choir-director. PLAY PRAY PAY

I. Let Us Play the Game:

Why not put into our denominational program the spirit of the Game? This will rob it of drudgery. It will add zest. It will qualify us to be hilarious givers, such as the Lord loves.

It will guarantee the spirit of good fellowship. It will lead us to play according to the spirit of good sportsmanship and to esteem our team mates. It will lead to success for the team.

LET US PLAY THE GAME

II. Let Us Pray:

- (1) For vision and clear understanding of our individual duty.
- (2) For a better understanding in love of all our brethren in this Great Brotherhood of ours.
- (3) For courage and strength to do our duty.
- (4) For God's direct intervention in this situation which is too large and too complex for our strength and vision.
- (5) Let us pray in faith, believing that we shall have what we ask. "God forbid that we should sin against Israel in that we fail to pray for it."

LET US PRAY

III. Let Us Pay:

- (1) Because these are our debts incurred by our express authority; to repudiate would be disgraceful; to fail would be a misfortune.
- (2) Because only by paying can we avoid serious and disastrous retrenchment in the work already undertaken and abandonment of work already planned.
- (3) Because only by paying can we keep faith with our brethren on the firing line and their expectant constituency.
- (4) Because only by paying can we meet our responsibility as Stewards.
- (5) Because only by paying can we be faithful to our Lord's Great Commission in a large and cooperative way as a people.

LET US PAY OUR DEBTS

DISASTER Relief Tableau of "The Pageant of the Red Cross" produced by 2,000 performers at the National Convention of the American Red Cross at Columbus, Ohio, October 4 to 8, 1921, and again at Des Moines, Iowa, March 7 to 11, 1922. In it humanity stands revealed as the typification of the spirit of the Red Cross.

Fresh from the Field

At the last meeting of the Merrimack River (Mass.) Bible School Convention, held in Haverhill, the convention voted to ask all the schools in the state to send two cents a member towards an automobile for the use of Dr. F. F. Peterson, director of religious education. Checks from about 100 schools, totaling nearly $500 have already been received and others are coming daily. Dr. Peterson is also dean of the School of Methods at Ocean Park and all friends of this school are interested in this action which is in part a personal tribute to his great popularity.

In the sixteen weeks between Nov. 4, when Rev. E. B. Pratt became pastor of the Calvary Church, Denver, Colo., and Feb. 19, the church has received 139 new members, mostly adults, and of these fifty-three were received by baptism. Pastor Pratt recently conducted three weeks of meetings with the church, doing the preaching himself.

Singing Evangelist W. S. Dixon, of Wheaton, Ill., who is specializing as a "Pastor's Helper in Evangelism," held seven campaigns in Iowa last season, and so far this year has had three more in the same state. He has just closed a campaign in Ashtabula, Ohio.

The World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches announces the appointment of nine prominent clergymen and laymen to make a study of labor conditions and their relation to religious life in the United States and all the principal countries of Europe. Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, general secretary of the World Alliance, is chairman of the committee and will represent the United States. The other members and the countries they represent are: France, Elle Gonnelle and George Lauga; England, the Dean of Worcester; Germany, Sigmund Schultze; Denmark, Chris. Morley; Hungary, John Victor; Austria, Karl Beth; Holland, J. A. Cramer; Serbia, Voyslav Jannitch. On the basis of the reports from each of these countries a general statement will be prepared for presentation at the international meeting of the World Alliance at Copenhagen next August, together with recommendations to guide the Copenhagen meeting in bringing the conditions thus reported and analyzed to the attention of the nations and governments immediately concerned.

Rev. I. P. Langley has been since Aug. 1 Protestant chaplain of the Missouri State Prison. There are more than 2300 prisoners of whom 100 are women.

In the last days of March, Chicago will entertain an international convention on religious education and a special conference on week-day religious instruction. Both these will be combined in the annual meeting of The Religious Education Association to be held at the Congress Hotel, March 29 to April 1. This will offer an unusual opportunity to all church people of Chicago and vicinity, for, while the members of the R. E. A. have certain privileges at the convention all the meetings are open to the public and the programs are designed to help all who deal with the problems of the religious training of children and young people. Advance programs of the conference may be obtained from the Religious Education

Why Not?

"This is my first effort to find a place in the columns of the denomination's going paper. The reason is that I have just finished reading Dr. William Axling's 'The Washington Conference—Its Record of Achievement.' I have read each article as it appeared in THE BAPTIST and to my mind his reports outclass those appearing in the Associated Press. Some of the big dailies would have done well to have had Dr. Axling on their staff. The readers of THE BAPTIST may well congratulate themselves."—George B. Newcomb, superintendent of the State Humane and Society for the Friendless, Bismarck, N. D.

Killam's Kollum

March 19—26

On the dates, March 19—26, 1922, the Baptist young people and their friends in the churches will make a drive for 4,000 new annual subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. The young people have shown a great interest in the paper. They speak of it as "our paper." Two full pages each week are devoted entirely to their interests under the immediate direction of Dr. White and his associates throughout the convention. Every pastor in the country will be glad to give the young people a word of encouragement in this work which will mean a great deal not only to the young folks but to the entire church. During the week March 19—26 we will break our subscription records.

Trustee Speaks Up

J. O. Ernsberger, a trustee of the First Church, San Francisco, says: "As to THE BAPTIST and Missions, I feel that every one who has THE BAPTIST coming regularly fifty-two times in a year will find its visits similar in spiritual effect to that of a real pastoral call. Therefore the pastor who stimulates the circulation of these journals will find himself tremendously assisted in his work. The readers of these splendid papers also feed their souls and the habit tends to fill the pews with intelligent listeners." This is the conviction of a layman who has been active in Baptist work for years.

Independence Without Impudence

We once knew a man who agreed with everybody. He accepted as gospel truth every statement of the minister. He said "amen" to every editorial utterance of his denominational newspaper. He was not a great man. He was a half-wit. We once knew another man who questioned every statement the minister made. He stopped his denominational newspaper because he did not agree with every sentence in it. He was doubtless a learned man but he was a nuisance. His wife was the only person who could handle him. Early she learned the trick of suggesting just the opposite course to that desired. The husband always objected and refused to carry out her suggestions. The wife therefore got what she really wanted and the husband had his own way. Independent thinking is a good thing but it is a greater accomplishment to exercise the right of private judgment without becoming a public nuisance.

In Celebration of Our

THIRTIETH (30th) ANNIVERSARY

we have published a new gospel music book, Hymns of Praise. Read what others say about it: "At last I can send enthusiastic praise of a hymn book." "We selected 'Hymns of Praise' after comparing it with eighteen other books." "We are more than delighted with 'Hymns of Praise'—a truly wonderful book."

TENS OF THOUSANDS of people—from coast to coast—sing soul-stirring songs every Sunday evening from our music books. Whole-hearted, inspirational singing is the best preparation that can be given a congregation for receiving the gospel message. The Easter period is the church's harvest. Do not try to get along with old, worn-out books. That is a handicap. Introduce "Hymns of Praise" and its use will greatly multiply the results of your efforts. Sample copy sent upon request. Orchestrated. Sixty days' credit extended.

On this anniversary occasion it is fitting that we should express to our friends our sincere appreciation of their good will and pledge ourselves to continue to render a little better service than is usually expected Association, 1440 East 57th Street, Chicago, Ill., or from The Chicago Church Federation, 19 South La Salle St.

The Commission on Evangelism and Life Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has prepared a call to prayer and suggested topics for the use of pastors during each day of the week preceding Easter which is being mailed to all pastors. Any not receiving it will doubtless be supplied by addressing the Commission at 105 East 22d Street, New York City.

Through co-operation with the patriarch, a Russian translation of Dr. H. E. Fosdick's well-known devotional books has found its way into the hands of many priests of the Orthodox Church. As a result, some of them have begun to preach entire sermons based on these books. More than ever before the priests want to preach to the people, but they find their training entirely inadequate to the task. As one of them has expressed it, "If we are silent in the house of worship we at least satisfy some of the deep needs of the people; if we speak, we too often but display our ignorance."

"My Idea of God and Why I Believe in Such a God," written by Dr. William H. P. Faunce, president of Brown University, and published for free distribution by the Unitarian Laymen's League, recently has been sent to twenty-five missionary centers on request of Dr. James L. Barton, foreign secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Dr. Barton said that the statement would be appreciated and undoubtedly would be reproduced in many different languages all around the world, as well as being used both in teaching and preaching. Among the mission centers to which the statement was sent are those in the Transvaal, Natal, South Rhodesia, and other stations in Africa; to Bulgaria and Turkey; to many parts of India and Ceylon; to numerous provinces of China; and to Tokyo, Kobe and Kyoto, Japan.

Foreign Secretary Joseph C. Robbins during his present tour of the British India mission fields recently visited the new station Kangpokpi in the State of Manipur. This station was opened largely as a result of the New World Movement. Secretary Robbins was most favorably impressed with the evangelistic opportunity here. The association was held at Kangpokpi, and 555 Baptists from twenty-five different centers of the state were present. There are 700 pupils in the mission school. These poor mountain people contributed 1226 rupees last year to the work and on the last night of the association the Kukis, one of the tribes of the station, pledged an additional 250 rupees toward the support of three Kukl evangelists.

If the church is to recruit its ministry from the young men of the country, it must reach them while they are in their teens. This conclusion is based on recent investigations at St. Stephen's College which indicates that men who are going into the ministry make their choice before coming to college, in high school days, or even earlier. St. Stephen's is a college of liberal arts and sciences for men, conducted under the oversight of the Episcopal Church, which has sent many of its graduates to the theological seminaries though it offers no courses in theology. O thirty-three men now at the college who intend to enter the ministry, only three made the decision after coming to college.

Rev. P. Frederickson of the Belgian Congo Mission of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has had conferred upon him the rank and decoration of Chevalier de l'Ordre Royal du Lion by the King of Belgium for distinguished public service in Belgian Congo. Mr. Frederickson has been in missionary service for forty-one years and the honor conferred upon him is in recognition of his long and faithful ministry to the natives in this great Belgian colony.

Associate Secretary T. B. Ray, of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, has been spending the last six months in visiting missions in Japan and China. He is expected to return to America some time in April.

On his return from Europe where he had arranged for the distribution of the cargo of relief supplies, contributed by more than 4000 Baptist churches last fall, Associate Secretary William B. Lippard of the Foreign Mission Society found on his desk an official communication stating that he had been elected a Fellow of the American Geographical Society.

Foreign Secretary James H. Franklin has been supplying the pulpit of Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., on two recent Sundays. Large audiences greeted him at a services. He has also been preaching in the North Orange Baptist Church at Orange, N. J., and on Sunday, Feb. 12, he occupied the pulpit at Calvary Church, Washington, D. C. in the morning, and the pulpit of the Metropolitan Church in the evening.

The Baptist

Things In Which Baptists Agree

[N various sections of the country during recent weeks, there has been newspaper publicity touching things in which Baptists differ. The antagonisms of Fundamentalists and Evangelicals have been played up in approved newspaper style and the not unnatural conclusion on the part of many readers has been that there was in some way been driven into the Baptist body a wedge so deep that a split is inevitable. That may, of course, be true. Certainly it seems desirable that at Indianapolis, if not before, there be a frank discussion of the whole denominational situation in order that we may find just where we are at. If suspicions are unjust and untrue they should be dismissed; if they are well-founded the proper action should be taken. And generally that should be done which will enable all of us to go on our way and do our full duty in connection with our specific task in the kingdom of God. If we are already divided in spirit, it will be just as well to recognize the fact and not to try to hold together longer those who are in such radical disagreement that they cannot walk together in harmony. Feeling has smoldered beneath the surface over-long. We ought to say to each other's faces without rancor and in love, just what we think, and determine just what our duty is towards each other.

Emphasis on differences, however, may always lead to wrong conclusions. Much time needs to be given to careful thought on the things in which Baptists of the North are in agreement with each other. Two men who face each other and who proceed to recount what they dislike in each other may soon come to blows. If the same men will tell over what they love in each other, they are likely to walk off arm in arm. Baptists should be careful that they do not follow the wrong method and play into the hands of the great adversary.

What are the things on which Baptists agree? Shall we not say first of all that they are, in common with the men and women of many other communions, holders of the evangelical faith. They are dead sure of a great religious experience in which they have shared. "This one thing I know," they say, "that, whereas I was blind, now I see." They know whom they have believed and delight to walk in his fellowship. That experience is a unifying element among all Christian people. Wherever we find a man or woman who loves the Lord Jesus in sincerity and truth and who has had an experience of his grace, there we find one with whom we may have real fellowship. All such people, moreover, have a passion for service and a love for Christian missions. To make known their Lord's name everywhere and to bring to all nations the word of God's grace is the desire of their hearts.

That much is clear. But may we not go farther, and say that there are other things in which Baptists of all schools agree? They are certainly one in their devotion to the Book. Interpretations may not always agree, but to them all it is God's word and to be approached with reverence and a desire to know. They are also one in their loyalty to Christ; the man who loses this passion ceases to be a Baptist. They are agreed moreover that salvation is by God's loving favor and not by man's deeds. We have known many Baptists of many opinions, but all of them are one in this, and some of those who have been called most radical have been the most insistent in this emphasis. They all of them believe in the triumph of Christ's kingdom. This does not mean that they are a unit in their thought of how this rule of Christ is to be brought about but the faith in it is the inspiration of the service they are trying to render. To a man they believe in the competency of the soul and reject any priestly interference in their devotions. The independence of the local church also is dear to their hearts. So firmly do they insist upon it that they even look askance at times on confessions of faith. "We will receive suggestions," they say, "but no body of overlords shall hand down to us any word which does not commend itself to us as we open the Bible for ourselves." They are one also in their belief in the spiritual character of the church, a belief which prohibits anything like state control and which forever guarantees to men freedom of worship. How these things pile up as we think upon them. How many things there are in which we Baptists all agree even in these days of confusion and suspicion.

If it shall become necessary to air our differences when we meet at Indianapolis let us follow the right order and open the whole conference by a full and frank discussion of the things in which we all agree. For it might prove that, when this had been done, we should find that the differences had sunk to a minimum. Moreover let us talk as Baptists. Why should we allow outside groups to tell us what we should think? Why should we surrender our God-given liberty to any body of people, however earnest, who from without the Baptist fold shall attempt to tell us what we must believe and do if we are to retain our Baptist heritage? Some matters are for discussion within the family and outsiders should be told to keep hands off. Generally when they do, the members of the family discover that after all their differences are very small and that love can lead the way to right relations. What a strange people we Baptists are! We actually waste hours of time and reams of paper magnifying a few differences, when emphasis upon our likenesses would generally restore to a right mind and to his proper place in the family any erring brother. Hate and strife never solve anything. Love, given time enough, will cure every ill.

Editorial Comment

A RELIEF TRAIN FOR RUSSIA

Northern Baptists who contributed to "Fill a Ship in Fellowship" are certain to be interested in the plan of English Baptists to send a "Baptist Relief Train" to Russia. The method has been worked out after full conference with the representatives of the American Relief Administration and is commended by Dr. Nansen. The train will carry something like 330 tons of food and will proceed to the famine-stricken area with all possible speed. Instead of asking contributions in kind, the appeal has been for money and the response all over England has been generous.

Such a train is the best kind of commentary on the work which Baptists are beginning to try to do in Russia. The end in view is the good of the soul but the evangelists believe that when a cold and hungry man or woman has been fed and clothed there will be readier entrance for the word of the Gospel. So the Book is in one hand and the loaf of bread in the other. But the second is given whether or not people will take the former. And there will happen in Russia what always happens under such circumstances, namely, that men and women will come to believe in the Christ whom they have seen incarnated in men whose mission was that of loving kindness. In feeding the hungry the Christ will have been served.

AFTER THE WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

Seldom has the Christian voice of America uttered itself as during the Washington Conference. And the results have been very notable. Here is what the conference recommends to the various governments and what is involved in pending treaties framed by the conference:

1. To scrap many existing capital ships and stop building new ones—a five-power fifteen-year treaty.

	To be scrapped	To be retained	Permanent—after 10 years
United States	845,740 tons	500,050 tons	525,000 tons
Great Britain	583,375 tons	580,450 tons	525,000 tons
Japan	289,100 tons	301,320 tons	315,000 tons

2. To continue the navy ratio indefinitely until two years after the treaty has been denounced by one of the five powers concerned.

3. To limit the caliber of guns on naval vessels to sixteen inches.

4. To condemn the use of submarines as commerce destroyers.

5. To condemn absolutely all poison gas warfare.

6. To enact a four-power ten-year peace treaty regarding all island possessions in the Pacific.

7. To stop building naval bases on specified islands in the Pacific.

8. To enact a permanent treaty between nine powers for just, fair and friendly treatment of China.

9. To confer together whenever any power feels that threatening difficulties are developing in regard to China.

10. To establish a commission of the nine powers to deal with alleged infringements of the "open door" agreements.

Important agreements reached outside the conference:

- (a) To settle the Yap cable dispute.
- (b) To settle the question of American rights in Japanese "mandates" in the Pacific.

- (c) To return Shantung completely to China.

A splendid step has been taken looking towards a warless world. The task of the churches has just begun. By emphasizing in our churches what has been done, there will be created the opinion which will lead in time to the next forward step.

AN INVALUABLE HALF HOUR

"Precious indeed," says John Ruskin, "those thirty minutes by which the teacher tries to get at the separate hearts of a thousand men to convince them of all their weaknesses, to shame them for all their sin, to warn them of all their dangers, to try them by this way and that, to stir the hard fastenings of the doors where the Master himself has stood and knocked, yet none opened, and to call at the openings of those dark streets where Wisdom herself hath stretched forth her hands and no man regarded."

The brief half hour given to the sermon is no time for frivolity, or for the discussion of extraneous matters. All the week men and women are concerned with matters of material welfare. During these thirty minutes the preacher may bring them face to face with God and duty and destiny and the issues of life itself. It is not strange that some men will not go into their pulpits except from their knees. We do not wonder that some of the preachers of the older school testified so often to their sense of the awful and solemn message they were about to deliver. The whole current and tendency of life may be changed for men and women in those brief thirty minutes. What shall that preacher say to his own soul or to God who lets them slip useless away?

NATIONS ALSO ARE BROTHERS

The man who has a gun is likely to use it some day when he least expects to do so. The nation which is armed to the teeth will probably strike quickly when it is provoked and do its real thinking afterwards. The possession of power brings with it the temptation to use it. Every slight emphasis upon the use of force has its effect upon the minds of people. On the contrary every emphasis upon the use of peaceful methods builds up a body of peaceful sentiment. Men are not so certain as they were a few years ago as to the wisdom of the sentiment: "Walk softly, and carry a big stick." The late James Bryce had a word to say along this line which is properly remembered in the present state of the world. He was thinking of international relationships and commenting on the position set forth in "The Church and a Warless World," which had been issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ. And this is what he said:

"I do not know that I can offer any suggestions to you, unless perhaps that further illustrations might be given of the tendency which huge armies and fleets exert towards making the idea of war so familiar that nations yield more readily to the temptation to let themselves be drawn into war. The most effective factor in getting rid of armaments would be to substitute for national hatred and rivalries a sense of the brotherhood of nations such as our Lord Jesus inculcated upon individual men. The idea that 'we are all members one of another' needs to be applied to peoples."

Men will have to go a long way before they can improve upon the wisdom expressed in the words of Jesus.

LET US MAKE MEN HAPPY

"It is either a misfortune, a disease or a crime for a person to be unhappy in this beautiful world," says the Universalist Leader. "Most of us think we have been happy some time in the past, or are going to be happy some time in the future, but few are really happy now. Or most of us think we would be happy if we had the wealth and wisdom and social position of others, which reveals not only our desire, but our ignorance, for it is not unlikely that while we are envying them they are envying us. There are some thorns in their path, and there are some roses in ours, even if we do not catch their fragrance. To be happy we need to be intelligently content with what we have. And there is enough in this glorious life, filled full with the treasures of God. But we veil our eyes and say there is nothing to see; we stop our ears and cry there is nothing to hear; we clench our hands and say nothing comes into them; we harden our heart and say we can not feel the throbbing of the heart of man and God. And yet in the beginning and all along the way God said, 'Let us make man happy.'"

Let it be remembered, however, that happiness is not an end in itself and that those who give themselves most diligently to its search seldom find it. Happiness is a by-product which comes when men and women are at peace within themselves and are giving themselves without reserve to some good and useful task. If a man or woman will get right with God and try to serve his fellow, he will be happy enough for this old world.

"He who joy would win must share it;

Happiness was born a twin."

These words of Rosetti's might well be placed in the living room of each soul.

ARE WINE AND BEER TEMPERANCE DRINKS?

An experience of the state of Massachusetts with beer and light wines is illuminating in view of much current discussion. In the late sixties, on the supposition that ale, strong beer and lager beer were non-intoxicating, the state authorized their sale without special license. In 1868, sentences for intoxication were 12,920; in 1870, 20,383; in 1872, 23,587, an increase of 82 per cent. Thereafter beer was again placed among the recognized intoxicants. It would seem that the careful scientific experiments over a period of many years, records of which are now available, would have proved this beyond a question. But if there are those who despise science when it conflicts with their appetite we commend to them the experience of one of our sovereign states.

ROYAL WEDDINGS AND OTHERS

The marriage of Princess Mary of England and Viscount Lascelles has put England on the front page of the newspapers recently and has given that body of people in our population who delight in romance material to satisfy their appetite. There seems to be universal satisfaction that the princess chose a brave man of her own people and not some ragged specimen of effete royalty from the Continent. A love match always catches the imagination and the fact that the princess was obliged to renounce all claim to the throne in order that she might marry the man of her heart has further endeared her to her people. What a crazy idea that is, anyway! What place has any such renunciation in a modern democratic state like England. It is high time this remnant of the old idea that in some way the royal family was of better blood than the rest of mankind was done away with. We are inclined to welcome the princess and the viscount to the family of true lovers everywhere. They have received more publicity than most bridal pairs, but there is no more significance to their union, when you get down to human facts, than there is to the union of good men and women everywhere. Happiness does not depend on what we have but on what we are. Marriage does not have to be decorated with royal braid in order to prove itself one of God's rich blessings to men and women.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN ROUMANIA

In another column is an exceedingly interesting story of proceedings by which the religious disabilities under which our brethren in Roumania have been living have at length been removed. It would seem as if an end to a trying period of persecution has been reached. To a certain type of European statesmen, religious liberty as we know it makes no appeal, and, while such may try to placate opinion in other parts of Europe, they are likely at the same time to take measures by which suppression and persecution will be the lot of the disapproved body. This has been true in Roumania. If there has now been brought about the final annulment of the ordinance which caused so much hardship and suffering, the result must largely be attributed to continued pressure from England and the United States and to the vigilance and quick action of Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, our Baptist commissioner for Europe.

Dr. Rushbrooke, indeed, is playing an important and most useful part in Europe during these trying days of reconstruction. The help he is giving struggling Baptist bodies is invaluable. In coming years his fine service will be an occasion for profound gratitude wherever Baptists gather.

JAPAN ADOPTS SUNDAY

Press dispatches state that the Japanese government has just made Sunday a legal holiday for all classes of the population. Another tribute to the common sense and progressiveness of the Japanese rulers! For this does not mean that all at once the Japanese have become Christians. Far from it. What it means is that they have come to recognize what a valuable function Sunday plays in the lives of Western nations and have wished for themselves the same benefits. Sunday was given for the sake of man, as Jesus declared long ago, and the benefits of this gift to a people who have stood at long range and studied it are so obvious that this people adopts the plan. By and by when they adopt also the spirit and the faith which lie back of the plan they will have that spiritual foundation for a modern state without which it cannot be certain of permanence. Now if America will be sane enough to see to it that Sunday remains a day of rest and refreshment to her people, she will be showing that she is possessed of something like the wisdom of the Japanese government in this regard.

The Exodus—A Last Confession

A church in the throes of candidating. Theological seminaries urge upon students the ethical necessity of removing from field immediately upon resignation. A part of a small city, acquaintance widens to the horizon—one of the compensations of a small city pastorate.

By A PREACHER'S WIFE

THE preacher went to his new charge months ago. In truth this charge is not new but an old and former work. There was the usual farewell reception, the union of all the churches in a Godspeed service on his last Sunday evening. There were many parting gifts, countless hearty hand-clasps. There were many expressions of appreciation for his ten years of effort, spoken to him as he went the rounds of his last duties. Our daily paper said what I believe to be true (though I say it as shouldn't) that he was the most generally beloved man in the city. This was proclaimed in a sketch with large size picture in the paper and led one of our young adoring sons to comment on his father's "beautiful obituary!" I am glad his verbal bouquets came in before his real obituary date, for he deserves them.

At present our home is dismantled, boxes and trunks packed, our farewells in progress and the family is preparing to follow him. It has its advantages, this sending him on into the Promised Land. There are his highly colored reports on the new parish and parishioners; his love letters which come back to us daily; and we have had the chance of a lifetime, living on here as members of a church in the throes of candidating!

Candidating

Be it said to the credit of this church that this period was a very brief one, no member of the body but who dreaded the ordeal. My husband had given them four months' notice that they might begin early to seek a new pastor and he had stated that he would "let" his pulpit on any Sunday they desired a candidate, thus urging upon them the importance of avoiding that gap between pastorates which is so damaging to a church. But they could not bring themselves to any move and they feared to let the notice of his resignation reach the denominational papers, lest the move toward settling a new pastor begin from the outside. Nevertheless very soon after the resignation and before he left the city, the deluge began.

I read but two of the applicants' letters and while they were breathlessly interesting, I felt surfeited and did not embrace my opportunity of reading any more. One of these men wrote from a high and mighty pastorate in a distant state. His only reason for contemplating a church in a city so small as ours (we are but six thousand souls) was that he wished to bring himself under the university benefits of the metropolis near by. His letter was a model of elegant English. The dignified, business-like heading on the paper which he used, gave me (the chief of sinners) the opportunity to remark that in all probability the church furnished it for him, a requisite unheard of in our town. When the secretary of the pulpit committee replied, stating salary paid and a few other items, he had in answer a letter which should be framed and hung in the vestibule of every small city church! I cannot quote it, but from its trend one gathered that the salary which had been supposed to cover the living expenses of our family of seven (after one-third of it had been paid back into the treasury) would barely meet the gasoline, telephone, manuring, gas and electricity expenses of the far distant aspirant! My hilarity was tempered by the manifestations of chagrin on the faces of the pulpit committee, every member of which was a dear friend of mine. They really had not known that it was so bad. But that letter coupled with my husband's preachments (he was far more bold when pleading for the other fellow) caused them to make a substantial raise for the successor. I cannot now recall that preacher's name, but I wish I might bake him one of my prizest of prize chicken-pies in return for that stroke of mission work which he unknowingly did for our church.

A few of the letters received were so full of misspelled words, that they were weeded out and replied to by a stereotyped note saying it was impossible to arrange for a date. Others recommended the writer in such an overdone fashion that they too went unconsidered except as a very good and very novel joke. "Tell him," some one would say, "to place his talents in a more promising field. He's way beyond us!"

Every denominational paper occasionally brings forth a printed groan which is some pastor's protest against the ex-pastor's continuance on the field after his resignation. The theological seminaries urge upon their students the ethical necessity of removing from the field immediately upon their resignation. Hence the new incumbent need not have his work cramped, hindered and sometimes ruined by the division of loyalty which is so likely to result if he remains. In our case it being impossible for us to move at once my husband and I resolved that we would never on any occasion whatsoever, speak one disloyal word, be guilty of one disloyal look or insinuation to the detriment of the new pastor and his efforts.

Loyalty

When the successor was eventually elected, we discovered that such resolutions were at all necessary. Like the rest of his parishioners, the whole parsonage family from the preacher down to our dog laid our hearts loyally at his feet. At once there sprang up between the men a Paul-and-Timothy sort of relationship while as I watched the mantle of my prestige fall upon the young shoulders of my successor, I gloried in the better grace with which she wore it. She and I were chums from our first meeting, and so high an estimate did I place upon her joyous spirit, her quick wit, her trained intellect, her exuberance of youth and mirth, her entire consecration to service of all these fine traits, that I often yearned to pick her up in my arms and run away with her before the sordidness of church affairs went over her young soul like some awful juggernaut, to leave it bruised and lame by the ecclesiastical wayside.

The B. Y. P. U. in printing its new topic card with committee announcement, did not place her name on the card as a leader of a meeting or member of a committee without placing mine just next hers. They wanted to spare me any dethroning feeling from that branch of church work where I had labored the most joyfully! But my adorable young supplanter and I had many a laugh over this bit of tender solicitude on the part of the young folk. When our Great Judge has turned our souls wrong side out, has numbered and catalogued every sin, he will not have charged us with making it hard for the succeeding pastor, even though we were obliged to remain on the field for a while after his inaugural.

I do not want to depart from the church as did Becky Sharp from her school, flinging the dictionary over the fence at those who had helped to rain and discipline her. True, it is not likely that Satan will remove to a far country as I go about the final tasks of breaking up my home. He is forever on my trail. If Deacon Ianley or Mrs. K. open up their runs in verbal attack, I shall feel impelled to return a fire of saucy replies even though it were my last one among them. (Anyway, I owe him two scores already.)

But I find it revealed upon the verge of my departure that many differences are forgotten, many long-pen wounds are healed. To be sure Mrs. W. and I who have waged a ten-year argument as to whether or not beef loaf is improved by the addition of a little pork, do not yet agree. I believe that if I might have had her or another decade I could have won. As it is I must leave her to the vagaries of her recipe which calls for pork. He tells me as we are drawn up in little array for our last wordy contest that she knows I shall be properly homesick to sit at her table and taste a bit of her loaf before I have been away a year! And I reply that we may go on adding pork for all care. I have done casting pearls.

The Buried Hatchet

It is not so with Mrs. B. and our er conspicuously uninterred hatchet! All these years she has looked on me as a soul without hope because I allow my children to play me of their games on Sunday. As is is my last confession, however, rhaps I should tell the whole truth, and here it is. I not only allow them to play their games, but I, their other and their moral guide, play with them! My Great Judge knows at my husband needs a quiet use on Sunday afternoon. He knows that my throat does not hold at reading through all those urs. He knows that our salary es not permit us to own a Ford so might take the children out into e open where their noise would be moved from the vicinity of the idy. And he knows, (Oh, surely! believe he does!) that my tired feet will not permit of the humbler mode of deliverance. All this I know is squared with him. Mrs. B's mercy is not so entirely of the unstrained quality. And I, too, am guilty for I have looked down from my high tower of righteousness upon her and her daughters because they wash their hair on Sunday. However, upon the approach of my departure, all differences are forgotten in the warmth of a friendship which has been the under-current of all our discussions through all these years. We become "two souls with but a single thought,

Saving My First $100

SOME thirty-five years ago, at the age of nineteen, as a result of the teaching from the pulpit of my pastor, I became convinced that tithing was the proper system of giving, and adopted it. At that time I was receiving a monthly wage of $50 and had my mother partly to support. On that wage I had never saved any money, nor did I feel that I could. In those days pew rent was paid quarterly, and offerings for missions were made yearly. As the money accumulated for two or three months in my bureau drawer, the question of its being stolen seemed an important one, as $15 in those days was a large sum of money to me. I therefore determined to open a savings account, as small checking accounts were unknown in those days, but how to keep the account alive was a problem, if I was going to pay out the money every two or three months. I therefore determined that I would attempt to save $5 of my money so as to keep the account alive, irrespective of what I paid out for beneficence. As a result of this attempt, on the same salary (except I had a raise of $10 per month during the last three months) I paid my tithe and saved $100.

two hearts that beat as one." She brings to me a gift so generously sprinkled with beautiful stitches done by her own hands, that I marvel at her magnanimity while I come to a quick decision that she shall fall heir to my large laundry basket and my pretty brown screen, though I know and also Mrs. B. knows that Mrs. H. has had her eye on that very screen for months!

I have lived through the customary showers. They have reached from the Daughters of the American Revolution in farewell picnic assembled, to the gift of my last month's ice bill from my friend the ice-man and a powder puff (a pink one) from our long time friend the druggist. My room until packing time resembled that of a bride-to-be and I am sure that no prospective bride in all her pre-nuptially showered life ever drank such draughts of pride and joy as have I in contemplation of my remembrances. There are well chosen pictures, pretty towels so exquisitely embroidered that I shall never allow them to be touched except in my only daughter's hope chest; there is some dainty lingerie bestowed upon me with dear little notes attached, said notes bearing expression of appreciation and gratitude for my place in the giver's life, far, far out of proportion to what I deserve; I have silk stockings enough for the next five years and if it be a sin to enjoy such pretty things, I confess my sins are as scarlet.

Compensations

Wherever I go about down town, I meet with some kind word for those years of my husband's service and my own place in the community. Besides the Baptists who are at liberty to declare their love openly, there are touching expressions from all the denominations, Protestant, Catholic and Christian Science. An ex-saloon man goes so far as to declare his admiration for my husband in saloon-made English, "That man was the darndest guy that we had to fight." When one becomes the part of a small city for ten years, one's acquaintance widens to the horizon. This becomes one of the compensations of that small city pastorate.

But yesterday, as I passed the shoe-store which has shod me and mine for ten years, the owner who is not a member of any church, motioned for me to take a seat on the bench beside him. A new experience for me, sitting in front of a store for some half-hour of reminiscence with the proprietor! He spoke of our arrival here and the long struggle through which our combined families of sons had to pass before they settled down to a warm and even friendship. Just the usual proceedings when a new family arrives. "Do you remember that night my Henry licked your boy?" He asks this with a chuckle that betrays he has stated it backward for the fact that a preacher's boy could fight and could "lick" the bully of the city's twelve-year-olds, has been town history for years. We laugh together for a while over the ups and downs (chiefly downs) of those earlier years and rejoice together over the superb grown-upness the boys have achieved in the recent years, both of these early enemies being now the pride of the high school and chums. There is so much fun mingled with the pain of parting!

All the pain of desolating a home has been lived through. Surely I shall not again be drawn to that kitchen window to take another last look at the children's cemetery out yonder where the evergreen tree shelters their dead. The white bunny; the Belgian hare who died from over-eating, when mother in the funeral service preached into the sermon a warning to the owners; the poor little ducks, counted endlessly before they were hatched and then killed in one night by a heartless rat; the kitty, the canary, the pup; all gone to their happy hunting ground and buried with all the honors of war and the honors of peace combined, will now lie unnoticed, their graves unstrewn with dandelions. I am glad the wrecking is finished. With the present state of backache and headache which threatens to consume me, I wonder from whence came the help to go through it.

Memories

In my own empty room are some mottoes which are pasted on the wall over the desk that once was mine, but which now awaits its new owners. I shall have to leave those mottoes sticking there to be disposed of as pleaseth the new tenants. Very likely the paper hangers will remove them with the old paper, but I wish they might remain and that the new tenants would make a better job of living than I have done. Says one, "I shall pass through this world but once; any good therefore that I may do or any kindness that I can show to any human being, let me not defer or neglect it for I shall never pass this way again." I leave another which has brought me daily comfort. I hope the new occupant of my room may never need it:

"The mother of the little boy that sleeps,
Has blest assurance even as she weeps;
She knows her little boy has now no pain,
No further ache in body, heart or brain;
All sorrow is lulled for him—all distress
Passed into utter peace and restfulness;
All hope, all happiness, and all beside
Of childish longing, now he clasps and keeps
In voiceless joy,—the little boy that sleeps."

The city's highest tribute came to me from my young friend Hooch. On my way down town the last Saturday evening, I saw him in the next block. My own sons had departed to a distant relative to be joined by me later. Hence I was obliged to do my own signaling which I did as surreptitiously as possible by means of the two-shorts-two-long whistle of the clan. Hooch was walking by my side in a moment. I announced to him, "I am leaving on Monday evening."

The look on that lad's face as he stopped, backed away a step or two, and exclaimed in real distress, "Aw, gosh!"—means more to me than all the beautifully worded sentiments from other friends. If I have needed any compensation for suffering my heart and my home to become the general stamping ground for a horde of boys and all the dogs, skates, strings and dust which have followed in their wake, I have all the reward that is due me in that, "Aw, gosh!"

Hooch has no mother. The best substitute at his home is an aunt who religiously mends his clothing, digs out his ears, ties his tie, combs his hair and then bids him get out of her way. He does it usually by trotting in at my front door and getting into mine. He has turned to me to dress his small wounds. I have had to mend his torn clothing so that he might escape the whipping which he feared to go home and face. For the same terrifying reason, we had to remove his battle stains in our bath room when he sallied forth to "lick" Ray but found himself the vanquished one. I find him in our living room on the couch when he does not feel well. I find him strutting there when he makes his first appearance in a new suit. It has not always been pleasant to navigate a passage through my own living room with the collection of boys and games which are forever present in scattered array, but all that I can think of now, is who will mother poor little Hooch.

Picturesque Procession

As we progress along the street, I am embarrassed as Chet joins us—Hooch having signalled him and another friend in misery over our departure. Chet bears a loudly colored banner by means of which he wins his way into the picture show. It proclaims the illustrated legend, "The Beasts of Tarzan," tonight. My embarrassment is not eased by hearing him call out in his high-pitched sissy treble, "Come to the Primrose The-ay-ter tonight!" "Chet," I feel impelled to correct, "That is theater, not the-ay-ter." "Oh, gee," he says, "I didn't know that. Old Jabby (his esteemed employer) told me to yell that." When we reach the doors, my companions desert me with a, "Come on in, it's great." My throat fills with a lump when Hooch turns to me with that forsaken look and says, "Gee! It's only two more days."

Amongst the parishioners I am leaving are registered some of the finest folk in this whole wide world.

It would require volumes to tell of their kindnesses, their sympathy at all times, their broad understanding, and of my high estimate of their friendship. Some of these friends and I have reached that exalted plane of our love, where we may speak with equal frankness in praise or blame, in endorsement or disapproval. It was one such who took us in upon our first arrival, not knowing us at all, welcomed us on faith that we were all that we should be, and housed us till we were settled in our own home. She remained our first friend, our truest and our best.

The Finest Folk

Though my invitations were many, I asked for her hospitality on my last night. I coveted one more long evening's chat with her. The afternoon of that last day, I made a hurried trip to a nearby town to bid farewell to a girlhood's teacher of mine. On the return journey, I could not connect. I called her by long distance to tell her and to urge her to go to bed and not remain up for me. When I entered the station upon my midnight arrival, the taxi driver and the station agent both of whom I had known all these years, sympathized with me upon my hapless experience in losing connection. A pang seized me as I realized that in the large city where I should be in a few weeks, no one would know and no one care whether or not I lost a train. Arrived at my friend's home, I could have found my way to bed as easily as I could have done in my own home, but she did not let me. She had retired as I urged, but she had slept with her ear attuned for my late step in her hall. When I turned to ascend the stairs, she appeared at the top, lamp in hand to light me up. Blessed be all the ups and downs on the Hill Road, if only now and then as we travel its uneven way, there appear along the route a friend like her!

I do not profess to read the future. I really do not want to see beyond The Valley. But I shall always have a secure feeling that when I emerge from its midnight darkness; when comes my final leave taking from a broken home; when I have done with parting from loved friends; when I shall receive my promotion from the worries and weariness of this earth and turn to ascend the Golden Stair there at the top lighting my way and welcoming me with her divine smile will stand an archangel whose robe has an embroidered yoke and whose saintly face is glorified by a halo of soft, fluffy white hair.

With the Brethren Across the Seas

Extraordinary obstacles overcome and problems solved through modest beginnings and faith.

Religious Education in Portugal

By W. H. STALLINGS

MOST beginnings are modest. Religious education in Portugal, while it has been receiving the attention of earnest spirits for years, can properly be said to be in its infancy. Far from reflecting unfavorably upon those who have been laboring tenaciously in this branch of Christian work, the progress already made and the results obtained evoke admiration from whomever understands the nature of the field and the extraordinary obstacles and problems in the way.

There is no religious education association in Portugal, but recently an organization was born which may some day give rise to a religious educational association in this country. Reference is made to the Portuguese federation of Sunday schools. This federation includes about thirty different schools in about fifteen centers, distributed as follows over the country among the five evangelical denominations doing work in Portugal: Porto—Methodists, three schools, 900 pupils; Episcopalians, four schools, 750 pupils; Baptists, one school, 100 pupils. Lisbon—Plymouth Brethren, three schools, 50 pupils; Congregationalists, four schools, 250 pupils; Episcopalians, two schools, 180 pupils; Presbyterians, one school, 80 pupils. The other twelve schools are scattered about over the provinces, as they are called here, and reach probably 400 pupils in all. We see, therefore, that in all of Portugal, a country of over 6,000,000 souls, less than 3,000 children are being influenced by the only forces operative here to prepare them for Christian living. In general, they range between the ages of seven and fifteen years; girls are in the majority. The intermediates in the late teens, the most efficient age to hold in Sunday school, are lacking.

Portugal, of course, is a mission field, far as evangelical religion is concerned, and a difficult one. As in all mission fields, the supply of means and leaders is always inferior to the demand, so progress is very slow. It will be some years before we can have any modern buildings for scientific religious education, with departmental organization, graded material and training classes. In fact, on account of the lack of teachers, one needs a devoted, capable layman, with a family of almost twenty in his own home, teaching an entire school of 150 pupils in the room, and doing it exceedingly well. It so happens that he bought the ground, provided the building and maintains the institution, materially and spiritually.

Lisbon is a city of some 700,000 people, with numbers perhaps 250,000. In size it might be compared to Baltimore and Denver. From Lisbon some four centuries ago sailed many of the navigators who discovered a fair share of the world, including the western hemisphere. But day as regards matters pertaining to the subjects of this letter, it is perhaps out where the school was which the writer attended almost thirty years ago, founded by his mother in a country schoolhouse in an almost solidly German community.

The Sunday schools of Portugal have had two important gatherings within recent years. In 1908 the schools of Porto organized a successful rally in the Crystal Palace with more than 1,000 children in attendance. The writer came to Portugal in 1917, but he has heard several references to this event, which succeeded in riveting the attention of the city on one phase of Christian work for a few days. The second of these two gatherings was the first National Congress of Sunday Schools, which met in Lisbon Nov. 12-14, 1921.

The Porto schools sent two delegates, while three other workers from different points attended. The congress consisted of three sessions. The first was held in one of the Plymouth Brethren churches on Saturday evening, Nov. 12, with an attendance of about 120, including pastors, demonstration of large group teaching through the chalk-talk method. This lesson, combined with the beautiful, enthusiastic singing of the children, made a deep impression upon the representatives of the press. The congress was reported fully in two of the liberal dailies. One reporter told somebody that he covered the first session under orders, but that he became interested and did not have to be sent to report the other two meetings.

The third and last session on Monday consisted of two addresses by pastors, the first by Rev. Alfredo da Silva of Porto on, "The Value of the Sunday School for the Individual, Family and Society"; the second by Rev. Motto Sobrinho of Lisbon on, "The Value of the Bible in Educating Young People." The speakers established their points. The central importance of the Bible and the Sunday school in moral education is uncontested. But one is moved to observe: How can they hear without a preacher? or how can they learn without a teacher?

For Deliverance From Race Prejudice

By MORNAY WILLIAMS

O GOD, who hast made man in thine own likeness, and who dost love all whom thou hast made, suffer us not because of difference in race, color or condition to separate ourselves one from another, and thereby from thee; but teach us the unity of thy family and the universality of thy love. As thy Son, our Saviour, was born of an Hebrew mother and ministered first to his brethren of the house of Israel, but rejoiced in the faith of a Syro-Phe- nician woman and of a Roman soldier, and suffered his cross to be carried by a man of Africa; teach us, also, while loving and serving to our own, to enter into the communion of the whole human family; and forbid it that from pride of birth and hardness of heart we should despise any for whom Christ died, or injure any in whom he lives, Amen.

Baptist Missions in Bulgaria

By C. E. PETRICK

WESTERN Europe fades away like a dream when you plunge into the Balkan countries. Five hundred years have left their mark on these beautiful lands highly favored by Nature. Large portions of these countries today are where Turkey found them when her hordes conquered the helpless in the Middle Ages. They are steeped in the ignorance and superstition of by-gone ages. These people, splendid specimens of humanity in body and spirit, to whom the apostle brought the gospel and who lost it again, are bound down by far stronger chains than the Turks laid on their arms—the chains of gross superstition and the bondage of sin. The most advanced country in the Balkans is the land of the lilac and the wild rose, Bulgaria—the oriental Switzerland, with the grandeur of Norwegian mountains under an Italian sky.

The liberty-loving Bulgarians are far ahead of their neighbors in culture and civilization. They have been magnificent fighters for their independence and they will make, and do so now, splendid soldiers for Christ. On the faces of thousands we find a persistent question mark. Shall we Christians not give them a clearer vision of Christ? He who saved America is a world Savior. The Lord drew our attention to these regions which were dear to his heart 2,000 years ago when St. Paul founded the first churches in Europe near this place. The small Baptist churches have done fine service for Christ in Bulgaria, the step-child of mission fields. Unknown to the Christian world in the West, without friends to give them a helping hand, they have fought alone the good fight of faith. For a number of years before the war the German Mennonites of South Russia and some friends in Germany took an interest in the work and aided it according to the limited means at their disposal. At the end of 1914 the Russian government prohibited all collecting of money for and remitting money to Protestant missions. This was a great blow to the struggling Baptist churches in Bulgaria. All suffered indescribably, but the work went on. There are now teachers and friends, members of the evangelical bodies of Lisbon. After the presentation of credentials and preliminary organization, Mr. Eduardo Moreira, formerly an assistant pastor but now assistant secretary of the Lisbon Y. M. C. A. and editor of the association magazine "The Red Triangle," read an able paper on the topic, "The Standard of Excellence and Modern Methods in Sunday Schools."

The paper criticized the old catechetical methods, in which the material was of first consideration, with the child employing only his memory to commit things he did not understand. The author advocated more attention to the child, individually and pedagogically, which requires small classes, graded to meet the needs of all ages, and taught by teachers trained for the task.

The second session met in the large hall of the Y. M. C. A. on Sunday afternoon and partook of the nature of a rally. About 635 were present, 500 of whom were children between seven and fifteen years of age. Mr. Robert Moreton, agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society (no doubt known to a few readers of THE BAPTIST) and a tireless worker in the cause of Christ, gave an interesting dem-eleven small Baptist churches in Bulgaria with regular preaching services in twenty-three places; 347 members are scattered over the vast country from the Servian frontier to Constantinople. In the following larger towns we have Baptist churches: Sofia, Philippopolis, Rostenetz, Tehirpan, Stara-Zagora, Kezanlyk, Rushechuck and Lom Palanka. Six churches have their own church buildings. The finest church is in Rostenetz in the Rhodope Mountains, southwest of Philippopolis. It was built last year and is one of the finest Protestant churches in the Balkans.

The Baptist churches in the new Orient have a far-reaching influence and they are beginning to influence the large Mohammedan community among whom they live and work. Only last year a special mission to the Mohammedans was opened by the Baptists in Philippopolis. Two of the mission workers there are Baptist Turks. We shall never Christianize the Turks if we neglect to evangelize the masses of nominal Christians in the East. There are 750,000 Mohammedans in Bulgaria with about 200,000 Mohammedanized Bulgarians. They all offer a splendid mission field. With the work well organized the results will be beyond the power of even a prophetic vision to foretell. Jesus says, "I have compassion on the multitudes," Sofia, Bulgaria.

Ministerial Education in Denmark

By PETER OLSEN

I SHALL this time confine myself to our school work. That has been in the foreground with us for nearly two years, and is so still. Not that it is a new thing. We have for the last fifty years tried different ways of having young brethren educated for the ministry; each way probably being good enough for the time, but none proving permanently satisfactory. Neither is school work of a more general character new among us; we have had our high school in Gistrup since 1899, and it has been quite successful; but we have come to feel that an important step forward ought to be taken.

A "high school" in Denmark is not the same thing as it is in America. The term is a short name for "People's High School," which is a peculiar Danish institution. In my first letter I mentioned Grundtvig; he is the father of the idea out of which this institution grew. It would take altogether too much space here to give your readers an adequate idea of the life and work of this remarkable man. Suffice it to say that he was a historian, a hymn writer whose religious poetry fills five volumes, a staunch defender of orthodoxy against rationalism a hundred years ago, and a pioneer in thoughts on education. He believed in the common people and conceived a plan, a large institution for the education of young people in general, an education not only of the intellect but also, and primarily, of the heart. His plan was never realized; but after the disastrous war with Prussia and Austria in 1864, Grundtvig's educational thoughts were taken up by enthusiastic young followers of him who went out to the people and started small schools for young men and women. Out of this grew the "People's High School." There are now about eighty such schools and they are attended by some 7,000 young people annually.

Only elementary subjects are taught at a people's high school. Special attention, however, is given to history and national literature. At some schools two or more lesson hours a week are devoted to Bible study. It is quite common also to begin the day's work with a short devotional service. The Danish and Norwegian languages abound with fine popular pieces of poetry and the singing of these and of patriotic songs and hymns, is an important feature. Lesson hours generally begin with singing. The courses are short, five months in winter for young men and three to five months in summer for young women.

It has been asked whether it is possible to teach young people anything worth mentioning in so short a time. It is. But you might also consider the courses as a series of intellectual revival meetings. We would by no means awaken in the young people a distaste for the work on the farm or in the shop or in the kitchen; the idea is to give them an opportunity of experiencing that which probably is the most valuable and the most enduring element even in the experience of a university student, that of becoming a member of "the republic of ideal interests." Of course all the schools are not alike. Some twenty of them are agricultural schools, and a few provide extended courses for pupils who desire to study special subjects more thoroughly.

The schools are all private, owned either by the principal or by some corporation. But they receive support from the state according to the money invested in buildings and equipment or spent for salary of teachers. Also, needy pupils are assisted.

Originally all high schools were related to the Grundtvig movement. But now more than ten are owned by the Inner Mission. And it is already more than twenty years ago that our Baptist people felt the imperative demand for such a school for their young men and women. It was a great undertaking at the time, little accustomed to giving and to taking a large view of things as our people then were. But enthusiasm was aroused, the school was established, and during the twenty-three years it has existed some eight or nine hundred young people have attended its courses. Many of those are now pillars in our churches, and almost all our younger ministers are former high-school pupils.

Four years ago our annual conference adopted a plan for the reorganization of our system of ministerial education. A seminary class was established in connection with the high school. Before being admitted to this class the students are required to pass a public examination in modern languages, mathematics, history and kindred subjects the study of which generally takes two years. Hence a class for such studies was also arranged at the high school. But this new departure made us feel more deeply than before that the outward conditions under which the work of the school is done are utterly unsatisfactory. The buildings are of an old and Spartan type and wholly inadequate in size; moreover the school is situated in a remote part of the country and in spite of strenuous efforts to draw pupils from every part of the land it threatens to become more and more a local institution. Therefore plans for removing the school to a more central place, and consequently for new and adequate buildings, were laid before our annual conference in 1920, and were enthusiastically adopted. Naturally some dissatisfaction arose in the churches in the midst of which the school had done its work hitherto, but they also are beginning to understand the necessity of a radical reform.

One thing however was lacking. The realization of the plan was calculated to cost at that time about about 300,000 Kroner. Our churches had just raised about 200,000 Kroner for purposes which I may describe in a future letter, and raising another 300,000 Kroner seemed therefore utterly impossible. All that the conference could do was to instruct the committee to work out a financial plan to be laid before the conference in 1921. The committee however at once began looking about for a way out of the difficulty. A letter was sent off to Secretary Franklin asking if he thought it possible to interest American Baptists in our school work. But Dr. Franklin had left for Europe before the letter reached New York, and a month or two later he and Dr. Hunt arrived at Copenhagen. Our letter reached Dr. Franklin in Denmark, but only after we had had a conference with him and Dr. Hunt and had laid our plans before them. I need not tell in detail of the brotherly and sympathetic way in which those two American representatives discussed our plans with us, and of their easy grasp of the situation. I remember that on bidding them goodbye as they entered the train to leave Copenhagen, I said to them that I felt sure God had sent them to us just at the moment when Baptist work in Denmark needed them. And of this I feel even more sure at this moment. The final result was that the Board of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society agreed to assist this Baptist school enterprise in Denmark with 150,000 Kroner on condition that the churches in Denmark contribute 100,000 Kroner for the same purpose. The campaign for raising this amount was begun two months ago, not without some fear of the result, for times are hard in Denmark too; but our churches have responded nobly, and today more than 90,000 Kroner have been pledged. Excellent grounds for the new school have also been secured, at a railroad town an hour's ride from Copenhagen. Should the price of materials warrant us in beginning the erection of the buildings next fall, we might hope to have the school dedicated immediately after the World's Congress in Stockholm in 1923.

Give, Give

The sun gives ever; so the earth,
What it can give, so much 'tis worth.
The ocean gives in many ways—
Gives paths, gives fishes, rivers, bays.
And so the air, it gives us breath;
When it stops giving, in comes death.
Give, give, be always giving;
Who gives not is not living;
The more you give, the more you live.

God's love hath to us wealth unheaped,
Only by giving is it reaped.
The body withers, and the mind,
If pent in by a selfish rind.
Give strength, give thought, give deeds,
Give self.
Give time, give prayers, but first give self.
Give, give, be always giving;
Who gives not is not living;
The more you give, the more you live.

A New Year's Letter from Vienna

By HERBERT PETRICK

ANOTHER year has passed, the third since the end of the war and the seventh since its baleful beginning. Every year the distress has grown. Again this year we Viennese were not able to wish each other a happy new year. The outlook is gloomier than ever. At the end of 1918 one dollar was worth about 60 Austrian kronen; at the end of 1919, 155; 1920, 700; 1921, 10,000. The Austrian krone has at present only the sixteen hundred and ninetieth part of its pre-war value. Is it to be wondered at that prices have gone up fabulously in consequence? A loaf of bread costs 316 kronen; one kilo or two pounds of butter, 3,500; one kilo of meat, 2,000; one kilo coal, 45; of wood, 40; one pair of shoes, 15,000; one suit, 70,000; one tramfare, 60 kronen. These prices are continually rising, and the papers say that one loaf of bread will soon cost 500 kronen. While the cost of living has risen more than a thousandfold of what it was before the war, the salaries and wages have remained proportionately much below that figure.

One very often hears the question put: "Whence comes this great distress in Austria and especially in Vienna?" The Austria of today is only a small remnant of a large and mighty empire. The old Austro-Hungarian monarchy had 52,000,000 inhabitants. The present state has only 6,000,000, a third of these live in one town—Vienna. The remainder is sparsely populated, being taken up for the greater part by the Alps. Vienna was formerly the center of a large and well-organized constellation of states. Food was obtained from Hungary and the present Yugoslavia. The present Czechoslovakia furnished coal, textile products, glass and similar articles. Suddenly, in 1918, it was torn asunder, and a small and stunned remainder was left—the present Austria. There are no large fertile plains in Austria for the carrying on of agriculture. Almost the whole country is mountainous. Even in the most fruitful pre-war years the best agricultural districts of upper Austria could furnish food only for their own provinces for seven to eight months. Thousands of wagon-loads of flour and other foodstuffs had to be bought from other parts of the empire. Now upper Austria has to do without all this imported stuff, and provide Vienna and the other towns with food besides. So that a great lack of foodstuffs obtains even in the most fruitful provinces of the present Austria and will continue as this district was not able to support itself in time of peace. Enormous quantities of foodstuffs have to be imported. Money flows into the pockets of the foreigner and Austria is continually impoverished. There is no good coal to be found in the Alps and the present Austria has no coal, but has to import it from abroad. Formerly a great deal of coal came from Germany, but in consequence of the disturbances in upper Silesia, and Germany being forced to furnish so much coal to France, the German consignments have stopped. For weeks at a time the railway transport in Austria was at a standstill. One factory after another had to close down. Even schools and universities had to close in the winter. The Austrian government succeeded by strenuous efforts in improving this state of affairs. Now coal is to be had again from the old Austrian mines which were transferred to Czechoslovakia. All the factories are at work. There are hardly any unemployed in Austria. And yet the country could not get on because it could not save money. All earnings have to go back to the foreigner in order to pay for the food, coal and raw materials. So that question has resolved itself into the counter-question: "How can a state exist without food, coal or raw materials?"

When we consider that a third of the population lives in one town, Vienna, we then understand how it is that we speak of the distress in Vienna. The distress was still further accentuated by the influx of many thousands of teachers and officials who were formerly scattered through the whole empire. Galicia was given to Poland. Of course the Poles drove out the old Austrian officials and put Poles in their place. In Czechoslovakia it was the same, also in Yugoslavia and South

Tyrol, which was annexed by the Italians. The Austrian state was obliged to receive and to support these unhappy refugees. So it comes that the little German-Austrian state has to support the same number of officials as the old monarchy. These are some of the reasons why economic conditions grew steadily worse. Abroad there were only enmity and empty promises, at home hopelessly abnormal circumstances. The value of Austrian money depreciated more and more and has now not so much as the thousandth part of its value in peace time, in spite of the tremendous efforts of the government, and in spite of the diligence developed by the fact that there are no unemployed.

How well disciplined and determined the people are is proved by the fact that in German Austria there was never a violent revolution as was seen in the neighborhood.

We Are Seven

By A SHUT-IN

SEVEN of us had gathered in my simple home for prayer. Most of us were the pray-without-ceasing kind, into which stage we had grown by long loving of the Master and his work. It was the great world need that drew us, and the burden of our prayers was that Baptist women—and men—might feel the urgency of the crisis upon us, and that those who had the gold might offer it and thus prevent the withdrawal of missionaries and consequent curtailment of the evangelization of the world. There in the secret of his presence we sat, until one broke the silence.

"For myself," she said "I feel that prayer is not enough; with it must be sacrifice. So sure are we of this, that we have given up our long-planned trip to Europe." To our startled exclamations she answered, "Yes, husband will miss the prestige and the broadened horizon professionally, but he is so determined that medical missionary work in heathen lands must be maintained that joyfully we send the cost of our trip to swell the New World Movement campaign."

The sacrifice seemed almost too great, but another spoke: "Mine is a very ordinary story. A year ago we gripped the situation, called a family council at which all six agreed not to spend any money on selfish pleasure for a year, but to lay aside separately the cost of such. The first of April we shall compare results and have a kind of jubilee with a few interested outsiders joining. Relinquishing pleasures that cost, we have developed those that do not. Our home is a general gathering place for young people, friends of our college son and the three high-school children. Good reading, music, conversation and best of all an interest in all church affairs are making their lives worth while. The latest film no longer makes subject for chat, nor suggests doubtful ideals for living. And thrift! Elinore at the last B. Y. P. U. business meeting carried through a resolution to send $150 gathered towards a new piano to the Continuation Campaign, and use the still-good-enough one longer."

"It is the dress I have on that rends my heart," said another. "I dare not tell how I sacrificed to get it, but this afternoon as I realize the dreadful possibility of our missionaries being recalled, and mission stations closed, I never want to see the elaborate jet embroidery on it again, I will sell it and——" her voice trailed off as another began: "Mine is no new conviction. With heart and soul I believe in the need and love to help supply it, but strange awakenings are around. Mine came through a long cherished desire for a tiled bathroom and porcelain kitchen appliances. The contract was about placed when I began to have sensations. Every time I thought of the tiled bathroom I saw a missionary packing her belongings, while converts old and young stood around weeping and begging her not to leave them unguided. It got on my nerves, and one evening I woke from a chair nap exclaiming 'I can never use it if you put it in!' 'Never use what?' asked my husband. The whole story came out and now a check double the contract sum is on its way to 276 Fifth Ave. Husband wanted to be in it."

Another sister was speaking: "It is the little legacy from my sainted mother. It has been waiting for some special need. There can never be greater, so today I sent it to the Continuation Fund and pray it may be multiplied a hundredfold."

Still another spoke: "My story is just Arthur. You know he is married and is planning a home, rather extravagantly his father and I thought, so one night at dinner I said casually, 'Every missionary in Rangoon is going to give a month's salary to help in this crisis, they are so determined the great work shall not be curtailed in Burma.' 'Whew!!' exclaimed Arthur. 'How can they manage that out of their small salaries?' Discussion didn't solve the problem, but evidently the matter rankled, for yesterday he came to me in the old, boyish way to tell how Kate and he had been getting down to rock-bottom on true values. 'No Persian rugs for us,' he declared stoutly. 'We are going to be radiantly happy on rugs a tenth their cost, besides many another cut. We didn't mean to be selfish. We just didn't think. From now on superfluities will be nil in our home. We're going to share up with the fellows who are reconstructing the world on a Christian basis.'"

Six had spoken. Only I was left, the one who instead of being the glad "more blessed giver of money," have long had to be only a receiver. But my mite is ready and so I am hurrying to tell this story, because if THE BAPTIST will only publish it, it may be others will come to the rescue with big and little sacrifice. I pray so—Matthew 25:40.

Educational Highways and Byways

Various agencies devote effort and money to reach people of the churches with vital information. Does this information short-circuit—or long-circuit—the denominational college?

By V. C. COULTER

A FARMER had a field which did not produce well. Fertilization did not bring results. He sent a sample of the soil to his state agricultural college and was given expert advice as to fertilization and cultivation. He found his hogs ill. A letter to his agricultural college brought a specialist to administer the proper serum. From his agricultural college he secured information about seed testing and building his silo, about dairying and poultry raising, about marketing and crop rotation. He attended the short course for farmers and sent his children to be trained for more effective living. The agricultural colleges are on the educational highway. Through them flows the great stream of agricultural knowledge from its multifarious sources to those who need it—to county farm agents, to teachers of agriculture in the public schools, to the individual farmer.

A school board desires teachers, or advice about school matters. A letter to the normal school or teachers' college brings the desired assistance. A county or city school superintendent desires to add to the efficiency of his teachers, and the state teachers' college sends educational experts for a course of lectures. An individual teacher desires a special type of work, or material to meet her needs in the school room. She may receive a correspondence course from the teachers' college, or a package of the desired helps. The state normals and teachers' colleges are on the educational highway. The best educational theories and practices the world over flow in well-established channels through them to the schools. Educational publishing houses keep their teachers informed of all publications in the line of their specialties. A great United States bureau of education is constantly giving publicity to educational thought. Magazines, bulletins, monographs on educational problems, are assimilated by the teachers in these institutions and made to function in the education of our children. Each year there are state and national meetings in which the men and women working along the various lines of public education may meet other teachers working along the same lines, and discuss their mutual problems.

A little more than a year ago, I came from this great public educational organization to a denominational college. There appeared to be an important and interesting educational problem to work on—the specific problem of religious education with special relation to the great program of, and the commission to, the Christian churches. There seemed to be a conviction that the immediate future of the denomination and of Christianity, humanly speaking, is in some way bound up with the Christian college. During the year, with the hearty cooperation of a loyal faculty, I have been trying to direct and vitalize the work of this one college and to render some service to the cause of religious education in the community which it serves. There have been calls for members of the faculty and students to fill vacant pulpits—a service gladly rendered. But there have been no calls for courses in religious education in local churches, no calls from pastors for assistance in their work, no calls for materials from our library, no calls from Sunday-school superintendents or teachers for extension classes or correspondence courses to assist them in their work, no request for assistance in religious surveys, no request for information about church music, missionary programs, week-day religious instruction, the organization of a World Wide Guild. It is tragically true that we could not have met some of these calls if they had come. But this kind of service is analogous to that rendered to their constituency by the great public colleges and universities.

The Baptists have a great program. It is sufficient to inspire a great enthusiasm in the hearts of students. Various agencies are devoting effort and money to reach the people of the churches with vital information. Other churches also have great programs. But very little of this information comes to my desk—except in response to specific requests. None of it flows normally through the college to the constituency. There are no established channels for this information through the college comparable to those established through our agricultural and teachers' colleges, to mention only these. This vital information short-circuits around the college—or does it long-circuit?

I have no way of knowing how general this situation is. It may be due in this instance to my own lack of denominational contacts. But judging from my experience as a student in denominational colleges and as a member of several churches, I think this isolation must be fairly typical. The few instances I know to the contrary seem to be exceptions. The rapid interchange of experience through technical magazines, bulletins and monographs, the immediate contact of institution with kindred institution characteristic of other academic fields, seem not to have been developed in the specific field of the denominational colleges.

During the year I have had opportunity to attend a number of meetings where our peculiar financial questions were discussed. But I have had only one opportunity to meet other men for discussion of our peculiar educational problem. And that meeting was brief and informal. There has been nothing comparable to the give and take of ideas among professional men interested in the same problems which characterizes the meetings of other school executives.

It seems to one who has recently entered the field that the independent denominational college has a function which is different from that of the publicly supported college. If not, we would better cease the struggle and throw our efforts into more effective channels. If we have a distinct function—and recognition that we have seems more general today than for a generation—then we should give it professional recognition and an organizational commensurate with its importance.

Clearly, the special problems of the denominational college cannot be solved by individual colleges working in isolation. Some of us believe that the biggest educational task in America today is the one

"There, But for the Grace of God, Go I"

A FORTUNATE wise man—and a Christian—once watched a ragged drunkard as he staggered down the street, and said, "There, but for the grace of God, go I."

Northern Baptists are in the midst of a $15,000,000 campaign. The money is desperately needed for those who are today without God. It is needed for those in whose place you might be or I might be, but for the grace of God.

When we make our gifts to the New World Movement in this campaign, let us make them in the full realization of this fact. Would we consider the sums we give adequate, if they were given for ourselves in like need? Would we think the effort and the sacrifice involved in this campaign too great if they were being made to save our next-door neighbors, ourselves, our children? Would our gifts be the same if we knew that tomorrow we must change places with those for whom our gifts are made?

There, but for the grace of God, go you and I—

In China, saying our helpless prayers to painted images of wood, with none to tell us of the Christ until the missionaries come. At present we have less than 200 missionaries in all China, an area larger than the United States, and densely populated. Unless our $15,000,000 campaign is successful, some of these missionaries may have to be recalled.

In India, where there is only one medical missionary for every 100,000 persons, and where the percentage of souls without the Great Physician is even larger.

Among our own Indians of the West, where thousands within a few miles of Christian churches have never heard of Christ.

As new Americans in the great cities of our own land, with only the Christian Americanization secretaries to hold out the hand of brotherhood, to direct us to the churches, and to take our children off the streets and into the Sunday schools.

In Africa, where the recent revival along the Congo showed the readiness for Christianity, but where there is only a handful of missionaries in a region half as large again as the continent of North America.

In the remoter parts of our own country, where there are whole counties without a single church, and the only preacher who ever comes is the colporteur missionary, with his store of Bibles.

It is for such men and women and children as these, in their great need of Christ, that we are holding our $15,000,000 campaign. It is for these, our less fortunate brothers and sisters of the great family with the loving Father, that we are asked to sacrifice. And so, on the point of making our gifts, let us pause for one moment, to say

"There, but for the grace of God, go I."

A Seafarer's Sketch Book

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

NO. 7. HEATLESS POVERTY

POVERTY, since the beginning of time has been one of mankind's great afflictions. In the long struggle for existence four things—food, fuel, clothing and shelter have been found to be prime necessities. When any one is lacking poverty results. One afternoon while walking rapidly along one of the streets of Libau in company with Rev. J. A. Frey (the temperature was near the zero mark and we were walking rapidly in order to keep warm), we passed a boy, possibly twelve years of age, who was crying as if in mortal agony. Only a glance was necessary to understand his distress. A thin summer cap covered his head and the tips of both ears had that characteristic whitish color suggestive of freezing. His hands, unmittened, hung by his side stiff with cold while his ragged coat was open in front. There were no buttons and the buttonholes were torn into shreds. This poor little waif typified a people living during those long, bitter zero months in a state of heatless poverty. Food was scarce, clothing was insufficient, shelter was inadequate and fuel was lacking, thus producing poverty in a most acute form.

Russian Winter

I realized this almost from the moment that the relief ship "Estonia" with a cargo of supplies from Northern Baptists was made fast to the pier in the harbor of Libau. The usual Russian winter was already upon the country. Along the docks groups of poorly clad men, carriage drivers, some of them with thirty patches on their aged overcoats, women and children stood shivering in the terrible cold. I noticed that many had no shoes, merely rags tied around their feet with bits of string. Horses looked as if they were half starved; ancient carriages or "droschkes" seemed ready to fall into a thousand pieces at any moment; men were wearing coats and trousers patched with carpet, burlap or any material that happened to be available and even police officers wore uniforms which might have belonged to a prehistoric age. It was a long drive from the dock to the hotel and in an open "droschke," in zero temperature, with no blanket around my feet the experience was terrific. Yet before I departed from Latvia I had made thirteen such trips. On one trip I managed to borrow the small burlap bag in which the driver had carried a mouthful of hay for the luncheon of his horse. The hotel where I stopped had evidently been one of unusual comfort during the years before the Bolshevik regime for the furniture and linen were of excellent quality. Today it is but a memory of departed hospitality. Only twelve rooms were being occupied; the force of servants had been reduced to merely three or four; spacious rooms and dining-halls were closed and with the exception of a small fire of wood in a small fireplace in each room occupied, the entire building was without heat. The long, dark, cold hallways were corridors of dismal frigidity. That hotel was but another symbol of the heatless poverty with which the land was afflicted.

There were many other evidences of this affliction. On the streets wagons were passing in which the drivers, many of them women, were buried in straw because there were no blankets. Coal is practically unobtainable and so the railroads are burning wood. How long this can continue no one can forecast as the forests are rapidly being cut down. I saw but one automobile in the city of Libau. Few can afford a car and gasoline is seldom seen. A person venturing forth into the streets at night does so at his own risk for the street lamps are unlighted and only the moon and the stars furnish the illumination for those avenues of darkness. One morning around eleven o'clock we passed two aged women, each of whom was drawing a heavy cart laden with pieces of wood. To me it seemed like a load that a horse would not find easy.

Pray

FOR the Spirit of God to fill the churches with evangelical fervor and zeal.
For the divine guidance of the churches in the work of carrying the Christian Gospel to heathen lands.
For the practice of Christian brotherhood toward those who come to our shores from other countries.
For the effective distribution of religious forces in home mission fields.
For the deepening of Christian sentiment against violating of law.
For individual and social purity.
For the conservation of the true Christian Sunday.
For the spiritual interpretation of marriage, family and home.
For the realization of a just and humane Christian democracy.
For the attainment of lasting peace among all the nations of the world.

These women had left their homes at two in the morning, had drawn their empty carts possibly ten miles into the forest and had gathered up the fragments of wood left by the woodcutters at the close of the previous day and had then drawn those heavy carts back into the city in order to sell the wood and thereby maintain their bitter struggle for existence.

Even the churches had no heat. On a Saturday evening I was scheduled to speak at a large meeting in the Lutheran church. It was an immense building and when I was ushered into the uncarpeted sanctuary before the candled altar I was almost stunned by the size of the audience. From the pulpit at the top of the many stairs I looked down on five thousand faces. The people filled every seat and were crowded into the aisles in such a way as I had never imagined possible. The temperature outside was two below zero and yet that big church had not an ounce of heat. My breath froze three feet in front of me and during the entire service I kept on my sweater and my overcoat. I thought of our comfortably heated American churches, many of them half full, and here were 5,000 people packed into a heatless church. They had come to hear the story of American Baptists and their disinterested relief service in the spirit of Christ. The "Estonia" at the pier was to them a greater argument for Christian brotherhood than a thousand sermons. Never before had there been such a meeting in this Lutheran church. Never before had the doors of this church been open to anything except a Lutheran service, yet here were Lutherans, Baptists, Bolsheviks and multitudes of others herded together while an American Baptist and a Lettish Baptist, Mr. Frey, stood in a Lutheran pulpit and told them of the Christ who went about doing good and of his modern disciples who tried to follow his example. Strong men wept and women sobbed and at the close scores of them came to the altar rail and kissed my hand. In that unusual way they tried to express to American Baptists at home their gratitude for this ministry of relief to a people dwelling in heatless poverty. Similar scenes were witnessed in the two Baptist churches which I attended on Sunday. Both were crowded, every square inch of standing room being occupied, and at both the audience and the preachers on the platform survived a service in a heatless auditorium.

Christ Child Comes Again

It is therefore easy to imagine the gratitude with which these people welcomed the arrival of the "Estonia" and her precious cargo. For two days we stood on the frigid wind-swept pier and supervised the unloading of more than 600 bales of clothing and shoes and more than fifty barrels of soap and toys. Some went into Russia, some to Lithuania, some to Estonia and the remainder were distributed in more than a score of towns and villages in Latvia. Thus into hundreds, yes, thousands of homes in those freezing Baltic states there came a Christmas joy that had been unknown since the Christmas before the war and the Christ Child came again after a long absence, sent by the Baptists of America. One barrel of soap was given to the municipal bath-house for children in Libau. Here once each week the children must report for a bath and for many weeks, indeed, months, soap had been unobtainable. Imagine washing your own children with a mixture of clay, sawdust and sand. Possibly the reader of this article may have sent several bars of soap to New York last October to be included in the shipment to Europe. Perhaps those very bars are now being used to help furnish refreshing cleansing to multitudes of children during this fearful winter.

Late one afternoon as Mr. Frey and I were returning to the hotel we passed another aged woman. A ragged shawl covered her head but enough of her face was exposed to make me realize from the deep wrinkles that life had been full of cares and heavy burdens. She wore shoes and her feet were enclosed in made moccasins of old pieces. As the zero wind sent shiver down my back I observed that the neat her outer skirt was on her arm she carried in the fleeting glimpse noticed in the brief that she had where in the moment.

whether this poor woman in the streets of Libau was doing likewise and whether there was a child at home for whom she was to make this final fire and prepare a final meal in this land of heatless poverty.

Hungary, the Land of the Magyars

By BLANCHE BRACE

"An evening of international friendship," as it was rightly called, Hungary Night, the fourth in the series of nationality nights which are drawing the Baptists of New York City together in world brotherhood, under the leadership of Miss Mary Comstock, Americanization secretary, took place on Monday evening, Feb. 27, at the Hungarian Baptist Church, 225 East 80th street, New York. To the scores of Baptists who assembled in the church, there was given for the first time a vivid and definite picture of Hungary, the land of the Magyars; the land of a troubled history that had striven so long for freedom; the land of women whose clever fingers know their way through intricate mazes of fine needlework; the land of art and music; and the land today of struggle and hunger and sorrow.

A delicious Hungarian dinner, prepared by the women of the church, was followed by an exhibit of native arts and crafts. Then came the glimpses of Hungary. First of her music, as afforded to the guests by a wonderful violin duet, a vocal solo by Miss Pauline G. Vegh, head of the Riverdale Community Center in Yonkers, accompanied by Miss Elliott, and whole-hearted selections by the school band. Glimpses of her history and her literature were given by Mr. Balaton, whose father and grandfather were both Baptists in Hungary.

Miss Grace Daland, superintendent of the Woman's Auxillary of the New York City Baptist Mission Society, extended a hearty welcome to the guests in the name of the society, and explained the origin of the nationality nights. Dr. Charles H. Sears, superintendent of the New York City Baptist Mission Society, pointed out that America is not yet finished, its ideals and its art are not complete, and that it remains for the new peoples who come to our shores to make their contributions.

Mrs. Jacobson, who recently visited Budapest, made an appeal for the needy children there. Then came the real feature of the evening when the pastor of the First Hungarian Baptist Church, Rev. Dulity, told of his visit to Hungary, and of the want he encountered on all sides.

"I met two children, one a boy of twelve and one a boy of nine," he said. "The twelve-year-old boy was no larger than a child of seven or eight and the nine-year-old boy about the size of a child of five."

"Where is your father?" I asked them.

"Dead," said the older boy.

"Where is your mother?"

"Dead," she went insane because of bread to give us. We went."

"Where are these wandering children? I want to look after them." There were fifty small children.

Denominational Debts Explained

ISSUED BY THE NORTHERN BAPTIST LAYMEN'S COUNCIL

During the first year of the New World Movement, April 1, 1919, to April 30, 1920 (13 months), all organizations participating, excepting the Board of Promotion, were dependent upon the normal income under the old plan of giving, resulting in their coming into the productive period of the movement (second year) with accumulated deficits amounting to $1,052,230.

On the contrary, the Board of Promotion was obliged to operate during the same period, its most expensive year, without any income whatever, as a result of which it entered the productive period of the movement with a debt of $960,478.

During the same period, in consequence of the action at Denver, the denomination incurred as its share of the liability for participation in the Interchurch World Movement the sum of $2,500,000 which had to be paid in cash, $1,150,000 of which was provided for by special designated gifts, leaving $1,350,000 to be secured from the denomination at large.

FOR THE SECOND AND THIRD YEARS OF THE FIVE YEAR PERIOD THE APPROVED BUDGETS HAVE BEEN BASED ON THE EXPECTANCY FROM PLEDGES ACTUALLY SECURED TOGETHER WITH THE ANTICIPATED INCOME FROM INVESTED FUNDS, MATURED ANNUITIES AND LEGACIES. THE COMBINED TOTAL OF WHICH WAS APPROXIMATELY FIFTY MILLION DOLLARS PAYABLE FROM MAY 1, 1920, to April 30, 1924 (FOUR YEARS), OR AN AVERAGE OF $12,500,000 PER ANNUM.

The reason the laymen are asking for $6,734,561 in addition to the proportionate expectancies due on pledges and income from invested funds, etc., to April 30, 1922, is:

1. The deficits carried over from the first year $1,052,230.

2. To care for shortage of $1,848,757 in the general fund for the last fiscal year due to the fact that this amount, paid on pledges from May 1, 1920, to April 30, 1921, was designated by the donors for objects not included in the approved budgets ($12,500,000) for the year.

3. To allow for similar gifts for the current year $2,603,171.

4. The above items, together with unprovided-for balances carried over from the first year's operations, explained as above, and not included in subsequent budgets make the difference between the normal expectancy and the $15,000,000 asked for by the laymen in cash from January 1 to April 30, 1922, to enable the denomination to close the year without debts.

To accomplish this means that every pledge up to April 30 must be paid in full by that date, also that new pledges aggregating $6,734,561 (of which the women are raising $2,000,000) must be secured and paid prior to April 30.

The failure of any one to pay the amount due on his pledge means that some one else must pledge and pay an equal amount in order that the laymen may reach their goal.

come to the Hungarian Baptist preacher's house that night, and gave her and a little friend each a pair of new shoes. Within half an hour 140 children, barefoot in spite of the severe cold, stormed the yard," said Rev. Dulity. "We want shoes! We want shoes!" they cried. He was unable to give them all shoes, on account of the high price, but gave them each the sum of 50 kronin, and promised to ask his friends for old shoes to send to them, when he got back to America.

"When I left," he said, "a band of children followed me for half a mile, waving their little rags (they had no handkerchiefs) after me, as I went. They sang in English, 'Jesus Loves the Little Children.' I promised those children that I would tell you about them."

A collection was taken to send to the children of the Hungarian Baptist Orphanage. The Hungarian Baptist Church of New York has already sent $714 to assist needy Hungarians, and $375 to help bring back the prisoners of war. Besides this, it has given $3200 to the New World Movement.

Number of Church Members Increasing

There are now 45,997,199 church members in the United States, a gain of 4,070,345 over the number in 1916. More than a million persons joined the churches in America in 1921. Every day during the past five years an average of 2,173 joined various churches.

Useful statistics have been compiled by E. O. Watson, Washington secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Various religious bodies report 233,104 congregations manned by 200,090 ministers, a gain of 5,617 congregations and 8,294 clergy in the last five years. While there has been much talk of a shortage of ministers, the increase in clergy has been approximately 50 per cent more than the increase in the congregations. Of the 45,997,199 persons listed officially as church members, the Roman Catholics have 17,885,646. Roman Catholic figures represent estimated population, including all baptized persons. Protestant bodies count only communicants.

Dr. Watson further states that for the first time Baptists have passed the Methodists in total membership in their southern divisions. The Baptists now have 7,835,250 members, against a Methodist membership of 7,797,991. The Lutheran bodies stand third with a membership of 2,466,645, and the Presbyterians are fourth with 2,384,683 members.

A recent report from Rev. K. W. Strzelec, in charge of the Foreign Mission Society's relief work in Poland, shows encouraging progress in evangelism. The missionaries baptized fifty-seven converts during the past year. In Eastern Galicia, under the leadership of Mr. Petrasz, there were four stations last year and now there are seventeen. In his last letter Mr. Petrasz wrote to Mr. Strzelec that he had ten local laymen helping him in preaching the gospel. There were seventy-one members in the seventeen stations and 244 persons had professed Christ and were ready to join the church.

The Open Forum

A PLEA FOR CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

I am moved to express on behalf of myself and no small number of other Baptists our sincere regret that our leaders did not see fit to promote during February a real Christian stewardship campaign instead of a campaign for tithers.

It seems to be the conviction of some Baptists that tithing is Christian stewardship and Christian stewardship means tithing. This I deny. Tithing is not Christian stewardship. Jewish stewardship it was and is: heathen stewardship it may have been in some cases; but Christian stewardship it is not and never has been.

Jesus never established or recommended tithing as a principle to be followed by his church. He did say it was right for the Pharisees to do it; of course, they were Jews under the law. But his picture of the tither praying and boasting of his tithes scarcely commends the practice to us.

The first church at Jerusalem did not practice tithing for the support of work. It "had all things common." There was nothing left to tithe. The historic council at Jerusalem in establishing the conditions upon which Gentiles should be recognized as a part of the church, while insisting upon certain well-known Jewish principles, made no mention of tithing. Paul's letters to the various churches dealt with many matters pertaining to church practice, discipline, and life. Many of these churches were predominantly Gentile, not familiar with the Jewish practice of tithing. Paul deals quite largely with the question of the support of Christian work and workers, yet he never mentions tithing in any of his epistles. None of the other apostles, in their letters, prescribe tithing as a rule or practice of the Christian church.

By whose authority, then, is tithing made a test of Christian stewardship?

Yet the pledge of "The Baptist League of Christian Stewards" is a tither's pledge. If you agree to tithe, you are a member, if not, you are not a member. In other words: If you tithe you are a Christian steward; if you do not tithe you are not a Christian steward. That is not true. One of the leaflets sent out teaches that Christ ordained that tithing should be used in the Christian dispensation for the support of our religion as in the Jewish. That is not true. Because of such unwarranted teachings as these, it was impossible for many Bible-reading and Bible-loving Baptists to circulate the literature offered for this campaign.

The tithe was a tax, a debt, something to be paid as a legal obligation or duty. The New Testament puts matters on an entirely different basis. It does not talk of paying tithes but of giving, as voluntarily indicated by a heart filled with love for Christ; of liberality as a Christian grace. Its message is: "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Paul gives us, quite concisely and definitely, the underlying principles and methods of Christian stewardship as taught by the New Testament. He insists ever on the proper support of Christian enterprises. His method is systematic, proportional, Christian stewardship, but not tithing.

I Cor. 16:2. "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him."

II Cor. 9:7. "Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart, not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver."

Can we not get away from the Old Testament legalism, with its tithes, and have a campaign for real Christian stewardship, which shall cause our people to "abound in this grace also?"

WHAT IS THE CONSERVATIVE CONSTITUENCY?

IN THE BAPTIST, of Jan. 28, is a paragraph headed, "A Contest for Control." It says: "We can never consent to stop short of seeing the denominational machinery in the control of the great conservative constituency which makes up at least three-fourths of the denomination." This is from a letter from the Committee on Conferences on Baptist Fundamentals. Now, many of us are at a loss to know who are conservatives and who are not. Supposedly the denominational machinery is now in the hands of the conservatives, unless the word is defined to mean premillenarians and those who hold to the doctrine of the verbal inspiration of the Bible. In that case it is doubtful if one fourth of the denomination is composed of conservatives. The late Dr. A. H. Strong was not a conservative, according to the definition often given by "Fundamentalists." He believed in evolution though not to the extent that Darwin did. He was not a premillenarian, for he held that the personal coming of Christ would be subsequent to a millennium and that there would be an increasing spiritual coming of Christ before the personal coming. His doctrine of inspiration was very different from that of the "Fundamentalists." He thought it possible, for instance, that the book of Jonah might not be historical. In fact he seems to have been what some would call a liberal. Shall men of that stamp be kept out of denominational positions? Nearly every Baptist believes in the divinity of Christ, the atonement and the inspiration of the Bible, but there are many differences in regard to the methods and philosophy of these doctrines. Are only those who hold to the views of the Moody Institute to be recognized as orthodox and deemed worthy to work for our Lord in denominational positions? Are the churches that are contributing hundreds of dollars really conversant with what they are doing in helping finance this propaganda for certain peculiar dogmas? In some churches mission money is diverted to this purpose of stirring up strife among brethren instead of helping the campaign to win mankind to Jesus Christ. Let us remember our Savior's words: "He that is not against me is for me."

WELL-BALANCED GIVING

In your February 4 issue of THE BAPTIST, you had a fine statement about, "Is The Larger Church More Efficient?" An Illinois pastor has just made such a review of the financial and membership record of five churches, compared with his own.

The five churches had full time preaching, except one which had half time. The combined membership was 810 members, and the largest church in the association had 867 members. The current expense record for the five churches was $10,658; $13.15 per member. The one church of 867 members had a current expense record of $6,484.74; $7.48 per member. Forty-three per cent for the smaller church for maintenance.

New World Movement item: The five churches contributed $1,913.11. The large church: $7,067.78. That is, 370 per cent more for the New World Movement than the five churches with an average wealth equal or superior to the larger church. And the larger church did not do more than half what it might have done had the entire membership responded as some did. The larger church had 131 non-residents. $200 would cover all received from the non-residents on the New World Movement, and $200 would cover more than the amount received on current expenses.

As to membership: The five churches baptized seventeen and the larger church thirty-five. The five churches also had exactly seventeen join by letter and experience; the larger church, forty-four by letter and experience. The larger church is the only one of the churches that has a building fund campaign on, as well as the current expenses and the New World Movement.

When the above record was brought to the attention of the larger church, it brought expressions of great surprise, and of thanksgiving, to have had a share, and to resolve to do much better the coming year. This was accomplished when a sadly large number of the resident members died next to nothing.

It is believed the above statement will shame and persuade them to have a share in the church achievements this year.

THE QUAKER LADY DISCUSSES TEMPERING
THE WIND

HE was the most delightful young minister, earnest and hardworking and eloquent, yet something was lacking somewhere. He felt it. And the congregation felt it. But no one could put a finger on the weak spot until one day when he called on his Oldest Parishioner and she was telling him in her quaint speech how gratified she felt with his success. Whereupon he broke forth: "But am I successful, dear Quaker Lady? Am I really? There isn't quite the cooperation there used to be—I'd give a penny to know what's wrong."

"Then suppose thee lays thy cent on the table," she smiled, "for less than that I could name thee the trouble!"

Laughing, he put a shining copper on the table: "A penny for your thoughts!"

"I will quote thee a few words of Mr. William Shakespeare," she said, archly—

"Blow, blow, thou winter wind

Thou art not so unkind

As man's ingratitude!"

"Well?" he asked, still waiting, "is that all I get for my penny?"

"Young man, it's all thee needs! Thee'd better begin tempering the winter winds."

"Ingratitude?" he queried.

"Ingratitude," she nodded. "When thee has lived to be as old as I, thee will see the full beauty of the text 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant;' thee will understand that even the best of those who serve get hungry for a bit of honest praise before they die. Not fulsome, nor gush, nor insincerity, but 'just deserts,' the cordial gratitude of him in charge to those who make things possible."

"I see! You feel that I take people's assistance too much for granted?"

"I feel thee forgets what a beautiful balm a little word of thanks may give. Aye, more than a passing word in the aisle, of a Sabbath morning, for that hath the appearance of a mere happening; but notes in the mail, or a call in the home to say so! 'Tis a pleasant way to temper the wind."

"To the shorn lamb!" he cried exuberantly, "you're right, you're right! And of all men I should have known better for when I was a young fellow, earning my way through college, I worked for a certain man, really the most inconspicuous job in his business was mine and mighty uninteresting. I rarely came in touch with one so high up as he, of course, yet one day when I was sick of the whole deadly routine, there came a letter from him—a perfectly delightful letter saying how my devotion to details had been a boon to him, that he thought such fidelity merited a word of sincere thanks since he well knew how dull the work must seem, but that the man to whom it counted most was—etc., etc. Well, I guess I read it over a dozen times that day. It glorified the whole routine to think he noticed a mere cog like me! And do you know, I found out that he was quietly doing that sort of thing to all kinds of people in town; just a line or two, crisp, but with that grace that rings with sincerity because it didn't have to be done. To think I've been neglecting to carry into practice this finest bit of social service in a Christian's power!"

The Quaker Lady smiled gently: "Thee need not chastise thyself too severely, for it is a common failing. I mind me of few persons who seem to think it a worthwhile practice, but I wonder often if there's any lovelier gift to humanity than this little custom."

"Amen! Perhaps there won't be quite so much fainting by those weary of well-doing from now on," he cried, as lists of his own "dependables" trooped through his mind. And the homely little verses on this page he kept propped on his desk until they marked the beginning of a warmer era in his career.

Tell Him Now

IF with pleasure you are viewing

Any work a man is doing,

If you like him or you love him, tell him now;

Don't withhold your approbation

Till the parson makes oration

And he lies with snowy lilies o'er his brow,

For no matter how you shout it

He won't really care about it;

He won't know how many tear drops you have shed;

If you think some praise is due him

Now's the time to slip it to him,

For he cannot raise his tombstone when he's dead.

More than fame and more than money

Is the comment kind and sunny,

And the hearty warm approval of a friend;

For it gives to life a savor,

And it makes you stronger, braver,

And it gives you heart and spirit to the end;

If he earns your praise, bestow it;

If you like him, let him know it;

Let the words of true encouragement be said;

Do not wait till life is over

And he's underneath the clover

For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead.

How Others Use Us

"Usefulness Is The Rent We Pay For Room on Earth"

It has been suggested that we share with you extracts from some letters telling novel ways in which readers of THE BAPTIST make use of the Chimney Corner—since usefulness really is the rent we pay for room on earth, and what others do always proves suggestive.

For a Bride's Christmas

Jan. 4, 1922.

"...so when the Christmas cards gave out at the last minute, and I couldn't bear to omit her name, I cut out three red cardboard stockings and then cut out the three columns of the story for brides in the number of December 17, 'Instead of Keeping Christmas, Christmas Kept Her;' separating the three columns I mounted a column on the leg part of each stocking, decorated the toes with Christmas seals, and tied the tops together with red ribbon, in time to hang it on her door-knob Christmas Eve! She and her new husband read it that very night by the fire....."—Mrs. E. S., Portland (Whether Maine or Oregon—the postmark is effaced.)

Making Christmas Come Twice a Year

Oct. 12, 1921.

"Last August we gave the Summer Christmas Tree pageant (printed June 14) on the lawn of the little church in the village where we spend our summers. The ticket of admission was a doll or a toy for the mission box, and the cottagers certainly entered into the spirit of it, as we had 197 dolls besides toys. We gave it at sunset time, following a church supper, and the effect was what we wanted. The carols afterwards were so lovely"—M. E. B., Detroit.

A Chatter Box

Dec. 3, 1921.

"When R. had the measles it was a weary convalescence until I read of the Chatter Box with its one new toy a day, she rushed for it every morning the first thing. I had no idea playing missions would be such fun for her. Now she has a mission story every night as she goes to bed."—Mrs. S. S. J., Cincinnati.

Story Hour on Sundays

Feb. 12, 1922.

"...Sundays aren't what they were when I was a girl, certainly! My sister and I were worried over the worldliness of the children's day, and it has been such fun to have a Chimney Corner hour every Sunday. We hide the paper the minute it comes; then Helen reads the stories, several times dressing up to impersonate the character (kimono for Japanese, shawl for immigrant) and even the boys like it. We sing hymns that the story reminds us of, and if there are puzzles we guess them then and there. Thought you might like to know how the Corner was transplanted on a real hearth."—B. R. U., Plainfield, N. J.

A Leader's Scrap-Book

Feb. 17, 1922.

"I've made a scrap-book of all the Young Reserve material and use it in a quantity of different ways in my work."—Mrs. F. R. P., Salt Lake City, Utah.

Money Raising

Feb. 19, 1922.

"Last week our girls gave the little Continuation Campaign playlet "Wait A Minute"—Jan. 14, and although they're neither rich nor were interested before, the nineteen in the audience and those in the cast pledged $231. But we had prayed so hard about it beforehand, too."—V. T. C., New York.

For a Shut-In April 15, 1921.

"I tried a 'wall-paper story' as suggested, only instead of from a magazine used the ones in THE BAPTIST, one a week, pasting it on a square of the wall paper cut the size of the page. The sprigged paper quite dressed it up and she (a sick Sunday school scholar, we surmise from the rest of the letter) got to looking forward to the Saturday morning mail."—Miss T. R. O., Seattle.

remind you gently that the other boys have fine gardens, too.

"Y—yes!" you admit regretfully, wishing you were the only gardener in all Kodiak. It would be so grand a feeling to have every hungry orphan depending on your vegetables all winter.

"Some day maybe God and I will feed them all," you whisper to yourself. But little did you dream just then of Sonia: Sonia who could horn her way through any kind of a fence, and not only trample down fresh-growing plants, but even deliberately chew them up. And no matter how many orphans chased her away yesterday, today she calmly sneaks in somehow or other—and woe to all vegetables then!

You and Sonia, therefore, are not friends. You would have liked to weep over Sonia's lack of vision—it seemed impossible that any Baptist cow could so recklessly destroy sacred places—places where you and God were making earth and sun and air feed Baptist orphans! For whole weeks you went to bed to dream only of Sonia, and one day you asked what the Bible meant when it said, "Love your enemies"—could it possibly mean that you were to love Sonia?

"No," said the dear House Mother kindly, "no, a cow is not a person, you see, so I feel sure you are free to think whatever you wish about her wickedness."

"Then I don't see why the Lord God ever let Sonia be born!" you raged; and it was then the Matron asked, "Were you remembering Sonia's milk?" How day after day she had patiently been giving the orphans quarts and quarts of sweet fresh milk? Ah me, you had forgotten Sonia's usefulness; and for days you curbed your hatred of her.

But at last the superintendent himself saw that something must be done to save the farm from Sonia's ravages, and the thing he did was so right a solution that you marveled at his wisdom. For, of course, in winter a great deal of meat would be needed to feed so many Baptist orphans, and one cannot run around to a corner butcher shop on that island of Alaska for the simple reason that there is none! So, if meat was going to be needed, it must be cooked and bottled by the orphans in the cooking class, and that is how they came to bottle Sonia!

And that next winter when you felt even more at home and happier in that orphanage, you used to think it was the pleasantest sight in the world to see a whole tableful of orphans eating Sonia thankfully; and I almost think a certain unknown poem sang itself into your glad Alaskan heart:

"It is very nice to think

The world is full of meat and drink.

With little children saying grace

In every Christian kind of place."

The Young Reserves

An Orphan and the Bottled Cow

A SEED is such a pleasantly unexpected little thing. All dried up, you know; and shriveled, as if it were absolutely good for nothing, but along comes the superintendent of the orphanage and shows you how to make a neat little hole in the ground where you are to hide the seed away. You think it must be just another of these new delightful Christian ways, for certainly you never did this kind of thing back in that icy home where the ground was always covered with snow. So just as he shows you, you bury your seed, and pat the brown earth over it lovingly, then sprinkle it with water. After which you go indoors to eat your supper. For there is this to be said about orphanages; they feed you three times a day as if they knew that a boy had a stomach, a big empty stomach needing the very food they cooked in that surprising kitchen. Queer! You had not known before that houses ever had extra rooms made specially to cook in! Back in your old chilly log cabin was not the cooking always done over a little open fire right in the middle of the earthen floor? And was not the blue smoke always choking you so that your eyes watered and your throat smarted?

Meditating on how pleasant it is to have Baptist orphanages with kitchens and plenty of food for hungry orphan boys, you go to bed. And this, too, is another delightful thing. For in that old log cabin, beds were pine boughs with bear skins over them, and there were always twigs to poke into you at all the wrong places. Surely a soft white bed is a very Christian thing to give an orphan, you think as you jump into it; then out you jump—remembering to thank the Lord God for orphanages and kitchens and food and beds and, oh yes, for little brown seeds, too. So that by the time you hop into bed again you are wondering about that seed you planted. Surely nothing can ever come out of anything so entirely dead-looking!

But the next morning, bright and early, you rush out to see the hole and your seed; only, before you have done this satisfactorily an older orphan comes along: "Hey there," he calls, "whatever are you doing?"

"Just digging up my own seed to see if anything's happening to it," you reply, as if this were the wisest of replies. But he thinks otherwise, and explains the wisdom of waiting about a week for any results. Otherwise nothing will happen.

One day. Two days. Three days. Four days. And then a tiny green finger comes pointing up at you from your hole.

"Look!" you cry excitedly, "look at what my seed is doing!"

But ah me, the others have been growing seeds in that orphanage garden too

Winter Jewels

A MILLION little diamonds
Twinkled on the trees,
And all the children said:
"A jewel, if you please!"

But while they held their hands
To catch the diamonds gay
A million little sunbeams came
And stole them all away.

many seasons to grow excited over your one tiny green shoot. But you love it! You kneel beside it whole hours at a time.

"Where did it all come from?" you ask the superintendent.

"From God," he explains, and shows you plants and seed-pods, explaining about God's earth and sun and rain.

"Oh!" you cry, seeing that seeds are Christian things just as you supposed. Whereupon something that was dead in your own bleak little Alaska heart wakes up, and where before you were a quiet, forlorn orphan you now become a bright cheerful one. As if you too had been a brown seed now blooming into a real live plant.

By this time, of course, like the other boys, you have planted whole rows of seeds, so that there can be vegetables for hungry orphan stomachs next winter. You are so proud of those prim green shoots under your care that you brag about them at suppertime, which makes the matron

CRUSADERS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH: OUR WORK IN CHINA

Matt. 5:13-16

Available Literature

The following literature may be secured direct from The General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, or 125 No. Wabash Avenue, Chicago: "Swatow Academy," free; "Guide Book," 25 cents; "Swatow Kindergarten," 3 cents; "Just Girls," 5 cents; "Chinese Heart Throbs," $1.25; "Map of China" showing mission stations, 35 cents.

1. By the Back Door. In the great "Imperial Dictionary" of China containing hundreds of volumes, the name of Jesus Christ has found a place for centuries. He is described in about a dozen words as a kind of sage or wise man among the men of the East. And that is all China knew of Jesus until less than a century and a quarter ago. Fast locked against outside influences, the great empire seemed doomed to remain unevangelized.

The Chinese people however have always overflowed into adjacent countries. So it happened that the early missionaries to India—Carey, Marshman, and Ward—found Chinese people there. Mr. Marshman even began to give them the Scriptures.

2. A "Real Forty-Niner." It is thus that Dr. William Ashmore described himself, because it was in that year that he decided to become a missionary and was appointed by the board to Siam. There he acquired a remarkable command of the Chinese language, and a few years later, when additional ports were opened in China, he established a mission in Swatow.

In 1860 Swatow was only a small fishing village, with one business street. The people were bitterly hostile to the foreigners. This was not without reason, for the opium and coolie traffic was already a cause for reproach, and the Chinese failed naturally to distinguish between worthy and unworthy foreigners.

The missionaries were ridiculed; they were driven from one street to another; their words were drowned with shouts of "Kill the foreign devil!" They were pelted with any old thing that happened to be lying around, and if the missiles happened to be stones, painful cuts and bruises resulted.

But none of these things moved William Ashmore, neither counted he his life dear unto himself that he might preach the gospel in Swatow. He stayed on. He made light of his tribulations. He had the blessed gift of humor and made fun of things that would have broken the hearts of others.

Dr. Ashmore purchased for the mission

a rough hillside, bare and treeless. In a region where every hot season brings violent typhoons, it was considered a hazardous undertaking to build on a hillside, rather than on the less exposed level ground. As a matter of fact, the land was the best Dr. Ashmore could buy with the limited funds available, but time has proved the wisdom of his choice.

From Swatow the missionaries pressed out into the surrounding country. The waterways are so numerous that many of the places could be reached by boats. The mission now has several house-boats in this field, fitted up with cabins.

In 1902 Dr. Ashmore returned to America, but still continued to work for China through voice and pen. On his eightieth birthday, publicly celebrated by a reception in Tremont Temple, Boston, he presented to the board a large tract of land adjoining the mission compound on the hillside, valued at $2,000, upon which to erect suitable buildings for the theological seminary which now bears his name.

The veteran missionary passed to his reward in 1909 at the age of eighty-four.

3. Celebrating a Cycle of Cathay. Westerners count time by centuries. The Chinese count in cycles of sixty years. It was fitting, therefore, and quite in keeping with Chinese custom, that the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the Swatow mission should be celebrated in both American and Chinese fashion.

The celebration took place in October, 1920. Dr. Ashmore's son, Dr. William Ashmore, Jr., was there to tell in Chinese the story of the early days of the mission, days of faith and heroism. The simple narrative of what occurred, declared Dr. Groesbeck, one of the missionaries who participated in the celebration, was one of the finest evidences of Divine Providence in the history of missions.—Adapted from Service.

All things belong to God. Read Psalm 50:10-12.

We belong to God. Read 1 Cor. 6:19b, 20a.

God has set us a wonderful example of giving. Read John 3:16.

Our Master gave his best for us. Read II Cor. 8:9; Phil. 2:5-8.

God wants us to give our best to him. II Cor. 8:5.

God expects us to give of our means to him. Read I Cor. 16:2; Mal. 3:10.

God is challenging us to prove our sincerity. Here is a pledge which gives us the opportunity to show our loyalty to Christ.

The Covenant of Youth

"Recognizing God's ownership of all that I have and am in Christ, I covenant with him to give as he prospers me and to devote at least one-tenth of my income toward the maintenance and extension of his kingdom on earth."

We have seen through our previous studies that God is the owner of all that we are and have; that he has faith in us as his children, that he has entrusted to us his possessions, making us thereby his stewards. Some of us have failed to measure up to his expectation. Instead of devoting at least a tenth of our income toward the maintenance and extension of his kingdom on earth, we have sought to provide for his kingdom by means of socials, sales, bazaars, and all sorts of money-raising devices. In some cases we secured the money, and lost the blessing; but more often through failure to achieve our purpose, we lost the blessing and crippled all possible advance of the Kingdom of God. God never meant that his kingdom should advance by such methods.

"The need of the hour is money for the kingdom, but greater than this is the need for that consecration which systematically as a matter of worship, places money on the altar. Pledge your tithe as your declaration of loyalty in God's world warfare."

"What shall I render unto Jehovah for all his benefits.

I will pay my vows unto Jehovah,
In the courts of Jehovah's house,
Yea, in the presence of all his people."

"Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord, I care not how,
But stir my heart in passion for the world!
Stir me to give, to go—but most to pray
Stir, till the blood-red banner be unfurled
O'er the lands that still in deepest darkness lie,
O'er deserts where no cross is lifted high.

"Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord. Thy heart was stirred
By love's intensest fire, till thou didst give Thine only Son, thy best beloved one,
Even to the dreadful cross, that I might live;
Stir me to give myself so back to thee,

That Thou canst give thyself again through me."

What the Covenant Will Mean to Our Church

- (1) A deepened spiritual life.
- (2) A deepened interest in the kingdom.
- (3) More life service volunteers.
- (4) A willingness to follow Christ's leadership.

Have a period of prayer to bring each individual face to face with his responsibility to God for the progress of the kingdom.

Pass out pledges—urge all to sign.

Have the pastor offer a closing prayer of dedication.

Hymn:—Praise God, From Whom All Blessings Flow.

Important Announcement

The one big question in the minds of all college men and women is—after college, what?

Christian Social Service

Christian social service is a new profession open for college men and women; and those thinking of making their life contribution to this sphere of usefulness will be interested to learn of the graduate course in religious education and social-religious work, leading to the Master's Degree, which is now being given to Teachers' College, Columbia University.

Course of Study

The course of study includes from one to two years of graduate study, according to the ability of the student, and covers such topics as the following: Bible study, religious education (theory and practice), child psychology, boys' and girls' club work, Christian Americanization programs, assimilation of the immigrant, industrial and household arts, nursery and physical education. An announcement of the courses may be secured upon application to Miss Adelaide T. Case, Department of Religious Education, Teachers' College, New York City.

Practical Field Work

Opportunity is given each student to do practical field work, under supervision, in one of the Christian Centers maintained by the Affiliated Baptist City Societies—for which Teachers' College gives credit.

Scholarships

The Baptist boards offer a limited number of scholarships to Baptist students desiring to take this course. These scholarships include tuition and a liberal cash allowance to assist the student with his or her personal expenses. Further information about the scholarships may be obtained from Miss Jessie Dodge White, candidate secretary of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society or from Stanley B. Hazzard, director of religious education of the Affiliated Baptist City Societies—both at the Baptist Headquarters, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Forward March!

Under the leadership of Mr. Ray Shubert, Kansas City, Mo., young people have outlined the following program for March, April, and May.

1. Each active member of the B. Y. P. U. a daily Bible reader.
2. Two hundred and fifty in the Tithers' League.
3. Twenty in the Life Service League.
4. A B. Y. P. U. Sunday.
5. Two Hundred and fifty in the Quiet Half-hour League.
6. A senior and junior society in every church.
7. That we encourage and assist our pastors in the spring evangelistic services.
8. That each church send a delegate to the B. Y. P. U. Convention or to the Mount Vernon Assembly.
9. Each active member, win one.
10. A 10 per cent increase in membership in both active and associate members.

Associational Meeting

The Young People of Blue River Association will meet at Lone Jack, Mo., March 4 and 5. General Secretary White will deliver a series of addresses.

A Week with "The Baptist"

Plans are now under way for the inauguration of a great campaign to secure subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. We believe it will be possible to add 4,000 new subscriptions to the paper within this year. This will naturally mean a greater interest in our denominational task.

Claim Street, Aurora, Ill.

The Aurora Association held a rally at Plainfield, Ill., February 9. The Daily Press reports: "If a lady next door hadn't sent word that her baby had gone into hysterics, and to 'please be quieter,' it is quite likely the annual Aurora Association Baptist Young People's Union rally banquet, held at Plainfield last night, might be going yet."

Flying Squadron

The Claim Street young people have organized a Flying Squadron. This Squadron visits the different churches of the association and takes charge of the B. Y. P. U. service, or the regular Sunday evening service of the church. Lester Stearns the president writes: "We are trying to carry the Gospel as young people to young people in our vicinity."

On to St. Paul

Fact II

With the development of the railroad industry in this territory, St. Paul became, and has continued to be, the railroad center of the Northwest. Today there are nine large railroad systems operating twenty-three lines running out of St. Paul. A number of these lines have headquarters in St. Paul and in the operation of the trains, shops, etc., employment is provided for thousands of people. On Jackson Street, between Fourth and Fifth Streets, you may see the largest exclusive railway office building in the world.

Fact III

Jobbing has been one of St. Paul's largest industries since the city's earliest days. In the vicinity of the Union Station, about Smith Park, and extending as far as Tenth Street, may be seen one of the great jobbing districts of the country. From these houses, goods of all kinds are supplied to the Northwest and in some cases to the entire country. The states particularly served by St. Paul jobbers are Minnesota, northern Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana. When one realizes that it is farther from St. Paul to the western boundary of Montana than it is from St. Paul to Florida, some idea of the extent of the territory served by St. Paul may be gained. Many of the larger jobbers have their own factories and manufacture a large proportion of the products which they handle. It is the ideal of St. Paul jobbers to give service, and through unexcelled products, organizations which have been slowly and carefully built up and with the best of railroad facilities, St. Paul jobbers do serve.

IN THE HEART OF ST. PAUL
B. Y. P. U. CONVENTION MEETS, JUNE 28-JULY 2, 1922

Religious Education

Promoting a Church Vacation School

1. When to begin: The promotion of the first vacation school to be held in a church or community should begin in the early winter. If not begun then it should begin at the earliest possible time after that. While the present time is very late to start, if energy is used, a successful school may still be produced.

2. An interested individual must take the first steps. If this individual is the pastor, a great advantage is at once seen. If not the pastor, he should be interviewed and interested at once.

3. Literature. The interested individual should secure free literature from the city or state Baptist director of religious education, or state headquarters, or the C. V. S. division of the American Baptist Publication Society, 1703 Chestnut St., Philadelphia. A copy of the text-book "How To Conduct A Church Vacation School," by Gage, price $1.50, should be ordered at the same time.

4. Sell the church vacation school to the church. A church vacation school should not be the child of the pastor or a small group but of the church as a body. The pastor, through sermons and prayer-meeting talks, and selected individuals in talks to the Sunday school, young people's society, woman's societies, men's organizations, organized classes, junior and intermediates, should give a full presentation of the enterprise.

5. Evangelistic approach. As the church prepares by proper exhortation, planning and work for adult evangelism, so in the same spirit of enthusiasm and consecration it should prepare for the church vacation school. Such preparation will insure a supply of teachers, attendance of children and the success of the school. It is the church's great evangelistic opportunity with the children.

6. By formal action let the church commit itself to the movement.

7. Organization. a. If a committee on religious education exists in the church, let a sub-committee be appointed for C. V. S. functioning under this general committee. b. If no such committee exists either elect one and give the C. V. S. as its first task, or elect a special committee on C. V. S.

8. Committees. Let the committee in charge of the proposed school, appoint the following committees from the best available people in the church: housing and equipment, publicity, teachers, lesson course and supplies.

All of these committees will need to begin their work promptly. For suggestions as to duties and opportunities, consult "How To Conduct," our new "Handbook for Church Vacation Schools" and other books and leaflet literature.

The work of the committee on publicity will need to begin promptly and be carried on in a vigorous way in order to secure good results.

We would call your attention to the leaflet entitled "Surprise Package" as providing both good publicity and craft material, which can be collected locally without expense. Secure this leaflet from the sources indicated above.

A Training School for Negro Workers

A conference of more than ordinary importance and significance took place in the Olivet Church, Chicago, Feb. 15, when the chosen representatives of the Negro Baptist churches of the north met and after full and free discussion organized an Educational Society. The immediate project, which was the occasion of the meeting, was the proposal to establish a training school for Christian workers, primarily for our Negro churches, in the north. There has been under consideration for more than a year a proposal to purchase the property of the Baptist Missionary Training School of the Woman's Home Mission Society at 2969 Vernon Avenue. Since the removal of the headquarters of the Woman's Home Mission Society and the offices of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society the building is larger than the society needs for its school. It is admirably adapted for the special purpose in mind.

In order to have a reasonable and representative organization which could function in cooperation with the two home mission societies in the educational undertaking, the new educational society was organized. The board of managers is to be composed of twenty-seven members, fifteen of whom will represent the Negro churches of the northern states, and twelve, the two home mission societies.

The president of the newly formed society is Dr. Austin of Pittsburgh, and the secretary, Dr. McWilliams of Toledo. The board is representative of various sections of the country and is composed of some of the strongest and most effective Negro leaders of the North. The charter of the society, which will be sought under the best legal advice, will provide not only for this projected school in Chicago but other schools which may later be needed.

The denomination will be interested in financial details of the undertaking. The Training School property has been appraised conservatively at $250,000. The Woman's Society agreed to sell it for the purpose for $225,000 and make a further donation of $50,000. The Home Mission Society has appropriated $75,000 toward the project and the newly organized educational society will undertake to raise $100,000 in three annual instalments. It agrees to have $25,000 in cash by September.

Golden Text: Psalm 145:17

Summary of the Quarter's Lessons

There is an advantage in viewing the life of a nation in perspective after studying a series of outstanding incidents in detail. These work into the tapestry giving a clear idea of the motive of the pattern. For three months the study has been that of the deterioration of a nation that wilfully and in spite of repeated warnings wandered from God, beginning at the point where the Kingdom of the Hebrews, because of the injustice of its rulers, divided into the Northern and the Southern Kingdoms. The Northern Kingdom, or the Kingdom of Israel, is traced through 250 years of wanderings. Against the darkness of their sins and their wicked rulers, there stands out shiningly the strength and goodness of Elijah, Elisha and Amos. With last Sunday's lesson the curtain is dropped upon this kingdom as it becomes the "lost Ten Tribes," wiped from the pages of history. Aside from the value of the knowledge of these historical facts, the study of ancient history is invaluable in tracing the principles that control the welfare of men and the destiny of national life, and showing the hand of God working out the divine purpose for the race.

Next Sunday's lesson takes us back in time to the division of the kingdom and to a study of the Southern Kingdom, the Kingdom of Judah, which will be followed throughout the quarter to its final destruction.

Our Own Folks

Good News From Roumania: "Ordinance 15831" Annulled!

By REV. J. H. RUSHBROOKE, Baptist Commissioner for Europe

When in America I was able to report to the two Baptist conventions the promises of the Roumanian government concerning religious liberty given me in writing by the Minister of Public Worship only a few days before I left for the United States. I was careful to add that while these promises were in themselves entirely satisfactory, we would need to wait their fulfilment and would need to remember that whatever the government might do, local bigotry would continue, and prejudices of permanent officials would have to be reckoned with. The end was not yet, though the Roumanian government had announced a change of policy.

Advance has, alas! proved disappointingly slow. Shortly after my visit, the minister of public worship, Mr. Goga, and the then foreign minister, Mr. Take Jonescu, delivered speeches in the Roumanian parliament that were quite admirable, but the former delayed for three months the issue of any new order to his executive subordinates. Then in July he circulated to the prefects an ordinance which declared in general terms that the Baptists were free. He neglected, however, to include in this ordinance an essential part of his promise, namely that the restrictions contained in his earlier edict were not annulled. The result may be anticipated: every bullying policeman and prejudiced official continued the policy of pestering and persecuting our people and justified himself by appealing to the uncancelled regulations of the notorious Ordinance 15831 of April 1, 1921. In several instances personal injuries of a serious nature were inflicted.

When in December last I visited Roumania a change of government had just taken place, and Mr. Take Jonescu was installed as Prime Minister. I have all along believed in Mr. Take Jonescu's personal loyalty to the cause of religious freedom, and was quite prepared for his cordial reception and his readiness to use his enlarged authority to insure the abolition of the oppressive regulations. A memorandum which I prepared and presented to him and to his Minister of Public Worship, Mr. Dumitrescu, called forth from both gentlemen reassuring declarations including a definite promise of the revocation of Ordinance No. 15831. Judge of my grave disappointment when I learned in London that five days after my interviews with the Roumanian ministers of state an ordinance had been issued which, like that of the preceding July, omitted to annul the regulations directed against our people. It was not difficult to understand what had happened; the signature of a high official in the Ministry of Worship who was largely responsible for the original issue of Ordinance 15831 and whose hostility had been made clear on my earliest visit to the Ministry, was attached to this latest and unsatisfactory declaration. At once I telegraphed and wrote to Mr. Take Jonescu to express the disappointment which would be felt in America and Britain, and my assurance that his real intentions had been frustrated by the permanent officials. Mr. Take Jonescu's government lasted scarcely a month, but he found time to attend to this. Almost the last official act of his Minister of Worship was to annul in one direct straight-forward sentence of an ordinance dated January 17 the whole of the provisions of the infamous document of the preceding April. By some unfortunate error, the Baptists of Roumania were not immediately aware of the action, and telegraphed to me just before the close of January that my protest to Mr. Take Jonescu had been ineffectual. Only in February did I receive the document which proved that he had justified my confidence, and that his brief ministry had registered a historic advance in regard to the legal position of our people in the land. I gladly pay to him and Mr. Dumitrescu the honor that is their due.

This is a first decisive step for which to thank God. There will be no going back from it. The way to full religious liberty and freedom for Baptists may be long, but the official edicts to which persecutors appealed are no more.

Christian Centers

By ALFRED E. ISAAC

One of the latest developments in our home missionary program is the Christian Center. It was originated by our Woman's Home Mission Society since the war as a method of ministering to the women and children in the congested sections of foreign-speaking peoples. Its success was apparent from the start and its scope so enlarged that it was soon seen that a program for men and boys must be included. Therefore the general Home Mission Society took a share in the work. Since then the two national societies have been carrying on these enterprises jointly.

The purpose of the Christian Center is to establish in congested districts a sort of cooperative Christian home on a large scale. Each center maintains a small staff of paid resident workers and utilizes a large corps of unpaid volunteer workers from the neighboring churches. It supplements, but in no sense supplants, the Christian church. It provides wholesome entertainment and amusement for the community in which it operates, and tries to meet as many of the social and home needs of the people as possible. Frequently it includes a day nursery for mothers who have to work, a clinic, a well-equipped laundry where for ten cents a tired mother may come in and do the family washing without undue fatigue. It provides shower baths, so sadly needed in these districts. Because of the rapid growth of these Christian Centers and the lack of previous experience in conducting them, it seemed advisable to bring the paid resident workers together for a conference.

In response to an invitation sent out by Mrs. Westfall and Dr. Brooks, about sixty of these workers gathered in Buffalo for a two days' conference, Feb. 13-14. They were entertained by the Baptist Union of Buffalo and the Prospect Avenue Church, which included an automobile drive to the various centers of activity of the Buffalo Union. In addition to the Christian Center workers a considerable number of city mission and state convention secretaries were in attendance. The following cities were represented: Kansas City, Kan., St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Indiana Harbor, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Rankin, Weirton, W. Va., Philadelphia, Camden, New York City, Brooklyn, New Haven, Boston, Rochester. A frank interchange of experiences brought out the various kinds of activities carried on at the centers. Problems connected with conducting the centers were brought up and discussed. Policies and programs were projected.

At the close of the conference a findings committee endeavored to sum up the conclusions of the conference. It was decided that normally a Christian Center should be located in a congested foreign-speaking section, in a building adapted to educational and social service, manned in part by resident workers and under denominational control. The purpose of the Christian Center is to so interpret the gospel by teaching and service as to make for Jesus Christ a commanding place in the life of the individual, the home and the community, in other words, the regeneration of every life and all life. The underlying principles of the Christian Center include ministering to human needs as Christ would have us do; activities have value as they promote vital, personal contacts with the Christian workers; bad habits and customs must be replaced by good ones; service and contacts should be on the basis of the family as the unit; workers should seek to bring all converts into church membership on confession of faith; each group should be followed until every individual is under direct Christian teaching and influence; the program should be such and so correlated as to hold every individual from the kindergarten to the adult life in touch with Christ.

Hearty appreciation was expressed by the conference to Dr. Brooks and Mrs. Westfall for calling the conference and to the Baptists of Buffalo for their splendid hospitality.

Some Burma Notes

By J. HERBERT COPE

At last the Burma bill has been passed through Parliament. It seemed for a time it would die before being born but the Lords took pity on it and brought the infant to life. The only difference it will make for the time being is that the Lieutenant Governor drops the Lieutenant and is called Excellency instead of Honor and incidentally he draws several thousand dollars more a year in salary. Also the India reform bills have been applied to Burma and that is more interesting to the missionaries. The bill calls for a division of functions, some to be retained by the British and some to be controlled by the Burmans. One of these latter is the educational department. And it will be interesting to see how he looks upon the fact that more than half the high schools are under the management of missionaries, in some towns and areas being the only schools.

The Burmans continue to become westernized. A committee has been sitting in Rangoon taking evidence on the matter of the reform scheme, calling witnesses. And would you believe it the Burman women picketed the committee and almost wrecked its work for a day or so. Evidently their efforts were more successful than some at home. The patriotic ones have gone back to homespun to show their contempt for foreign cloth but one wonders whether the Burman woman's love of the pretty clothes will sustain such a shock permanently.

The so-called national schools which are trying to carry on without government aid are having rough sledding and some are having to give up. Others are going strong and the largest school in Burma is one such. The leaders claim they can carry on in the large centers but fear they will have to succumb in the small towns. The college has about sixty students, they say, but they are sacrificing standard for numbers.

The largest conference of missionaries in Burma is now history. There were about 150 in attendance besides a number of children visitors. Only those physically prevented from attending were absent. Dr. and Mrs. Robbins were present and the former took an active part in the discussions. Probably someone else will write a complete report of the proceedings. The large number of new missionaries present is worthy of note. During the war Burma suffered as did all other missions in the number of missionaries. But there are more now in the country than ever before. The disquieting fact is that the new appointees are for the most if not entire "part" for educational and institutional work. Not a man came this year from home for station work. One is coming from India and one from Siam but none from America. And now comes the cablegram from the secretaries that there is a grave financial situation at home which unless remedied will certainly mean retrenchment and that in the midst of the great campaign for the one hundred million dollars. It will be discouraging news to a great many missionaries. But all are hoping and praying that the last six months of the financial year will more than make up for the losses of the first half.

Let us all pray God that he will guide us to do the right thing in this matter.

A Church Building Which Wins Respect

By WILLIAM KEECH

The new Baptist Temple of San Salvador was dedicated on December 11, 1921. At 9 a. m. a large gathering of people met in front of the temple and after a hymn of praise and prayer, the front doors opening to the vestibule were opened by Mrs. J. G. Todd of Santa Ana who declared the temple opened for the glory of God and for the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The audience then filed into the auditorium which was well filled. About 400 people were present, including representatives from nearly all of our churches and outstations in the republic. The dedication service was led by the Rev. J. G. Todd of Santa Ana, and in the absence of Rev. C. S. Detweiler who was unable to arrive in time from New York, the sermon was preached by the general missionary, Rev. William Keech. The words of the Apostle Paul in Ephesians 2:20-22 were chosen as the text, in which the church of Jesus Christ (the believers) is said to be the temple of the Lord for the indwelling of God by the Spirit. At the close of this service six persons were baptized upon the confession of their faith in the Lord Jesus.

A very gratifying event of the morning was the arrival of the congregation of the Central American Mission which had suspended its meeting of the morning in order to come and join with us in this happy event.

Meetings were also held in the afternoon and evening in which several speakers took part, including Sr. Jose Maria Perez, pastor in charge of the Central American Church.

On the two following days a conference was held in which all the national workers and other brethren took part. The themes which were treated were concerning Christian and missionary activity, and were the means of new inspiration and help to the brethren who afterwards returned to their respective homes, at long distances some of them, but full of joy and faith in the Lord.

Our new equipment in San Salvador consists of an auditorium on the upper story which will seat upwards of 400 people. Beneath is the schoolroom of the same size as the auditorium, which can be divided up into rooms for classes by a series of rolling divisions. A room is provided for the primary department and our press is also housed in one of the rooms where our printing department is in full activity. At the back of the lot a house has been built for the pastor in charge. The temple is one of the best buildings in the city and is the admiration of all who pass. After four years in ruined quarters left desolate by the two destructive series of earthquakes, we do thank God for this equipment where we believe the Lord is going to do a great work. He has in fact begun and souls are being saved.

Colorado Letter

J. W. BAILEY

Found—A Man

The man is F. W. Freeman. Colorado Baptists approve most cordially the selection of Judge Freeman as the general chairman of the Council of Laymen of the Northern Baptist Convention. No one has a larger place in our confidence and no one among us has so large an influence in all our counsels. Colorado is honored in his selection as chairman but those who made the choice honored themselves and reflected commendable wisdom. What a stalwart personality he is, what singleness of devotion to the kingdom, what passion for the success of our denominational enterprises, and with what earnestness and energy he gives himself to the task! He is a wonderful friend and a superb leader. As this is written he is in the East on a speaking trip of three weeks to stir up our laymen to a sense of their high duty in this hour. The week he left, City Park Church, of which he is a member, devoted a large part of its prayer service to special prayer for him in his effort and for the cause which he has gone to present. God give him many days, and as the days so may be his strength.

St. Valentine's Day

Do Baptists generally observe Valentine's Day? Perhaps not. Colorado Baptists did this year in one of the most significant meetings they have ever held. On vote of the executive committee Judge Freeman, the convention president, called a special meeting of the state convention at the First Church in Denver Feb. 14 to consider the present denominational crisis. The meeting was attended by more than 200 delegates and continued all day. It was a time of frank discussion and conference. One of the significant and heartening features of the day was the letter from Joshua Gravett which appeared in THE BAPTIST Feb. 25. A strenuous day closed with the adoption of a resolution presented, for a committee, by Mr. Charles R. Brock, urging the churches of Colorado to do everything possible to perform their duty in relation to the present denominational needs.

Director of Promotion W. F. Ripley, is working indefatigably to get the churches lined up, and the eight districts into which the state has been divided to function 100 per cent. Mr. Charles Brock is chairman of the State Laymen's Council and is giving attention to the layman's organization. Dr. F. B. Palmer, executive secretary, in addition to his already arduous tasks, has taken on the chairmanship of one of the most important sections for which no director could be found. These men are being cordially supported by many among the pastors and laymen of the state and if Colorado does not do her full share it will not be their fault. There are many encouraging things in the work and the workers are proceeding with prayer and supplication, with faith and consecration, to the task. The churches and pastors of Denver are getting under the load in a most gratifying and encouraging way.

A Great Location

Some of the men of the First Church of Denver are planning for extension of the building on one side to provide for a growing men's class. Unfortunately the available space for expansion is narrow and cannot provide wholly satisfactory quarters. Many of our Denver Baptists both in the First Church and other churches have a vision of the day when the church will own the property to the corner on the east of the present building and will be the great downtown religious center of Denver. It is the only strictly downtown location in the city. Your scribe has some acquaintance with our Baptist situation in a considerable number of larger western cities, and there is not anywhere a single church that begins to compare with the First Church of Denver for strategic location for a great down-town service. With adequate quarters, as indicated, the First Church of Denver might become one of the greatest forces for righteousness in the country. What a tragedy, yes, what a sin, it would be for Denver Baptists ever to let the present location pass from their hands.

Rev. E. B. Pratt who recently came to the pastorate of Calvary Church has just closed a successful evangelistic meeting with his church. The men of the church were so pleased with his work that at the close of the last Sunday evening meeting a committee announced to the pastor that the men of the church proposed to give him a new Dodge car in appreciation of his services. He is proving a most congenial and efficient addition to the Baptist leadership in the city.

Colorado Woman's College

The second term of the college year is near the close at Colorado Woman's College. There have been several encouraging features in the work, and the year promises to be a very gratifying and fruitful one. Miss Emma Woodbury, who came this year as head of the department of English and dean of the faculty, is proving herself a very strong leader. She has held similar positions in colleges in the South and has had the best of college and university training. Already she has won a reputation as one of the most efficient teachers of English in the state. Several of our teachers have rendered devoted and efficient service through a number of years and it is hoped that they may be retained for years to come.

The college is looking to the success of the New World Movement for expansion and equipment. At the meeting of the state convention in Canon City the matter of a new dormitory or cottage in which girls might live at approximately the cost of living at home was brought to the attention of the delegates. It aroused great interest and there was an evident desire in the hearts of a great many to have a part in such an enterprise. The college executive committee and committees from the state board and the woman's missionary organization for the state, have approved the project and it is hoped that the building may be ready for students by the fall of 1922. It is one of the objects for which designations may be made in the present campaign.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

Followers of the Gleam

Milwaukee is fortunate in being able to demonstrate many new things in religion, and especially in religious education. The last to be demonstrated was a great pageant under the direction of the community school of religious education. A pageant dealing with the history of religious education covering the period of time from the Hebrew patriarch in his tent, instructing his child in the law, down to the week-day religious educational activities, was prepared by Rev. Charles A. Boyd, Baptist director of religious education, and presented on two successive evenings to crowded houses. Thirty-two schools and about 500 people took part. With but one or two exceptions different schools had different episodes each night. It was an effort worth while, and pictured the history of religious education in such a way as to make a deep impression on people.

As usual the Baptist schools took a leading part in this pageant.

Standing With the Heretics

One of the field workers in the drive that is now on relates the fact that there was one church where the pastor had prevented cooperation with the New World Movement, and he still questioned the orthodoxy of some of the leaders of the denomination. After the entire matter of our situation had been presented by the field worker and the pastor, a sister arose and said: "Pastor we have heard a great deal about heretics, and the lack of orthodoxy on the part of our missionaries and ministers, but we have also read about the many hundreds who are being won to Christ in Africa and elsewhere, and some of us are beginning to feel that it was time that we took our stand with the heretics. They seem to be doing so much to bring in God's Kingdom, while all we do is to complain about the way they do it, or the doctrinal beliefs of those who lead." Needless to say that the church lined up with the Continuation Campaign.

Some Notes From the Field

Rev. R. Hack, of Iowa, has accepted the call to Ablemans Church and will begin his work the last of March.

Rev. Charles Knapp, of Wausau is enjoying prosperity in his work. What was formerly the German Baptist Church of that city, was given the property of the defunct English-speaking church, on condition that the work be extended in such a way as to touch the life of the city. This has been done; a number of the former members of the old church have united with the present organization and some fine young people have come by baptism.

Rev. H. H. Savage, of Baraboo, has been holding meetings in North Freedom, which resulted in about sixty decisions. This will be a great boost to the church.

Rev. F. Elmgren, of Minnesota, has become pastor of the Swedish Baptist Church of Kenosha.

Rev. R. R. Turpin, recently a graduate of Morehouse College, has settled in Madison as pastor of the Mount Zion Negro Church. This church is hopeful of new quarters which will enable it to enlarge its work.

Oshkosh is rejoicing in the largest community school of religious education in the state. The enrolment is above 200. Rev. E. R. Mintz has been largely instrumental in bringing about this school.

At Beloit is a successful community school of religious education, and there are plans to install a program of week-day religious education this fall.

Rev. E. R. MacKinney of Eau Claire has consented to act as director of evangelism until Easter. He is urging the churches to have a week-end campaign of evangelism. This is working out well in many places and assists materially in these days of complicated programs of every sort.

The Wyocena Church recently re-dedicated its remodeled plant. Dr. A. LeGrand and Rev. E. G. Hamley had charge of the services of dedication. A number of neighboring pastors were in attendance. Pastor Lovik and his people are to be congratulated on their achievements.

EVANGELIST JOHN M. LINDEN conducted a three weeks' evangelistic campaign at Centerville Church. About forty persons accepted Christ. Upon special invitation thirty offered themselves to God for service in whatever manner or field he might indicate. The church is in the Stewardship Campaign as outlined by the N. B. C.

DURING THE PAST SIX MONTHS Calvary Church, Harbor Beach, has made rapid progress. Every department is active, and the church membership has increased by fifteen additions. The Sunday school membership has increased 20 per cent. B. Y. P. U. has grown from a membership of twenty-five to 231 due to a membership campaign of three months. The church building has been remodeled into practically a new building. The pastor, Rev. E. Shepard Bramble is a young man who has entered his work with enthusiasm.

OHIO

ST. PARIS and six neighboring rural churches are taking steps to form a council for organized cooperation as a group.

LINCOLN PARK, CINCINNATI: Pastor Carleton W. Atwater will soon have completed seven years of service here. Bible school has averaged 500 attendance for three months. Conversions are taking place weekly.

FOLLOWING A WEEK'S EVANGELISTIC campaign in Central Church, Columbus, a baptismal service was held at which forty-five persons were immersed. They were converted during the four weeks preceding when Prof. P. P. Bilhorn was soloist and chorus leader and Rev. William Pieffer, evangelist-pastor of the church, preached. Twenty are awaiting baptism and many were received by letter and experience. Prof. Bilhorn and Mr. Pieffer are conducting services in the North M. E. Church, Columbus. A reception for new members of Central Church was planned for March 10. A purse of $400 was given Prof. Bilhorn at the close of the Central Church campaign, and the members of the church presented Mr. Pieffer with $150.

SINCE THE COMING to WEST MANSFIELD of Rev. E. N. Long, the Sunday school has doubled its enrolment and increased in attendance by more than one-half. A B. Y. P. U. has been organized with thirty-five active members. Seventeen new members have been received into full fellowship; others are awaiting baptism.

PIONEER CHURCH, Rev. H. A. Thompson, pastor, has had a ten-day evangelistic campaign. Attendance not large, but meetings richly spiritual. Several persons under deep conviction, who have not yet taken a stand. Other churches of the town are helping this one in every way possible. The church has been neglected for four years and membership is low. The pastor's support is almost nothing, and to meet expenses he must do outside work if he remains in Pioneer.

DURING FEBRUARY EVANSTON CHURCH, Cincinnati, received two by letter, two by baptism and one by experience. About $1,550 has been raised toward the building fund.

MILLERSTOWN HAS CLOSED three weeks of meetings which resulted in nineteen conversions. A B. Y. P. U. has been organized.

THE WORK AT FIRST CHURCH, VAN WERT, is opening auspiciously under Rev. Albert Read. A W. W. G. organized and representatives will be sent to Toledo meetings. Two weeks' special meetings will be held preceding Easter.

IN THE LAST MONTH OSTRANDER has received thirty-seven into the church—thirty-one by baptism, six by letter—the fruit of a three weeks' meeting.

REV. H. K. FREEMAN is nearly on his fourth year as pastor of Prospect Church, during which time a new church building has been erected at a cost of $27,000, and the Sunday school has doubled in attendance. Rev. C. H. Stull, Rev. R. Hughes and ministers of the association held a week-end mission here recently.

MANY CHURCHES in the Portsmouth Association are enjoying quiet but gracious revivings. The First Church, has continued since the week of prayer, daily morning and evening prayer meetings. The morning meetings are held in thirty different groups, the evening at the church. Rev. Bishop, of the Kendall Ave., and Rev. Overstreet, of the Berean Church, have had good meetings. Rev. J. S. Forren of the First Church, Jackson, plans to begin a meeting soon. S. P. Stopp at Willston hopes for an ingathering at some special efforts Easter.

MEMORIAL CHURCH, COLUMBUS, through the efforts of C. R. Robbins, pastor, has raised money for redecorating the auditorium and a new roof. Evangelist Fairo preached every night for three weeks. Seventy-seven cards were signed. A new church building is needed.

Workers' Institutes

Three successful Workers' Institutes have been held recently. Two simultaneous institutes were put on in Cleveland Jan. 22-27. Rev. T. B. Frizelle, director of institutes and assemblies for the Publication Society and Mr. W. A. Holmes, state director of religious education, co-operated with Chairman R. O. Carver and fellow members of the local committee on religious education in planning a program which provided twenty-two distinct courses in addition to the devotional services and the popular evening lectures.

The Euclid Avenue Church building afforded a central meeting place with good facilities for educational work. The enrollment was about 800 in this Institute. The colored Baptist meeting was held in the Baptist community center home and in the Second Mt. Olive Baptist Church next door, where the lecturers and pupils numbering almost 200 were readily accommodated. The Euclid Avenue meeting was opened with a great rally with Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, of the Publication Society, presiding and an address by the president of the Northern Baptist Convention, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery.

The colored Baptist mass meeting was held in the Second Mt. Olive Baptist Church at the same hour with Mr. W. A. Holmes presiding and Dr. S. Z. Batten giving a fine address.

The third Institute was held with Rio Grande College Feb. 5-8. President Bing and Pastor Woods with the hearty support of the faculty had all plans carefully laid so that the students and people of the community might have advantage of all that was offered. The Institute speakers were Rev. A. B. Withers, state director of religious education, Parkersburg, W. Va.; Rev. W. O. Valentine, missionary, Philippine Islands; Miss Nellie M. Dunham, Ohio Children's Division Director; Dr. C. H. Stull, state director of evangelism and Mr. W. A. Holmes, state director of religious education.

MINNESOTA

IN A TEN-DAY CAMPAIGN ending Feb. 26, members and friends of the First Church, Minneapolis, Dr. W. B. Riley, pastor, subscribed the sum of $354,505 for a new church building. Intense enthusiasm marked the closing meeting on the evening of Feb. 26 when the "thermometer," 20 feet high, showed the total rise from $301,251 to the amount finally reached. Contributions ranged in amount from a dime to $25,000. Gifts of from $5,000 to $10,000 were numerous. Ground for the new building will be broken in the spring, although a proposed widening of Eleventh Street may compel a redrawing of the plans. The new building will seat 3,500 for church services and 4,000 in the Sunday school and will be, it is said, the fourth largest church auditorium in the United States. The First Church, Fort Worth, Texas, are larger; while Tremont Temple, Boston, Grace Temple, Philadelphia and the Bethany Presbyterian of the same city are equal in size. Rev. F. H. Divine, of New York, assisted in the campaign.

WISCONSIN

MANY CHURCHES ARE PLANNING for evangelism between now and Easter. Pastor Holden, of Antigo, will soon baptize a number of people, who have made decision in regular church services. Pastor Schroeder, of Raymond, spoke to his Juniors recently and sixteen confessed Jesus. Rev. Harold Olson is rejoicing over ten decisions at Cady Creek. Pastor H. D. Riggs of Warrens, is organizing for aggressive work on his new field. Pastor Paul MacKinney, of Augusta, is baptizing frequently. Brother E. W. Palmer, of Darien, held a week-end mission acting as his own evangelist, Feb. 23-25. He will repeat this sort of a meeting with a helper before Easter.

MR. FREDERICK RUFUS DICKERMAN, trustee of state convention, superintendent of the Bristol Sunday school and all round church worker, and Miss Beulah Bates, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Edward L. Bates of Bennington, were united in matrimony at the home of her parents, Feb. 22. The ceremony was performed by Rev. William G. Towart, assisted by Dr. W. A. Davison. Miss Bates after graduating from the Bennington High School attended Vassar College and later became all-round Christian worker, teaching in summer schools of religious education and serving for about five years as general secretary of the state Christian Endeavor Society. In 1920 she became educational director for Vermont Baptist State Convention, a position which she filled with ability and success. Mr. and Mrs. Dickerman will make their home in Bristol.

REV. ISAAC M. THOMPSON, pastor of the churches at Hardwick and East Hardwick, was recently assisted in a series of special meetings at Hardwick by state worker Walter F. Sturtevant. As a result the church at Hardwick has been quickened, thirteen were baptized on the last night of the services and more will follow. In May Mr. Sturtevant will assist in special services at East Hardwick.

MAINE

PRESQUE ISLE has profited by the services of Rev. Benjamin Beatty, pastor evangelist of the state convention, who has assisted pastor Ranger in a three weeks' series of meetings. Seven persons were baptized and others are to follow. The annual meeting showed a satisfactory situation in financial affairs.

EVANGELIST A. W. MILLER's two meetings in the Pittsburgh district resulted in professions equal to 25 per cent of the membership involved in one case, and about 40 per cent gain in the other. Half a dozen or so pastors or boards have sought his services in that section, but he was booked up most of his time for return engagements at Washington, Kokomo and Bedford, Ind. Early this year he will be with the Methodists at New-castle, Pa.

INTEREST IS GOOD AT FIRST CHURCH, REYNOLDSVILLE, and devotion is manifest. Sunday school has trebled during the past four months, going from 143 to 461. Sunday night was the first night of a union evangelistic campaign. The crowd could not be accommodated in the Baptist church so was disbanded to go to the large Methodist church where J. S. Brownlee, pastor of First church, preached to an audience of 1200. Great results are expected from these meetings. First church has just finished its basement and reports it "the nicest basement in town."

"What is your home building into the character of your children?" "What is the effect of your churches' teaching on the religious life of its children?"

These two questions will be seriously considered in every Baptist church during Children's Week if the program provided is carried out. This program has "talking points" for two addresses. It was prepared by Miss Meme Brockway, director of children's work, and may be secured free of cost from Miss Brockway, the American Baptist Publication Society or from any state director of religious education.

"God's Minute"

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

"It is not on bread alone that man is to live, but on every word that comes from the mouth of God," said Jesus. No profounder words were ever uttered. Man's life is not in material, but in spiritual things; without spiritual food he starves not less surely, if less obviously, than when he is denied material food.

"The longest bread line in the world is the line of the hungry heart." Yes, and the hungriest heart is the one that is starving for God, though he know it not. It cannot be doubted but that the neglect of family worship and private devotion lies at the bottom of much of the world's ill health, material as well as spiritual. To be in good health, to have social and personal well-being, we must return to God. We must feed our souls daily on the Bread of Life.

A recognition of this fact is multiplying the helps of devotion. It would seem that out of the multitude of books published there might be found that suited to every need. This thought was impressed vividly upon me as I stood in a great bookstore looking over a table running over with devotional books—a table, too, that did not lack its purchasers. With the thought of helping some of the readers of THE BAPTIST to find the helpful book, and with the hope that some might be stimulated to resolve that no day should be without its morsel of food for the soul, I am writing this brief review.

I. There is the question of morning or evening prayers. The family altar must be re-established. For the trained and the poorly trained, for those unaccustomed to the sound of their own voice in prayer, there is no better beginning than to buy one of these books and to use it faithfully for a year. For the man who must make a run to catch the seven o'clock train, one of the very tiny books of prayer or Bible reading may be as much as he can take. If it is, and the book is used reverently, the morning thought may well give a keynote to the day.

There is "Yet Another Day," "The Daily Altar" and "My Daily Prayer," three books by Jowett, and "My Daily Prayer" by F. B. Meyer (Revell), 50 cents, each. They each have 365 prayers. Take this little prayer as a sample:

May 22—"My Father help me to grow in knowledge of Thee, through Jesus Christ. May I see new beauties in him while I go about my common work! May I catch new glimpses of him in my ordinary tasks."

Each prayer seems sweeter and stronger and more helpful than the last. The time spent in reading them is no longer than that consumed in saying the blessing.

For those who can give a bit more time, there is "God's Minute," (Vir Publishing Company of Philadelphia, 60 cents). In this we have a brief selection from the Scripture and a prayer written by some eminent clergyman. Among the writers of prayer we note Doctors Abernethy, Bitting, Bustard, Clifford, Grandall, Elmore, Foslidge, Gilkey, Gifford, Henson, Hunt, Mac-Arthur, Shailer Mathews, Padelford, Rauschenbusch, White, Mr. Coleman, Russell Conwell, and other Baptist brethren. This book can be heartily recommended to those who will devote one minute daily to family worship.

"Every Morning," Cluett, (Association Press, $1.50). This contains a Scripture reading and a prayer arranged for each day of the week for thirteen weeks. It is intended to be used in family prayer. The Bible incidents and topics chosen are well selected. A manly, straightforward book. But there are those who can give more time—perhaps even three minutes. For them, too, there is provided convenient food. Take, for example, "A Book of Family Worship," edited by W. Robertson Nicoll (Doran, $1.75). The book of selections from the Bible covers the Bible in course, the selections for each day being chosen from the Pentateuch, the Historical Books, through II Samuel, the Psalms, the Prophets, the Gospel of Luke and the Epistles. The selections are well chosen, brief, interesting, significant. Each prayer follows in general the topic of the Bible portion. They are simple, direct, vital, the expression of personal need and real aspiration. One who chooses this book will have a guide during the year through the Bible, and will be led in true worship.

Another admirable book is "Morning Prayers for Home Worship," George Skene, (Abingdon Press, $1.75). The selections are about as long as in the preceding. Most of them can be read in one minute. They are not, however, taken in course, but are chosen from the Old and New Testaments by no system that is apparent. The purpose seems to be to bring together some of the most beautiful and wonderful passages from the Bible, without other thought than their helpfulness. Each selection is followed by two verses of a familiar hymn and then by a prayer. The theme of Bible portion, hymn and prayer, is the same. For a family who can give at least five minutes daily, this is an admirable selection. The prayers are personal and reverent.

Some may desire only the Bible portions, preferring to follow this by extempore prayer. For such, "Bible Selections for Daily Devotions," Sylvanus Stall, (Vir Publishing Co., Philadelphia, $1.50), would be splendid. This consists of passages chosen from the Bible in course. Every book in the Bible is represented. Each portion takes from three to five minutes to read aloud. This book is well adapted for use in leading chapel exercises in schools; for those who wish, in their private devotions to get a clear view of the whole Bible, or for family prayers.

A book following a somewhat unique plan is "The Daily Altar" by H. L. Willet and C. C. Morrison (Revell Company, $1.50). In this book each day has a theme about which are grouped an exposition of the theme, a prayer, a stanza of a poem, and a verse of Scripture. The themes are arresting and beautiful; the selections of poetry well chosen, and the brief verse of Scripture and prayer supremely fitting. Themes, taken at random are "The Way to God," "A Steadfast Heart," "The Sunrise of Hope," "Troubles that Do not Come," "The Upward Climb," "The Unchanging God," "Workers and Seers," "With Uplifted Face," and some 357 others equally good. No selection in this book takes more than two minutes; many only one.

"Daily Manna," Lawson (Doran, $1.50) is a somewhat similar book, in that there is a daily theme. In this book, however, the same theme runs through from two to four days. This book has no prayers and so is specially adapted to those who always choose extempore and personal expression in prayer. Each day has two quotations from the Scripture and a stanza of a familiar hymn. The hymn is chosen because it has the same theme as the Scripture portion. It would take not two minutes to read the portion and sing the verse of the hymn. This book is to be highly recommended for private devotional use.

II. There is the question of private devotions. Here there is an embarrassment of riches. All that I have mentioned can be used for personal devotions. To mention only a few others:

There is "Consolation and Comfort" by J. E. (Stokes, New York), an exquisite little book of the choicest selections, not divided off into days. A wise hand has made these selections; a tender heart has brought them together.

"Daily Food," (Crowell, New York) has gone through numberless editions and is today as blessed as when it was first published.

"Daily Strength for Daily Needs," Tilton (Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 50 cents) is another old favorite. A friend who has used this book for years says that God seems to choose the passage just for her need, as she has proved day after day.

"My Daily Meditation," Jowett (Revell & Co., $1.00). This book has already gone through eight editions. No better spiritual guide and friend can be found than Jowett, to open the riches of the Scripture. Each day has a text, and on that text a meditation by Dr. Jowett.

"On the Bridge," Ballard (Doran, $1.25)

we face. Surely it needs frequent and general discussion by those who have had most experience with it.

Surely, also, the day has passed when the sole function of the denominational college is to conduct a few classes upon its campus, classes much like those conducted on the campus of any other college. The great currents of denominational and religious thought should flow naturally through the college, to inspire the students and tie them effectively to the program. They should flow through the college to the churches so that the college may function vitally in the life of the denomination.

My own experience in this field is too limited to allow me to think I could suggest how our colleges might be placed upon our denominational highway. Perhaps my limited experience has exaggerated the problem. I merely wish to raise the question whether, if other college men feel the same way, it might not be well at the next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention to call a meeting of representatives of our colleges, together with representatives of other denominational interests, to discuss the question of a more vital relation of service between the colleges and the denomination. Such a meeting might lead to a permanent organization to discuss and develop our entire program of religious education.

Deagan
Tubular Tower Chimes
Electrically Operated

I have heard sweet
Chimes a-tinging,
Down the tones of memory,
Heard them calling,
Heard them singing
In the days that used to be
But the sweetest, purest,
Clearer,
Bringing Angel faces
nearest,
Making life divinest,
Dearest,
Are the Old Church-
Chimes to me.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark: the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

is distinctly a book for private devotion. Each month has a theme and is prefaced by a foreword written by a well-known writer. These themes are "Life's Beginnings," "Great Personalities," "Human Relationships," "Children's Voices," "Musical Waters," "Thanksgiving," "The Harvest," "Life's Fulfillment." Each day has a choice portion of Scripture chosen for its bearing on the theme of the month. One who is already familiar with the Bible will find this a fresh cross section of its riches.

"Leaves of Life," Steinmets (Abingdon Press, $1.00) is another day book of inspiration. Each day opens with a list of those who were born on that day. Then follow exquisite quotations, a Bible verse and a brief, significant prayer.

"Courage and Consolation," C. M. Stevens (Cupples & Leon Co., New York, $1.00). This book is arranged, a topic for every day. Two key words are given on each page and arranged in an index so that one may quickly find the help needed. A Scripture quotation is followed by quotations of prose and verse taken from diverse sources.

These are but a few of the wealth of books available. Choose one. Live with it. Commit choice passages to memory; and you will grow in grace and in insight.

Letter From Vienna

boring states of Hungary and Bavaria where the Bolsheviks and monarchists fought with one another by turns for supremacy. This spirit on the part of the Viennese has secured for them the goodwill of the whole world. From all parts of the globe helping hands were stretched out to us. In all our misery we have experienced much love. Even though we know that the Austrian problem cannot be solved by private charity, but only in conjunction with that of the whole of central and eastern Europe, yet we are grateful to our brothers in America for every gift and every token of affection which they bestow on us. This is not a question of "helping the Austrian State" but of relieving certain individuals, and this we have been well able to do, thanks to the gifts of our American brothers and sisters. Of this, more in the next letter. I take this opportunity of expressing to all our friends on the other side of the water our heartiest thanks!

School for Negro Workers

ber 1 with the expectation that the school will be opened in the fall.

The school is to provide special training for young men and women who wish to devote themselves to service in our churches as directors of religious education, kindergartners, nurses and workers with boys in Christian Centers. There will be provided also courses in theology and pastoral training for those looking to the regular ministry and institutes for men already in service.

This school will meet a most serious need. With the coming of hundreds of thousands from the south many of our northern communities have come to present a most perplexing problem, and with almost no adequately trained leadership of this type of "second line officers." It is almost impossible, certainly it is not expedient, for these aspiring young men and young women to go south for their training. The demand which has been raised on every side for trained workers has been so imperative that this school is being projected as an answer to it. It is the thought of the promoters that the school shall be a junior school and not a substitute for such higher education as may be desired by those whose attainments will enable them to take a full college or standard seminary course.

The enthusiasm and good sound judgment displayed at the conference was most heartening to those who are familiar with all the difficulties which confronted the leaders responsible for bringing about this happy consummation.

Now for a good faculty—the choicest young men and young women; as for students—full cooperation—full confidence and earnest prayer for a rich endowment of spiritual grace and power to make this undertaking all that it may be!

Bill Planer, the village carpenter, had given so generously of his time and services in building the little memorial church, that it was decided to allow him to speak at the dedication exercises. Bill hated to do it, but he also hated to offend his friends, so he made a try.

Then, amid roars of laughter, he sat down.—American Legion Weekly.

The man had just informed the Pullman agent that he wanted a Pullman berth.

"Upper or lower?" asked the agent.

"What's the difference?" asked the man.

"A difference of fifty cents in this case," replied the agent. "The lower is higher than the upper. The higher price is for the lower. If you want it lower you'll have to go higher. We sell the upper lower than the lower. In other words, the higher the lower. Most people don't like the upper, although it is lower on account of it being higher. When you occupy an upper you have to get up to go to bed and get down when you get up. You can have the lower if you pay higher. The upper is lower than the lower because it is higher. If you are willing to go higher, it will be lower."

But the poor man had fainted!—The Epworth Herald.

ENUNCIATION

Given a natural voice, a cultivated quality of tone production, and a well-developed sense of expression, the greatest fault of the greatest number of singers is poor and slipshod enunciation. There are scores of teachers who specialize in tone production and the art of expression, who would seem to regard these as the ne plus ultra of a singer's path to success.

Very few of the greatest singers can be admired for their enunciation. Singing in French, Italian or some other foreign tongue, they gain a high plane of tone quality with less effort than is required with the terrible incongruities of the English language. Of course the truth of the fact cannot be denied, that one can enjoy a fine rendition of any one of the great arias in some other language, but how much more enjoyable to hear a beautiful melody sung in perfectly enunciated English? Who can listen to John McCormick and fail to respond to the thrill of artistic interpretation coupled with perfect enunciation? The great war has given us the slogan "America First" and so why not make the extra effort needed to master the manifold intricacies of the English singing language?

The quickest and most satisfactory way would seem to be an exaggerated practice of vowels and consonants. As an example take the first line of a widely sung song, "Night Has a Thousand Eyes." The method of practice by the pupil to secure the best enunciated result would be an exaggeration, for example:

"Nah-eet has er thah-oo-sand ah-ees."

Practice along these lines would tend to make the finished rendition far more understandable, and with a finished tone production would be 100 per cent more creditable and satisfactory.

Take a line with a series of recurring consonants from West's "Seedtime and Harvest":

"And cold and heat, and summer and winter,

And day and night, shall not cease."

This would make a good exercise and would well repay any amount of time spent on slow and deliberate exaggeration of these final consonants.

Instead of the habit of carelessness and slipshodness, let us try to cultivate the habit of exaggeration and the reward would be an all-round gain by adding to a possible excellent tone production, and artistic expression, that snow-white cap on the peak of success, enunciation.—Ernest H. Sheppard in The Musical Review.

Somewhat foreign to the usual fare reviewed on this weekly page are the above attractive numbers for piano. While their presence on this page may be unjustifiable in face of the fact that the primary purpose of "Our Music Corner" is to select and give publicity to music destined for use in church, and in every way possible to suggest material which will aid in the movement for devotional music of a better type, still I do not feel that "home-music" is out of place here. These interesting piano numbers certainly come under that head. Whatever improves the musical taste of the home will raise the standard in the church, and vice versa. When we can displace the all-too familiar stack of "jazz" and other cheap popular music from the family piano, and substitute for it well-written—which does not mean dull—intrinsically worth-while music we shall be spared much of the sentimental doggerel which now passes for church music and so debases the musical standards of our services. Such music as the series listed above will do much to aid in the interest in good music. The technical demands are perhaps a little too severe for the average player, though they are not at all exacting. Any piano pupil of fair training who has passed the elementary stage will find no insuperable difficulties to be conquered. In fact they will prove to be invaluable teaching numbers for the piano-player of the third and fourth grades. They are poetic in spirit, melodic in nature, perhaps a trifle modest in their harmonic schemes, but none the less good, honest music of sense and sentiment. Additional interest is given by the poetic motto printed at the head of each piece; thereby providing a ready-made clue to the meaning of each.

Three new organ issues, medium in difficulty, adapted to either large or small organs—not depending for the musical effect upon the more outre accessories found only in the most ambitious organs. The first named is best suited for use as a postlude—the registration calls for some good flute stops, and a promptly speaking action. The second number is a tone-poem poetic and melodic; a transcription in terms of tone of a translation of a beautiful poem by Bierbaum. The suggested registration offers a splendid scheme for contrasted tone colors. Of the last title, the February issue of "The New Music Review" says:

"William Lester is probably better known for his choral writings than for his organ music; but he is, we believe, an organist, and his organ music is always written with a sure knowledge of the capabilities of the instrument and a discriminating perception of its powers and shortcomings. All of his music, in whatever form, is delightfully spontaneous, and his power of melodic invention is little short of amazing. This charming idyl, "In a Cloister Garden," begins very simply with a rhythmic accompaniment in pedals and choir manual, over which the Oboe sings a plaintive melody. As the music increases in intensity other stops are added and the great manual is used in the development. New themes are used in the contrasting middle section, which develops rather unexpectedly "molto maestoso e pomposo" to full organ, returning abruptly to the original registration. There are recapitulations of both main themes."

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

A STRIKING example of a beautiful church interior. While it embodies the best traditions of the Gothic style of architecture, it is an interpretation modern in spirit and highly individual. Every appointment and furnishing from seating to organ screen is in perfect harmony.

FIRST Things FIRST

—and that means Evangelism

SINCE the beginning of the missionary enterprise, evangelism has taken precedence over all other forms of activity. Every foreign missionary, regardless of his increasingly manifold duties, must be primarily an evangelist. His chief aim is to win men to personal allegiance to Jesus Christ. With that high objective in mind, the Boards of Managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society never knowingly appoint candidates for service abroad who fail to give evidence of a genuine evangelistic zeal.

This emphasis on the supreme objective accounts for the encouraging evangelistic success of the missionaries. On the ten mission fields now maintained by Northern Baptists, there are at present 1,853 churches, enrolling 201,655 members, of which 925 or 50 per cent are entirely self-supporting.

Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., recently returned from a visit to the Belgian Congo Mission, where he witnessed a wonderful evangelistic ingathering in the very heart of the Dark Continent. Standing on the shore of a little lake, surrounded by hills covered with the primeval African forest, Dr. Lerrigo saw 380 converts baptized on their profession of faith. The following extract is taken from his report:

On Sunday morning the services commenced at six o'clock when a great group of the people repaired to the bottom of the hill for an early morning baptismal service. Rev. Thomas Moody had done his best to limit the number, desiring to be quite certain that each should have given good proof of conversion before being taken into the church. The native pastors kept bringing their lists until the number far exceeded Mr. Moody's previous supposition. "You must cut the lists down," he said, and pointed out the danger of taking unconverted people into the church. The pastors assured him, however, that all these people had been under the influence of the Gospel for five years; had received special instruction for three months; had been carefully examined by the deacons and the churches; had been living true lives and had been contributing regularly to the work of God. Name after name was added until there were 380 who were baptized at that early morning service. The leaders assured us that in every one of the churches they were keeping back twice the number accepted.

This baptismal scene is only one impressive evidence of a great movement toward Christ which gathers increasing momentum from year to year on all our mission fields.

“Did You Really Burn Out?”

Scores of letters have come from friends from all parts of the country expressing sympathy or congratulations on our “fire.” “Did you really burn out?” We did. “Were you insured?” Our worldly goods were. “Was your library a loss?” Not much. Our good friend, O. J. Price, executive secretary of the federation of churches in Rochester, N. Y. writes a word of comfort: “It would be a good thing for most of the ministers of the country if their libraries burned every few years.” It would at least be a good thing for the book publishers.

Killam's Kollum

March 19-26

Who? Our Baptist Young People. What? Make a drive for 4,000 new annual subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. Why? They have from the beginning of the paper had more recognition than has ever been given in a denominational newspaper. They now have two full pages each week devoted to their work. When? March 19-26. Pastors will be glad to encourage and help their young folks in this worth-while task.

Make Your Own Classification

A subscriber sends us the following: “I am sending a list corrected by my son, of the names of the six grades into which the Harvard students are divided in their rank-lists, as interpreted by the Radcliffe girls. 1, High-brow; 2, Low High-Brow; 3, High Low-brow; 4, Low-brow; 5, Carved Ivory; 6, Solid Bone.” We are greatly encouraged to find that this classification is not one of our “distinctive” principles. Let each man make his own classification and then turn to the pages of THE BAPTIST and he will find something to meet his needs. P. S. This Kollum is made especially for “1” and “2.” Kind readers, you now know where we classify you.

A Good Name

What's in a name? Much in every way. Names have a way of setting folks off into families, tribes and nations. “Protestant,” “Catholic,” at once suggest two great bodies in the Christian church. Other names separate us into denominations and within the denominations still others divide us into factions. We are more glad than ever before that our denominational newspaper bears the good old name “Baptist,” given to our fathers in derision. To us THE BAPTIST sounds better than the “Fundamentalist Herald,” or the “Evangelical Journal,” or the “Liberal Scream,” or the “Ultra-Conservative Wail.” THE BAPTIST can and does serve all groups. THE BAPTIST believes that the time is at hand when the rank and file in our churches will frown upon those movements among us which hyphenate us. The term “Baptist” has marked us as lovers of religious freedom and at the same time the champions of an evangelical religion.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. J. C. Dent, Superintendent of the Northern District of the Illinois Baptist State Convention, has tendered his resignation to the Board, requesting the same to take effect March 15th. Mr. Dent has been connected with the Illinois Convention for two and one-half years and has rendered invaluable service. He has won the people to him and leaves a large circle of friends and admirers. Dr. Dent plans on returning to the pastorate which he feels is his field of labor.

Dr. Robert E. Speer, one of the secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, is spending some months in the study of mission work in India and Persia. His report of conditions in lands where political and social unrest is so acute will be heard with appreciation upon his return to America.

"The whole aim of our mission in every department" writes missionary E. E. Burket of Changning, China, "is of course evangelistic. A new outstation recently opened had about thirty inquirers, thirteen of whom were baptized. This small group has rented a new and larger place for the chapel and is making quite extensive repairs entirely upon their own initiative and largely at their own expense. The largest outstanding finished a new chapel at the beginning of the year. A notable feature of the work has been the success of a campaign for family prayers. Repairs and improvements have been made at four other chapels. We want the people to take pride in the chapels and feel that they are really the sanctuaries of the Lord. At one of the outposts where the work has been somewhat discouraging twelve were baptized."

Indianapolis Baptists have completed their organization for handling the Northern Baptist Convention which is to meet in their city June 14-20. The organization consists of eighteen committees, each having from three to a dozen or more members. The general chairman of the organization is Woods A. Caperton, sales manager for one of the largest pharmaceutical manufacturing concerns in the country. C. S. Dearborn is vice-chairman, Henry Eitel, treasurer, and Rev. F. A. Hayward, Occidental Building, executive secretary.

From the long stretches of the American Reservation comes a plea from Miss Eva Fewel and Miss Grace Hyatt, missionaries among the Plute Indians. "We are greatly in need of patch work," they write. "It should be cut in squares or post card size, though we want these pieces so badly that we will be grateful for any material—cut or uncut. We have had to shorten the time allowed for sewing because of the lack of supplies, and our present material will not last more than two or three more weeks." The Home Mission Society has recently granted the state worker, Mr. Scott, money with which to build a meeting house for the town Indians of Fallon and this means that Indian needs will increase rather than decrease as time goes on. The sewing meetings offer a splendid opportunity for the missionaries to tell the Indian women "the old, old story of Jesus and His love," and many a convert is won as she bends over the needle. Other needs expressed by the missionaries include rags for rugs, old clothing, shoes of all sizes, and baby clothes. All packages should be sent to the Plute Indian Mission, Fallon, Nevada.

Dr. David C. Gilmore, soon to return to his work in Judson College, Rangoon, after a year at home, has just been advised of the honor conferred upon him by the British Government in voting him the Kaisari-Hind (Emperor of India) Gold Medal. This is given Dr. Gilmore in recognition of the service he has rendered in the field of education in India, and is the highest award the government bestows upon any person not a British subject. The medal will be formally presented at the Durbar in August.

Is a College Education Worth While?

DISTINGUISHED MEN of America—with NO SCHOOLING of 5,000,000—31 attained distinction; with HIGH SCHOOL EDUCATION of 2,000,000—1245 attained distinction; with COLLEGE EDUCATION of 1,000,000—5768 attained distinction.

The man with no schooling has one chance in 150,000 of performing distinguished service; with high-school education, 87 times the chance; with college education, 800 times the chance.

What is your chance?

Less than 1 per cent of American men are college graduates, yet this 1 per cent has furnished:

55 per cent of our presidents
36 per cent of the members of congress
47 per cent of the speakers of the House
54 per cent of the vice-presidents
62 per cent of the secretaries of state
50 per cent of the secretaries of the treasury
67 per cent of the attorneys general
69 per cent of the justices of the Supreme Court

Though comparatively few went to college at that time, 50 per cent of the men composing the constitutional convention were college bred.

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has just received announcement of the death, at his home at Neurruppin, Germany, on Feb. 9, 1922, of the Rev. Karl Mascher, Director of the Baptist Foreign Mission Society of Germany. Dr. Mascher was one of the most useful of all the German Baptists and was highly esteemed by his brethren in many countries. He was a delegate to the World Baptist Conference in London in July, 1920, in which he took a very active part, and he was looking forward with great anticipation to the meeting of the World Baptist Alliance in Stockholm in 1923 as an occasion for the establishment of a larger fellowship among the Baptists of the world. He leaves a wife and several children.

Frank G. Sayers, pastor at Freeport, Ill., is making a series of evangelistic endeavors advertised as "Evangelism without an Evangelist." Special effort will be made each Sunday night for ten weeks to win two hundred whose names have been placed upon a prayer list. A series of special weekly suppers have been arranged when short talks are given by the men and women of the church on "What I think of the Christian Life." The pastor closes with a brief address and appeal while still seated around the table.

The Tremont Temple Church, Boston, has called to its pastorate Dr. J. C. Massee of the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, New York. It is expected that Dr. Massee will accept the call.

Foreign Secretary Robbins reached Assam in time to attend the annual mission conference. He found that the reports from all the fields were most encouraging. Tura reported 634 baptisms last year in the Garo Hills. The complete reports for this year had not been received, but five of the nineteen churches had already reported 300 baptisms. The total will probably be much larger than last year, thus making this a banner year in the Garo Hills. Impur reported from the Naga Hills 600 baptisms. Rev. O. L. Swanson had been caring for three other fields in addition to his own work at Golaghat, but he reported 250 baptisms from that field and 154 men at the Annual Bible Conference. Everyone was convinced that if the Foreign Mission Society could have the men to properly man the fields, there would be a great ingathering in the Assam Mission.

Norton J. Hilton, pastor at Minonk, Ill., has been invited to become superintendent in the Southern District, and on Sunday, March 5, presented his resignation to take effect April 1. Dr. Hilton, having been a pastor in the Alton Association takes up the work familiar with the situation in that section of the state. He will make his home at Alton.

Twenty-one Chicago pastors met for lunch in appreciation of the work of Rev. L. J. Velte, retiring secretary of the Chicago Ministers' Association. Rev. M. P. Boynton, Rev. C. T. Holman, Rev. H. C. Rowlands, Rev. R. N. McDonald, Rev. Smith T. Ford and Rev. A. H. Gage spoke of the good work of Mr. Velte as a brother pastor, as secretary of the ministers' association and as pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist Church. All congratulated him upon his opportunity in the Merriam Park Baptist Church of St. Paul.

The bulletin of the Pittsburgh Association has discovered a lost article of faith which it believes is too good to lose. We quote: "The fathers eighty years ago had an article of faith much more vital than some that are now being considered. An ancient record book of one of the noble old churches in the Genesee Valley came into my hands the other day. It began with 'Articles of the Mt. Morris Baptist Church adopted May 20, 1837.' Article 15 reads: 'We believe the charges of the church should be borne by equality according to the substance and ability of each member.' The records of another church not far away show the appointment of an Averaging Committee as the regular thing. This committee was to form an estimate of the property of each member of the church and assess a tax frankly so called, on each. If those taxes were not paid, church labor was taken up with the delinquent and pursued, if necessary, for years. In one case the tax was only a dollar, but the laboring committee was continued for four years. The matter was finally settled by the brother convincing the church that it should have been only 50 cents, which he was ready to pay. Why would not such an article of faith and such an averaging committee be a good procedure for any church to follow? Is not 'the faith of the fathers' precious?"

Who Is off the Job?

Who is off the job? Any one? Here is the statement of the case: We adopted a great program at Denver with a great deal of enthusiasm and high hope. We made an intensive campaign, and are now engaged in a continuation campaign to realize the objective. It is true that it was the largest undertaking in proportion to numbers that any major denomination had ever projected. It is true that we have accomplished what a few years ago, would have been considered an amazing achievement. It is true that for the last reported year we were third from the front in a list of seventeen denominations, and first among the larger bodies, in per capita gifts for our missionary and educational work. It is also true that we have pledged ourselves for only approximately 50 per cent of the amount set as our goal.

Did we undertake too much? Some have said so. It was a long stride ahead of any previous effort. But it can hardly be shown that we attempted too much. Indeed it is declared by some of our thoughtful and well-informed brethren, that one-fourth of the tithe of all our people would more than supply the entire amount sought within the five year period. It is quite easily within our ability. If we do not, it is not because we cannot, but because we do not.

This is a partnership task. We are fellow-workers together with God. The program is only our attempt to state our immediate task which we believe we are challenged to perform at the present hour. We are but seeking to realize the plans of our Senior Partner as he seems to us to have made them known to us.

The movement halts. Somebody appears to be off the job? Is it God? Has he lost interest? His plans and purposes are eternal. Has he changed his mind? With him is no variableness nor shadow cast by turning. Is he asleep? Behold he that keepeth Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. Has he become weary? Hast thou not known, has thou not heard, the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the Ends of the Earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? He is a great God, but he is the God we have had all the time. His interest is the same, his purpose the same, his resources the same, his power the same. The task is his and ours. One of the partners is off the job. It is not he. Who is off the job?

Why Do You Go to Church?

This ought to be an easy question to answer. "I go to church because it is one way to acknowledge publicly my love for and allegiance to God." "I go to church because I enjoy meeting with my friends as they in song and prayer give praise to my Maker." "I go to church to refresh my soul and to find strength for living a real religious life." Probably almost every answer will, in some way, be tied up with the thought of the public worship of God. It is public and social worship which gives purpose and value to our church going.

In public worship time and place are essential. We need a meeting place and a time for assembling ourselves together. This is not true of all worship. The true worshipper can always find God although he cannot find his way to the sacred mountain or holy city. Men meet God in the most unexpected places. You have met him in the silent night when sleep refused to come to your eyes; you have met him in the hour of great personal joy or sorrow; you have found him in the mountain while you were alone, or beside the sea. In such hours you have felt no need of costly temples, organs, choirs or preachers. When the soul of the creature finds communion with the Creator human helps are but hindrances. The man who prays to the Father in secret is not apt however to neglect the public assembly of God's people.

We see you just now clothed in your best, with Bible and hymn book, making your way to church. May we not assume that back of your training, inherited customs and gregarious instincts you have a reasonably clear and determined purpose to worship God? In carrying out this purpose there are many helps and many hindrances.

Man's spirit, chameleon like, easily takes color from his surroundings. In public worship it would be difficult to estimate the value of a beautiful building, well lighted, heated and properly ventilated. Men with cold feet are not apt to have warm hearts. Partly suffocated saints cannot properly glorify God. The air of the sanctuary certainly needs changing at least once a week. It has been said that when a congregation goes to sleep you should send someone into the pulpit to awaken the preacher. It may do just as well to send someone into the basement to arouse the janitor. In public worship reasonable comfort is a help not a hindrance.

An Episcopal clergyman in New York has been getting good results, it is reported, by the use of different colored lights. When he speaks on love he floods the room with a certain tint and when he speaks on sin he uses another. We cannot speak with authority along these lines. Of this, however, we are certain; many an hour of devotion has been marred by kaleidoscopic colors flooding the worshippers from some misplaced window, or by dazzling rays from lights which stare the congregation in the face.

You go to church to acknowledge the rightful rule of God in Christ. Your purpose is realized when you are led to take a proper attitude of mind and heart toward him; when you seek to know and to do his will. In this you will find many helps and the hindrances can be removed.

HAS YOUR CHURCH A CHURCH LIBRARY?

Any intelligent person who has ever overhauled an old-fashioned Sunday-school library has been appalled at the character of the literature on which it was thought that the youthful mind could be fed. How anybody dreamed that the boy who liked to get down behind the barn to read of the doings of Deadwood Dick could ever become interested in the orderly life of Pious Willy is beyond comprehension. Perhaps the reason for the discontinuance of such libraries wherever good public libraries exist is to be found in the awful character of the books with which they were filled.

But whatever becomes of the Sunday-school library, there was never greater need of a carefully selected church library. Such a library should contain books of devotion, books of Biblical interpretation, books dealing with the geography and archeology of the Holy Land. There should also be in it books of missionary information, and a good number of the volumes which are indispensable if the average Sunday-school teacher is to be properly trained for her work. In other words, the church library should be one that will furnish the members all the information they need regarding theological discussions, the land and the book and the art of teaching.

Another consideration must be added. The best of libraries is useless if it is not used. The church which has the books should also work out a careful system by which they should get into the hands of those who need them. People will not always seek of themselves the food they need; it must be furnished to them as to children.

By the way, has your church a church library of the right sort?

CHURCH MEMBERS IN THE UNITED STATES

Every day during the last five years an average of 2,173 persons joined the various churches of America, according to religious statistics compiled by Dr. E. O. Watson, Washington secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. An average of three congregations were organized daily, and the number of men entering the ministry averaged four and one-half per day. The estimated church membership in the United States is 45,977,199, an increase of 4,070,345 over the census figures of 1916. The clear gain for 1921 was in the neighborhood of a million members. Religious bodies report 233,134 congregations manned by 200,090 ministers, a gain in five years of 5,617 congregations and 8,294 clergymen. With all the complaint about the shortage of ministers, the increase in clergy has been approximately 50 per cent more than the increase in the congregations. Comparative statistics show that in a total constituency of 95,858,096 members and adherents, there are 74,795,226 Protestants, 17,885,646 Roman Catholics, 1,220,000 Jews, 411,054 Greek and Russian Catholics, 1,646,170 Mormons. Among the Protestant communicants, there are reported 7,835,250 of the various kinds of Baptists and 7,797,991 Methodists. The Lutheran bodies stand third with a membership of 2,466,645, and the Presbyterians fourth with 2,384,683. Practically all the major religious faiths have made a gain.

It will be noted that for the first time Baptists have passed the Methodists in membership; we are not so sure that we have yet passed them in those things which make churches a live working force. Attention also should be directed to the fact that people of Protestant affiliation in the United States vastly outnumber the adherents of the Roman Catholic Church. Moreover, when the gains of last year are considered, no man in his senses can claim that religion is not very much alive in the United States. The figures can hardly be encouraging to any stray atheist who may read them.

GET IN LINE WITH THESE

The Los Angeles Times in the West and the Boston Herald in the East have come out strongly for the Eighteenth Amendment and for the strict enforcement of the Volstead Act. There is encouragement in that. The day is coming when all self-respecting papers will have to put aside the practically lawless attitude which has marked them on this subject. The New York Times also recently went out of its way to commend editorially the favorable views on prohibition expressed by an English visitor, Mr. Wilson. In doing so, it said:

"Mr. Wilson is not very distant from the dividing line of accuracy when he tells those who commissioned him that prohibition is firmly founded on the wishes and the determination of a large majority of our people, that it has come to stay, and that it is not a failure except in the sense that all laws are failures—it does not command observance from everybody. The violations, he admits, are many, but he emphasizes the enormous decrease in the amount of alcohol consumed in 1921 as compared with two years ago, and he figures out how small is the allowance of liquor that the bootleggers, smugglers and moonshiners together can provide for a population as large as that of the United States."

What is the attitude of the leading paper in your town? Most newspapers are responsive to a vigorous and expressed public opinion.

MISSIONS IN THE MOVIES

Mr. P. E. Snell of California writes: "As a result of visits last year to a number of Far East mission fields, I have come to believe that if our people at home could frequently be brought face to face through concrete moving pictures with the facts and life as it is in foreign fields, they would have their interest vitalized and centralized to a far greater degree than ever before, and the giving of life and money would be greatly increased." In his opinion old-fashioned single views will never do what is needed; only the movies will answer. His plan would include the sending of competent picture experts into the various mission fields for the taking of pictures, a central distributing bureau in the United States and the equipment of our churches so that the pictures could be shown. The initial cost might be $300,000 and the cost of distributing operations enough to bring this to about one million. In his opinion this money could be secured, however, if the matter were approached in a businesslike and statesmanlike way. He thinks, also, that such a plan would help to make missions a man's enterprise and not one which has been largely assigned to the women.

The idea is here presented in these bare outlines for the consideration and opinions of the brethren. What do you think of it?

UNCLE JOE SAYS "ENOUGH"

The retirement of "Uncle" Joe Cannon from his seat in Congress, when his present term expires, is a matter of interest to the entire country. Joe can hardly be said to have hid his light under a bushel and everybody, except the children, knows more or less about him. He was first elected to Congress in 1873 and since that time has been re-elected in twenty-two campaigns. When he retires on March 4, 1923, he will have served forty-six years. For four terms he was Speaker of the House and ruled so well that, when he was unseated, the whole system of boss control went with him. His home is in the heart of the Lincoln country and he is one of the few men now in public life who knew Lincoln personally. However, he has now reached the age of eighty-five, and feels that he should be allowed to cavort about on his farm in Danville, Ill., for the years which may remain to him. If he points any moral to youth it is a lesson in what a man may do when he chooses for himself one aim in life and sticks to it. Although unseated twice, he always came back strong, and retired at last of his own personal will.

A ROOSEVELTIAN VIEW OF THE CHURCH

The following is in one of our exchanges attributed to Theodore Roosevelt, although it confesses itself unable to locate the passage in his writings. It is enough in the spirit, however, so that we pass it on:

"The church may not be the only place where men may profitably spend Sunday.

"Of course, it is not.

"Nevertheless it is one of the very best places.

"It has been well tried.

"It has been knocked about badly by slackers and by enemies.

"It is a target for every fellow with a chip on his shoulder or a grouch in his system.

"It is too narrow for some and too broad for others.

"All this is perfectly natural—in fact inevitable, since the church is based upon spiritual principles, which are admittedly difficult fully to understand, let alone follow.

"In spite of all this, the church is a mighty force in the nation for keeping people toned up to high levels of thinking and acting.

"It has kept the affairs of the Moral Governor before the attention of his people.

"It has been the force behind the building of homes for orphans, unfortunates, deficient, demented, and aged.

"It has always been the backer and often the starter of philanthropic enterprises.

"The church is easy to slam and hard to replace.

"Kick if you like; but you will be wiser and happier to back it."

FROM SEA TO SEA THROUGH THE JORDAN VALLEY

The dreamers are dreaming plans by which the ancient land of Palestine may be brought more directly into the stream of the world's life and progress. And one of the proposals is that a canal shall be built which shall connect the Mediterranean Sea with the Red Sea by way of the Jordan valley. The beginning would be made at Haifa, which is on the sea east of Nazareth and the canal would reach the Jordan Valley near the Sea of Galilee. Another canal would connect the southern end of the Dead Sea with the eastern arm of the Red Sea. The advantages of this as outlined are that there would be furnished a deep waterway for vessels plying between the Holy Land and Europe and Asia and that it would then be possible to reclaim vast tracts of land which at present are desert and so make agriculture possible on a much larger scale than now.

The proposal, whether it ever becomes an accomplished fact or not, is of interest because of its clear indication that Palestine is certain in the near future to come out of the stagnation which has marked it during the long reign of the Turk and support once more a population which shall be nearer commensurate with that which had its home there in the time of Christ.

NO FAVORED CLASSES

One of the chief obstacles to the impartial enforcement of the prohibition law is the attitude of well-to-do people who have been accustomed always to pander to their own appetites and who are not willing to make a sacrifice for the public good. Prohibition, they think is for the other fellow but not for them. Life in all communities is better for them when the other man is sober, but that in their opinion does not mean that they should always be sober. Such men are a stumbling block to good citizenship and to law enforcement. The Grand Rapids Press flays these people when it says:

"The workman who drank away his savings knows that prohibition has been his salvation. So does the employer and the prosperous average citizen. But as surely as the latter classes consider prohibition a piece of class legislation—a law to force workingmen to efficiency through sobriety while leaving loopholes for the rich man to care for his own appetite—the expected results are certain to disappear. American society is not made up of two classes—the privileged and the obedient. In the name of ordinary sportsmanship, the class which chiefly benefits from the law should see to it that it is not partially enforced. When thinking men realize the actual state of affairs they will abandon their own selfish privileges as the only way to preserve the real gains which prohibition has accomplished."

When the rich cease to think of themselves as favored aristocrats immune to the operation of laws that govern ordinary folk, this country will be a good deal better off than it is now.

Christ and Science

Jesus a teacher of conduct, not an umpire; he touched life rather than its manifestations. The scientist equally with the religionist expects a reward for his search; both walk by faith. Knowledge today is being directed to remedial and redemptive ends.

By MILTON G. EVANS

GALILEO and Baronius were friends. They were both adherents of the Catholic faith. They were both seeking truth, each in his own province of investigation. Baronius, the ecclesiastic, patiently searched for authorized documents of his church and endeavored to arrange them chronologically in order to establish the truth of what was already believed. Collection of data and desire for time order, reveal the scientific mood; the purpose discloses the dogmatic mood.

Truth As An End

His friend Galileo observed the heavenly bodies or watched the swaying chandelier; gathered his data; and attempted an arrangement in order of logic rather than in order of time. His method was scientific, like that of the historian, and his motive was scientific also, unlike that of the ecclesiastic. For the physicist sought knowledge for its own sake as another item of acquired knowledge, and not for its utility. Herein Galileo kept within the sphere of pure science. He sought truth of fact as an end, something to be known, not to be enjoyed nor to be used.

But both cared for truth. Each in varying degree could describe himself as Francis Bacon describes himself. "For myself I found that I was fitted for nothing so well as for the study of truth; as having a mind nimble and versatile enough to catch the resemblance of things (which is the chief point), and at the same time steady enough to fix and distinguish their subtler differences; as being gifted by nature with desire to seek, patience to doubt, fondness to meditate, slowness to assert, readiness to reconsider, carefulness to dispose and set in order; and as being a man that neither affects what is new nor desires what is old, and that hates every kind of imposture; so I thought my nature had a kind of familiarity and relationship with truth." Hence both Galileo and Baronius could remain friends, though living in different provinces of learning. Baronius justified the relationship by the epigram attributed to him: "The Bible was given to teach us how to go to heaven, not to teach us how the heavens go."

Most of Baronius' fellow ecclesiastics were not so willing to surrender any territory. Like their papal master they claimed jurisdiction over men in this world and in the next, as emperors and kings were claiming sovereignty over recently discovered parts of the earth's surface. But it was the age of Hugo Grotius, scholar, diplomat and jurist. Men were beginning to think that political geography was a fact, and that individual nations had rights and privileges that others ought to respect. Likewise, the belief was arising that the whole domain of knowledge had its provinces, whose boundaries could be determined, whose laws were binding only within territorial limits, and whose interrelationships could be adjusted on terms of mutual understanding and good will. The human spirit is too rich in possibilities to have its activities controlled by a single man or by a group of men dominated by a single interest. Religion and art and science and morality claim independence each within its own province, yet acknowledge allegiance to the general human culture of which they are normal characteristics. They are rooted in a common soil of social life, and grow as differing manifestations of culture in response to desires and needs of the human soul.

Jesus' Field

It is this human spirit that Jesus touched, that it may react in experience to produce a religion and a science and an art and a morality worthy the Kingdom of God. He confined himself as strictly to this field in cultural life as he limited himself geographically to Palestine. He had no thought of invading the territory of the scientist of his day to correct his views in astronomy, or biology, or geology, or history. It is impossible to imagine him saying to his disciples: "Follow me, and I will make you zoologists, botanists, protistologists, geologists, spectroscopists, and psycho-physicists." How grotesque it would be if there should be discovered a manuscript purporting to record this saying of Jesus: "The classification of facts, the recognition of their sequence and relative significance, is the function of science, and the habit of forming a judgment upon these facts unbiased by personal feeling, is characteristic of what may be termed the scientific frame of mind."

A Teacher of Conduct

Jesus touched life rather than its manifestations. To those that desired political guidance, he replied: "Why tempt me, ye hypocrites?" To another, wishing him to act as arbitrator in property disputes, he answered: "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" He was a teacher of conduct, not an umpire to judge who was correct in opinions about the future. "Strive to enter in by the narrow door; for many, I say unto you, shall seek to enter in and shall not be able."

It may be safely assumed that if any follower had sought information from Jesus concerning the origin of the universe or the origin of life upon the earth, or the authorship of a book or the credibility of a statement in one of his nation's historical writings, he would have said in substance: "Man, who sent me to teach what you can discover if you use the powers your Father has given you? He has not jealously concealed secrets in nature and in history from his children. Seek and ye shall find. When ye have found, worship him that rewards the seeking child." For Jesus knew his mission too well to endanger his everlasting gospel by teaching what was irrelevant. He kept within the sphere of faith and of conduct. It was enough for his purpose that his Father was creator and preserver of the world, the when and how of the creation, whether an act, or a process of short or unlimited duration, was of no practical value to him. He rejoiced that God gave him his daily bread; he was not pedant enough to analyze the process, though he would have blessed any disciple that had been religious enough to write:

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour the mill;
And back of the mill is the wheat and the shower,
And the sun, and the Father's will."

He defined his own distinctive work in the words:

"The spirit of the Lord is upon me, Because he anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor; He hath set me to proclaim release to the captives, And recovering of sight to the blind, To set at liberty them that are bruised, To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

His was the purpose of healing the morally diseased, inviting sinners to repentance, to give peace to burdened consciences by announcing the forgiveness of sins. Because he knew the fatherly heart of God and the Father's redemptive purpose, his invitation to all men, including scientists, is: "Come to me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke on you and learn of me; because I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest for your souls." And through all the years scientists have been coming. The great majority of scientific men have been reverent and devout believers in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and through their discoveries and inventions, have contributed to the redemptive work of Jesus in the world. Their very calling as scientists has compelled them to cultivate the virtues which Jesus required of his disciples.

Learning by Listening

Faith is demanded by Jesus and by the devotee of science. And faith is the trustful acceptance of the reality of the object with which a person deals. No one would care to ask questions about either the material or immaterial world, unless he believed that each had values for him. The scientist equally with the religionist expects a reward for his search. They both act as though their senses and their mental processes were trustworthy, and that they were not living a life of illusions. That is, each assumes the objective reality of a set of facts that produces a given line of action. As "he that comes to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that search after him," so the geologist that comes to the earth believes that it is, and that it rewards the use of pick and shovel; and the astronomer that comes to the starry firmament believes that it is, and that it rewards his use of the telescope and spectroscope. Thus faith is the passive attitude of the soul towards its object. The passive attitude is the childlike attitude, he attitude of receptivity. It accepts what is given in experience without doubting the reliability of the giver or the worthiness of the recipient.

Some years ago it was my privilege to be a companion for parts of two days with John Muir in the Yosemite Valley. He talked as only he could, about the mountains and their animals and plants. His conversation revealed his simplicity, his teachableness, his insatiable desire to know and understand. One of his remarks, "The kingdom of knowledge is open only to the humble," called forth my reply, "Just like the Kingdom of Heaven." He answered, "Yes. You evidently know the Sermon on

Fitting Message to Baptists

Nay, perhaps, if you are angry, so shall I be too; and then there shall be small hope of finding the truth. If once anger arise, as Homer somewhere expresses it, this smoke may so dim the eyes of my soul that I shall be able to see nothing clearly. For God's sake, if it be possible to avoid it, let us not provoke one another to wrath. Let us not kindle in each other this fire of hell; much less blow it up into a flame. If we could discern the truth by that dreadful light, would it be not loss rather than gain? For how far is love, even with many wrong opinions, to be preferred before truth itself without love? We may die without the knowledge of many truths, and yet be carried into Abraham's bosom. But if we die without love, what will knowledge avail? Just as much as it avails the devil and his angels! The God of love forbid that we should ever make the trial! May he prepare us for the knowledge of all truth, by filling all our hearts with all his love, and with all joy and peace in believing.—John Wesley, 1767.

the Mount. The books of Matthew and Proverbs are my constant companions. They teach attitudes of the soul. It is this that counts. It is wonderful what I learn by listening." Then he called my attention to the face of a high cliff and large boulders lying at its base, and described how he was sleeping in the open, when long past midnight he felt the earth tremble and heard crashing of trees and crushing of stones. Without fear, he rushed to the place whence the noise came, put his hand upon some rocks, and they were warm from friction upon the sides of the high cliff from which they had been torn.

"I saw this valley widening; but a man must be where he can hear and see." This remark shows that it is not enough for a scientist to hear and see. It is not enough to be passive. The human soul cannot be. By its very nature as a living soul the receptive attitude passes over into the active. It takes a critical attitude towards its object with view to verification. The critical attitude is still a faith attitude, a conviction that there are realities lying beyond present experiences and yet within the possibility of experience. In this way the frontiers of knowledge have been incessantly pushed back; in this way too, religious convictions have been clarified and moralized. "Now faith is the assurance of things not seen." In this process faith is not opposed to intellection; it is the soul at work on its problem in a definite way, for a definite purpose, and reaches definite conclusions. The evolutionist cannot close his graphic description of the process of how things have come to be as they are, without using the word faith. For illustration, recall the words of one of the foremost scientists of the nineteenth century:

"Looking back through the prodigious vista of the past, I find no record of the commencement of life, and therefore I am devoid of any means of forming a definite conclusion as to the conditions of its appearance. Belief, in the scientific sense of the word, is a serious matter, and needs strong foundations. To say, therefore, in the admitted absence of evidence, that I have any belief as to the mode in which the existing forms of life have originated, would be using words in a wrong sense. But expectation is permissible where belief is not; and if it were given to me to look beyond the abyss of geologically recorded time to the still more remote period when the earth was passing through physical and chemical conditions which it can no more see again than a man can recall his infancy, I should expect to be a witness of the evolution of living protoplasm from non-living matter. I should expect to see it appear under forms of great simplicity, endowed, like existing fungi, with the power of determining the formation of new protoplasm from such matters as ammonium carbonates, oxalates, and tartrates, alkaline and earthy phosphates, and water, without the aid of light. That is the expectation to which analogical reasoning leads me; but I beg you once more to recollect that I have no right to call my opinion anything but an act of philosophical faith."

Walking by Faith

Likewise, the theist, considering in a rational way the universe, describes his conviction of its origin by a personal God, as "an act of philosophical faith." "By faith we understand that the worlds have been framed by the word of God; so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear." Evangelist and scientist alike, try to give substance to things beyond the range of experience. They reconstruct a working model, so to speak, of the world as it is. The former by a power of the soul called faith, sees God as efficient cause, his will effective through speech; the latter by the same power sees the forces generated by God and notes their interactions and their orderly ascent. Neither necessarily contradicts the other. Both equally walk by faith. It is for the Christian to be evangelist enough to attempt to persuade his scientific friend who may not be a Christian, to exercise the same qualities of soul towards God and Jesus Christ as towards the material universe. If there is a conflict between science and Christian faith, it is not found in the nature of the soul nor in the message of the gospel; but in lack of skill in winning men.

Demands of Science

In addition to faith, science demands truthfulness, the habit of accurate observation and precise statement. As Sir Michael Foster expressed it: "In the first place, above all things his (the scientific worker's) nature must be one which vibrates in unison with that of which he is in search; the seeker after truth must himself be truthful, truthful with the truthfulness of nature; which is far more imperious, far more exacting than that which man sometimes calls truthfulness." Or, as Huxley phrased it: "Science seems to me to teach in the highest and strongest manner the great truth which is embodied in the Christian conception of entire surrender to the will of God. Sit down before a fact as a little child, be prepared to give up every preconceived notion, follow humbly wherever and to whatever abysses nature leads, or you shall learn nothing. I have only begun to learn content and peace of mind since I have resolved at all risks to do this"; and in another connection: "The longer I live, the more obvious it is to me that the most sacred act of a man's life is to say and to feel, 'I believe such and such to be true.' All the greatest rewards and all the heaviest penalties of existence cling about that fact." It is not strange that he said when occasion demanded "The assertion that outstrips the evidence is not only a blunder, but a crime." It was this passion for fact and for accuracy of speech, that made him reply to the celebrated Anglican Bishop's question, whether he was related by his grandfather's or his grandmother's side to an ape, with the scathing rebuke: "I asserted, and I repeat, that a man has no reason to be ashamed of having an ape for his grandfather. If there were an ancestor whom I should feel shame in recalling, it would be a man, a man of restless and versatile intellect who, not content with an equivocal success in his own sphere of activity, plunges into scientific questions with which he has no real acquaintance, only to obscure them by an aimless rhetoric.

The true scientist follows the great Teacher of truth in his determination to be so accurate in speech that he needs only to say yes or no on all question of fact. Such an one cannot be far from the Kingdom of God. He needs but seek the truth in the realm of spirit with the same singleness of purpose as he seeks facts in the sphere of matter, and he will discover the priceless treasure of the truth as it is in Christ, as well as values in the truth of physical science and of history.

For Jesus is the Truth. In him all the reactions of the soul center as their cause. In him the soul finds its restful answer to all questions suggested by the universe. How many and how diverse these questions may be, depends on the richness of culture and the variety of interests of the questioner; but whatever their number and whatever their kind, the goal of the labor of search and of the fret of impatience is in the Meek and Lowly One. At least one follower that had the scientist's insistent demand for fact and the philosopher's imperious demand for rational unity, so conceived his Master; "For in him were all things created, in the heavens and upon the earth; things visible and things invisible, whether thrones or dominions or principalities or powers; all things have been created through him and unto him; and he is before all things, and in him all things consist." Any "in Jesus Christ," that is, in sympathetic relation with him as the revelation of God's redemptive purpose in creation and in human history, cannot imagine a conflict between the interest to know the what and the when and the where of things and events, and interest to know the origin and the how and the purpose of the same things and events.

Differing Interpretations

To interpret the things that are made with the redeeming Christ as the regulative idea, is the joy of the evangelist; to interpret them with the idea of beauty as the regulative idea, is the delight of the aesthete;

to interpret them under the regulative idea of social relationships, is the pleasure of the moralist; to interpret them with the determining principles of cause and method, is the joy of the scientist; but there is no conflict except to those that are under bondage to the Cartesian philosophy.

Redemptive Ends

Now, as never before, all knowledge is being directed to remedial and redemptive ends. Now as never before, accumulated wealth is being given hilariously for the elimination of poverty and disease and ignorance. The genius in finance and the genius in science are joining forces to give sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, cleansing to the leper, and preaching of the gospel to the poor. Luther Burbank, profiting by Darwin's suggestions, has practically created new species of plants for food for a hungry world; Sam Higginbottom, taking advantage of all that scientists have done, is multiplying loaves for the starving population of India with the same motives that prompted his Master to feed the fainting multitudes; physicians by the score have labored and died in sacrificial spirit that others may live. Lured by no financial reward; exhilarated by no blare of trumpet in sight of battle-flag; prompted by no thirst for a conqueror's crown, they have quietly, with almost infinite patience, searched for means not only to cure but to prevent diseases. This motive is given in Reed's letter to his wife:

"Quemado, Cuba, 11:50 p.m., Dec. 31, 1900.

Only ten minutes of the old century remain. Here have I been sitting, reading that most wonderful book, 'La Roche on Yellow Fever,' written in 1853. Forty-seven years later it has been permitted to me and my associates to lift the impene-trable veil that has surrounded the causation of this most wonderful, dreadful pest of humanity, and to put it on a rational and scientific basis. I thank God that this has been accomplished during the latter days of the old century. May its cure be wrought out in the early days of the new!"

When every man, whatever his vocation and education, brings his constructive imagination in the realm of science to bear upon the alleviation of human ills of every sort, he need not be surprised to hear the welcome of the King: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world . . . Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." Christ regnant in the world is using science to answer the prayer he taught: "Thy kingdom come."

The Secret of an Attractive Church Interior

By R. N. NYHAGEN

"Religious architecture has always been the highest expression of the art of a people. The religious edifice has lead all others in the progress of building, it has furnished models and traditions, made architects wise and workmen skillful."

THE natural instinct of mankind is progress and in no phase of life is this progress more plainly discernible than in our houses of worship. It is a far cry from the Puritan meeting house with its bare walls and straight, uncomfortable benches to the modern church interior with its comfortable pews and artistic fittings.

As stone and its alternates with their storm and weather wearing qualities and their special adaptability to exterior architectural needs and effects, are the fundamental materials for the church edifice itself, so wood, due to the qualities inherent within it, is the material universally adaptable for equipping and adorning the church interior. It is the beauty and harmony of the wood handling, from the simpler seating to the more elaborate and meaningful altar and pulpit, that gives the church interior its tone, making it breathe forth the spirit of worship and reverence of a consecrated place.

The pulpit as the natural center of interest in the church service should be of a design worthy of its high import. By the correctness of its lines and the beauty of its symbolism it should convey a message all its own and lend dignity and grace to the very occupant of it. This is a task worthy the creative genius of the very best artists. Pulpit, altar and choir must harmonize.

Finally the seating of the congregation is as important as the setting of altar, pulpit and choir. It must conform to the general architectural plan of the entire church edifice and be such as to afford the greatest comfort and convenience to the congregation. While apparently a simple matter, it is really, as those who have had experience know, a very difficult and highly technical problem to solve successfully. There is no room for guess work or experiment. To provide the desired comfort in pews the seats are shaped and the backs are curved vertically.

The comfort of the seating is of course paramount but there are also many other points which must have due consideration. In some churches, for instance, it is necessary to increase the seating capacity of the auditorium. This is sometimes done by the use of a combination pew and chair seating, built with regulation pew back and pew ends but with individual folding seats. Because of the folding seat the pews may be spaced closer together and still permit easy ingress and egress.

Whatever type of seating is selected it is of the greatest importance that all the interior furnishings shall harmonize with the architecture of the building itself. This is not accomplished by the individual fancy for a particular design but by proper selection of all parts of the work through study and knowledge of the building plans and upon expert advice.

The difference in cost, fancied or real, between a purely commonplace rendering of a church interior and one in true keeping with its churchly purpose, is what keeps many congregations from a truly satisfactory and successful solution of this all important problem. They little realize that the plan is the thing, and that it is not a matter of how much is expended, but one of how well.

With the Lumber-Jacks in the Maine Woods

By HARRY H. PRINGLE

IMPROVED conditions of camp life among the lumber-jacks of the Maine woods, so far as the American Thread Company is concerned, including of course the religious features, are due solely to the efforts of Mr. E. M. Hamlin, of Milo, Maine. The company, through Mr. Hamlin's influence, pays the bulk of the salary of Rev. H. H. Pringle, pastor of the Community Church at Lake View. Mr. Pringle was formerly of the Baptist Church at North Haven, and also Milo. In addition to the salary, the company furnishes fuel, a parsonage free of rent and pays the pastor's expenses to conventions and other affairs which he chooses to attend. A driving horse is supplied for the preacher and the camp doctor during the winter months. There is little doubt but that if the manager of this concern were other than Christian, most of these features dear to the hearts of those trying to do an uplifting work among the lumbermen, would be eliminated or permitted to drag along any old way.

Of the many camps operated by this company, a typical one has a main building—sleeping quarters and dining-room—with six other buildings grouped around it, namely, laundry and bath room, blacksmith shop, clerks' office, teamsters' quarters, stable and store-room.

Who would not enjoy a nine-mile drive, even with the thermometer at zero or below, with a fine driving horse and comfortable fur wrappings headed toward a cozy camp to be just in time for dinner with the privilege of preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ at night to about sixty husky lumbermen? It is surely an enviable experience.

Within a mile or so of the camp one reads such signs here and there as "Smell the beans and keep on coming, boys." Beans, well-baked, taste awfully good in a woods camp, and used to be about all you could look for; but now, bless your heart, steaks, roasts, stews, fish, dumplings, pies, biscuits, fruit, pickles, onions, vinegar, sauce, tea and coffee prepared by a cook expert at the business, is the rule room. The dining-room, though under the same roof, is entirely separate.

The company doctor, A. M. Carde, sees that an up to date "first-aid kit" is provided each camp and the camp clerk is instructed to render first aid to sick or injured men. Bibles and other reading matter of a wholesome kind are placed in the various camps of the American Thread Company.

It is quite evident that the men appreciate the effort being made for their comfort. They delight in contrasting present conditions with those of ten or twelve years ago when a dozen men slept in one bunk under great long blankets, smoked and ate their brown bread and beans and drank black tea all in the same room. Now each man has his own sanitary spring bed, wool blankets and pillows and these washed regularly by a special employe who also scrubs the floors clean and white, and thoroughly ventilates the in the camps, also phonographs with a change of records from time to time.

To the more distant camps the "sky pilot" frequently goes alone and with the use of stereopticon and address seeks to put before the men God's claim upon their lives, always getting a most respectful hearing and closest attention. There is also opportunity for the personal touch with individuals. To the camps near Lake View he often takes a company of young men and women, including Mrs. Pringle, and the baby organ. The men do love to hear the old hymns and always say, "Be sure to come again."

In One of Satan's Strongholds

By GENEVRA BRUNNER

Every Saturday evening for several months we have been going out to some village to hold a Gospel meeting. Those meetings have always met with interest but the one held on the evening of Sept. 19 we will not soon forget. Everything had been carefully arranged beforehand, the Bible women had been sent ahead in the afternoon to prepare the place, and we, Miss Moran, an Indian helper, and I, started about 6 in the motor car for the seven-mile trip to the village. We noticed that clouds were piled in the west and the setting sun looked fiery red, but we thought little of it, for the day had been warm and we gave ourselves up to the enjoyment of the cool breeze and brilliant coloring of the sky. We arrived at the village in good time, saw that the place for the meeting was all arranged, and then drove on a little distance to a quiet place under a spreading mango tree to eat our picnic supper. The night darkened around us but still we did not become alarmed, thinking only that the moon had not yet risen. Returning to the village, we found the people waiting for us. The place the Bible women had selected was an open space in front of a small Hindu temple. The people sat around us or stood back in the shadows as we began our singing. There was a large crowd and the meeting promised to be an especially good one. We had sung two hymns and one of the Bible women had just risen to talk when something happened which bid fair to spoil all our plans. Suddenly there was a lightning flash, a peal of thunder and big drops of rain came splashing down. Thinking it surely would not do more than sprinkle the Bible woman kept on talking, but in a few minutes there was another flash, another peal and the rain descended in sheets. The crowds in front of us vanished. Most of the women ran home, but all the men and boys who could crowded into the temple at our backs, and at their invitation we too crowded into the temple. It might

Helps in Conveying the Message

It is well if the church building be a beacon light, located as a daily reminder of worship. Music forces may cripple or be a true "ministry of music." Bells ring out the glory of God, turning men from secular pursuits to worship.

The Ministry of the Chimes

By GEORGE E. FISHER

MANY and varied are the ways in which the Christian church appeals to the minds and hearts of men. To the community at large it speaks through the press, the electric sign, the announcement board and that oldest appeal it has made through the centuries—"the church bell." To the people in the sanctuary it speaks through the sermon, the reading of God's word, the prayers, the voice of praise from choir and congregation, the tones of the organ, and if the church be one of proper architecture, the very environment of the place will hush one to silence and weave a spell of reverence and worship.

Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., is an institution that in many ways does things differently, and in no way is it more unique than in its musical equipment. For instance, besides the marvelous organ, it has a dimmer, "a real stage dimmer" whereby all of the lights in the auditorium are brought under control from the organ console. We have found the influence of light on the emotions a powerful one. At the evening service, before the prayer, the congregation sings softly with bowed heads, one verse of a prayer hymn, oftentimes, "Saviour breathe an evening blessing"; as we lead into this prayer hymn the lights gradually grow dim, and the dimmer with the steeple chimes and organ produce a profound impression. This combination is also used at the opening and the closing of the service.

Last year Mr. C. N. Howard presented to the church a fine set of tower chimes, "sixteen bells" in memory of his son John. These bells are equipped with an electric action, run by a 1½ horse power motor, and are played from a small keyboard which is located next to the organ console, so that the tower chimes and organ may be played together. The bells being under control of the organist are used very effectively during many parts of the service. I will try to convey as briefly as possible the message of the bells in our service.

Early in the morning they send out their appeal over the city and urge man to turn his steps to the house of God. While the people are assembling and waiting quietly for the opening of the service, several hymns are rung on the chimes. The prayer hymn is given out by both bells and organ. They are again rung at the time of the offering, such hymns as "I gave my life for thee" and "Saviour thy dying love," being used at that time. They are also rung at the benediction, and while the congregation is leaving the church, hymns are rung that have an appropriate bearing on the theme of the service. In this way all who hear the chimes may follow in spirit our service, and I can imagine many saying, "Lake Avenue church is now at prayer," "Lake Avenue is making its offering unto the Lord," or "It is benediction time at Lake Avenue Church and the bells are pealing."

The chimes are also used on special occasions. Our church stands at the intersection of three streets, far back on a triangle. At Christmas time there was erected in front of the church a huge Christmas tree, with many electric lights. On Christmas Eve while the mammoth tree was telling its silent message to the eye, the chimes were pealing forth the story of peace and good will through the carols. New Year's Eve they again rang out the old and in the new. Day by day they speak their message; at noon to those busy ones hurrying by; at sundown a hymn of cheer for tired feet; and as the time for sleep draws nigh, they ring a hymn of benediction.

North of the church stands Dr. Lee's hospital and many stories come to us of the comfort and cheer the bells bring to those with pain-racked bodies.

We have an accurate record of the attendance of our services and know how many people worship with us, but how many ears hear and how many hearts derive comfort, strength and cheer from the chimes in the tower, no one knows.

Choosing a Church Building Site

By HARRY W. JONES

OF THE problems confronting a church in a new building project, none is more important than the wise choice of a site. Probably the first consideration, is that of its convenient location to the home of its constituency; but this may usually be accomplished without sacrificing other important questions. It is well if the church be a beacon light in the community, to which people may be attracted; so located, as to be constantly in evidence six days in the week, and a reminder of religion and worship. It is false economy to choose a cheap plat of ground under the hill, or behind "Robin Hood's Barn," even though a slightly better building is thus made possible, for of what value is a good building, if it is not well occupied?

Too much emphasis cannot be placed on making the church a distinct landmark in the town or city. Who thinks of Boston, without seeing "Park Street Church," or Providence, the old "First Baptist Church," or New Haven, the row of colonial churches on the green, welcoming every student to Yale; or Wall Street, New York, without "Old Trinity."

To an architect, in planning a church the points of compass are often important, as determining the relation of sunlight to the various parts of the structure, and especially to the art and memorial windows. A matter which is often unappreciated is its landscape environment. A church, so distinct a type from other buildings, calls for a setting, appropriate, and which shall add emphasis and beauty to its architecture. If possible, it should have land enough to permit of a foreground, which may be a terrace or lawn, with opportunity for wise planting of trees, shrubbery and vines. It is always fortunate if opportunity affords a place as part of a group in a civic center with other public structures. Facing a park or at the intersection of important streets, where it may be readily discovered, is always desirable, as it at once becomes a constant reminder of the service which it is there to render.

The architect to whom is entrusted the task of planning a church, frequently finds himself seriously handicapped in doing his best, because of the limitations of the site, both in its relations to other buildings, or in its form and size. One of the most valuable parts of a competent architect's service is where he is called in for a preliminary survey of the situation, when, like a doctor, after diagnosis of the case, he is able to prescribe intelligently and advise the committee, not only on the kind of church to build but also the best spot upon which to build it.

The Church Bell

AMONG the familiar agencies employed in the spread of the Christian religion, the church bell occupies a most important position. Its history if fully presented, would make a record of fascinating interest, but could not be presented in the form of a brief narrative. Ever since people first found it necessary, for mutual protection or enjoyment, to congregate in groups, there have been means for calling them together. When danger approached there was always a signal to arouse the defenders for assemblage and united effort to overcome the common enemy. From the crudest metal plate, struck with a rock, to the most elaborate trumpet arousing the sleeping or scattered hosts, the skill of man sought incessantly to improve the means for rallying humanity.

Quite naturally, when the spirit of religion spread throughout the world and the faithful began to assemble in fixed places of worship, an effective means for sending out the invitation for prayer and meditation became a permanent requisite in temple paraphernalia. The simple gong developed into a bell with greater sound-radiating surface and stronger force to carry the tone for miles to the widely scattered worshippers. With the increasing wealth of the churches, the development of skill and accumulating devotion, seeking outward expression, there came in time the production of bells that were veritable works of art and the costliest metals were often used in their production. The introduction of Gothic church architecture, with its graceful spire, made the bells suspended high above the surrounding buildings a most powerful voice to proclaim the message of God.

Wonderful stories could be written concerning the world's famous bells which for centuries have been objects of admiration on account of their size, weight, artistic character and the events which the production of them commemorate. Bell-makers everywhere have tried by sweetness of tone to produce the most harmonious effects with bells in combination, and this has led to the chimes that ring out their sweet music from the great cathedral towers. It is not every church that can install elaborate chimes, but every one may have a single bell or peal to ring out the "glory of God," to turn men's thoughts on the Sabbath Day from the noise and confusion of secular pursuits to the quiet hour of worship in the house of the Lord.

For several years there has been manifest a tendency to discard the bell. Meeting-houses have taken the place of churches and strangers often look in vain for a church because so many of them look like business houses, banks, chambers of commerce or Carnegie libraries. The church spire is conspicuous by its absence and the congregations assemble just as people would at stated hours go to the theater or club. There is nothing that calls the soul away from the material things of daily humdrum life to lift it to the higher realms of thought and meditation—from the finite to the infinite.

Science as applied to bell-making has made it possible for even the humblest mission chapel to have a bell as the metal used need no longer be of the rare and costlier sort. Careful design and workmanship, together with metallurgical knowledge, will produce beautiful tone quality and durability so that even a small and comparatively poor congregation may possess a bell at a reasonable price.

Bell-making is wholly unlike other manufacturing. Each bell should be treated as a unit. From the moulder to the finisher, every touch should partake of the true sentiment that characterizes the mission of the bell; and when sent out to its ultimate destination, it should bear the sacred responsibility of co-laborer with the pastor who ministers to his congregation or parish. Joy and sorrow enter into its duties; but whether ringing out the glad tidings of the holy day or tolling the solemn funeral notes, the sweet and mellow tone of the bell touches the heart as nothing else can possibly do.

May the day never come when the church bell will be neglected or abandoned. Should such a time ever come, the church will lose much of its power and public worship will decline to a commonplace function as though afraid or ashamed to proclaim the good tidings of the world's Redeemer.

To the Glory of God

By WILLIAM LESTER

THROUGHOUT the church world today there is little question as to the great inspirational value of the organ in connection with the church service proper—a use entirely apart from the instrument's value as a concert or entertainment machine. The music of the devotional hour is of equal importance with the sermon or ritual in its appeal and influence upon the auditors. I am well aware that some of the ministerial brethren vehemently deny this aspersions; I could just as well go to the other extreme and quote examples where the music has to balance up what is lacking in the minister—if this were not a denominational paper, I might be tempted to do so in self-defense, to make a more or less impressive gesture against some of my clerical friends who are fond of designating the music forces of the church as "the war department"! Too often this is the status, to the crippling of the church's work usually. And this condition is tragic in its foolishness and lack of necessity. Where there is hearty co-operation between the musical forces of a church and the minister there can be great things accomplished and there are many examples of this ideal condition.

I have been asked to put down in simple non-technical language a few pertinent facts concerning the organ as a vital part of the church equipment, with some suggestions as to the things to be looked for in the purchase of the same—and perhaps a few warnings as to what not to do. The usual procedure in getting an organ for a church is for a committee to be chosen, usually on the basis of a partiality towards music rather than an absolute knowledge of the subject. This group of sincere souls then lets its needs be known in one way or another and they are flooded with handsome—and puzzling—brochures from various organ builders, mostly unknown either as to name or by reputation to the committee. Probably there is not a member of the church who knows as much about the mechanics of an organ as he does of an aeroplane. When the builder's specifications are presented to the anxious buyers they feel as I do when I gaze on a Russian inscription—it probably is all right, but I don't know for sure! All too often the committee plunges in the dark and buys what looks like the most for the money, all in the dark as to the tricks of the canny unscrupulous jerry-builder, often passing by the responsible, ethical organ man because he cannot offer as much good organ as the cheap man can give of inferior product.

What is a good organ? Briefly, it is an instrument of musical tone, effective vol-

Religious Revivals and Business Demands

"Religious revivals will create demands at this stage of the business cycle, and there is already a marked awakening of religious interest. It is the reaction of the indifference and unrighteousness that prevailed during the past period of prosperity. This new spirit will appear not only in formal revivals, but in quiet growth of church membership and religious activities in general. Clients may anticipate renewed requirements for Bibles, prayer books, hymnals, books on religion and church building and equipment."—Babson's 1922 February Bulletin.

ume for the designated auditorium, as much variety of tone coloring as is possible, mechanically substantial, with a responsive and durable action, and ability to stand up under the strain of the frequent pitch-changes due to the alternate heat and cold prevalent in the auditorium. The safest test as to responsibility is past performance. It is always a safe plan to find out definite installations of a few years back; then write to the pastors of those churches for frank and definite information as to how the instrument has "stood up" under local conditions, what satisfaction has been rendered by the tone, volume, and voicing, and whether or not it has depreciated to any marked extent. Base your action on some reports as suggested, and you can feel assured that you will make no mistake. There are many upstanding, idealistic builders of fine reputation who have too much at stake to dare to put out inferior organs.

As is commonly understood, organs are today built with two, three, four or more manuals or keyboards, each with its own distinctive array of stops, or sets of pipes, each set producing a scale of evenly-voiced, like-quality tone. Roughly speaking, we have to deal with four distinctive types of tone color or quality: Diapason, broad, sonorous, deep; flute, clear, melodious, graceful; string, incisive, cutting, plangent; and reed, poignant, throaty and piercing. Each color should be well represented in the organ; the more varieties of each present, voiced at varying degrees of power and pungency, the more colors are available to the player's hand to be translated into beautiful sound and effects. Wherever possible I would recommend that three manuals be installed—swell, great and choir. The pedal organ is the keyboard played with the feet, sounding the deepest and most "foundation" pipes. Care should be taken to assure that this bass substructure is balanced to the upper gradations of tone. All too often, in the smaller organs especially, the pedal department is woefully weak, giving a most pallid and anemic effect to the full organ.

One other point should be well considered—that is the problem of "duplexing"—in other words, having one set of pipes masquerade on two or more keyboards under different names. This can be a most legitimate procedure when the buyer of the organ assents knowingly to it; all too often, however, an unscrupulous dealer will sell say a twenty-stop organ and make half that number of sets of pipes suffice. The buyers see a stop on the Swell named Salicional and one on the Great dubbed Dulciana; they pay for two stops and get one duplexed. Where economy is necessary, and more flexibility is desired, judicious "borrowing" may be recommended; and it is perfectly ethical if understood and agreed upon. One little principle if remembered and acted upon would save many missteps in the purchase of any organ; that is: an instrument built well and installed with intelligent care will improve and mellow with use, where your jerry-built chest of whistles bought for quantity and paper size will cost many times the original difference in repairs and unsatisfactory service. Much better a small, well-designed quality instrument than a jack-of-all trades freak whose only virtue is the size of the case and color of the pipes. Given an adequate instrument, with a reverent organist, then truly the music of the service can and will be a true ministry of music and preacher and musician will work together for the harmony of the church reverent.

A Seafarer's Sketch Book

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

NO. 8. A LONELY PASSENGER ON THE BALTIC SEA

CROSSING a wind-swept sea on a little 1,000-ton freight ship can hardly be called a refreshing experience. Sometimes it becomes necessary. My work in Latvia was finished and my next objective was Stockholm where I was to hold conference with Baptist leaders and to consider preliminary arrangements for the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in 1923. One way to proceed from Libau to Stockholm was to make a long round-about journey by rail to Copenhagen through Lithuania, Poland, Danzig and Germany involving endless time and inevitable frontier delays. The only other way was to travel on a freight boat from Libau direct to Copenhagen. There were no accommodations for passengers and the company officials naturally did not seem favorably inclined to carry me on their ship. After submitting my documents from Mr. Herbert Hoover and from the American Relief Administration and after explaining my mission in Europe an unused bunk was found and I was permitted to engage passage. Two nights were spent in this bunk and two days in the cabin of the captain. The crew was small in numbers and understood neither German nor English. Besides myself the only other passenger was the captain's dog with whom I became well acquainted, notwithstanding the fact that he also knew only the Danish language.

The journey was a voyage of maritime fridity. All during the first night a westerly gale drenched the decks with a foamy spray that froze almost instantly and by morning the forward decks, the rails and ropes and the covered hatchways were sealed in a coating of ice that glistened in the Baltic sun. After the strenuous days in Libau and Riga this voyage although not refreshing nevertheless afforded a welcomed opportunity to do some writing, to go unshaved and to live the life primitive. A gracious Providence must have directed our course for we entered the harbor of Copenhagen shortly before a heavy fog settled down on the straits approaching Denmark and the fog would undoubtedly have held us at anchor for hours if not for days.

In Copenhagen I was met by Rev. Peter

Grarup, secretary for young people's work for the Baptists of Denmark. He attended the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines and made many friends during his stay in America. After seeing so many phases of life in Latvia that were quite primitive it was refreshing to be in a great modern cosmopolitan city. At the restaurant where we had luncheon I saw half a dozen young women smoking cigarettes and immediately I realized that I was back in civilization. In the evening it was my privilege to address a large audience at the First Baptist Church. The Baptists of Denmark although small in numbers are progressive and forward looking. They are raising a large sum for their new theological seminary and have also recently purchased a building on a magnificent site to be occupied as their denominational headquarters.

I had an interesting experience with the consul of one of the other Scandinavian countries to whose office I went for a passport visé. Notwithstanding all the documents in my possession he seemed supremely unable to differentiate between Baptists and Mormons! He had apparently never heard of American relief work in Europe and not until he had been fully satisfied that I was not a Mormon going into his country for propaganda purposes did he consent to visé my passport. When the fee was asked I did not have sufficient Danish currency and I offered him perfectly good American dollars. I was astonished at his refusal to accept them. In all my travels on the Pacific coast, across the western prairies, in the big cities of the East and here up and down in Europe, this consul was the first person I have ever known to refuse to accept the best money in the world. Fortunately another traveler in the office who recognized the value of American currency kindly exchanged some for Danish currency and I was able to pay my passport fee. On my journey through Norway I had to share my sleeping-car compartment with a Scandinavian who found it necessary to absorb huge quantities of whisky from a bottle in his bag. Let us again be grateful for prohibition in America. It was not until 2:30 in the morning that my fellow traveler finally fell asleep and shortly thereafter, although from weariness and not from whisky, I also departed into blissful unconsciousness.

My visit in Norway with its majestic scenery, its inspiring mountains, its picturesque villages, its beautiful city of Christiania and its world famous fjords with their fascinating waterfalls, was altogether too brief. Here I was also favorably impressed with the progress of Baptists. The great Baptist tabernacle in Christiania, under the able leadership of Pastor J. A. Ohrn, holds a commanding place and is doing a work of far-reaching influence. I met all of the students in the theological seminary, a fine promising group of future leaders whose training is in the capable hands of Prof. A. T. Ohrn and Prof. O. J. Oie. A trip to the top of a mountain overlooking the city furnished a pleasant experience that will long be remembered.

One of the great sacred experiences in my life occurred in Stockholm on a Sunday afternoon when in company with Dr. C. E. Benander, president of the Swedish Baptist Seminary I called on Dr. K. O. Broady. This venerable grand old man of the Swedish Baptists is now in his ninetieth year. In keeping with his rank as a colonel of the Grand Army of the Republic he walked into the room with stately majestic carriage. As long as I live I shall remember the half hour I spent with this devoted follower of Christ. Through his now almost sightless eyes I was privileged to get a glimpse into the glory that so soon awaits him and which he so fondly anticipates.

The Baptists of Sweden are already making great preparations for the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance to be held in Stockholm in July, 1923. They are expecting a large delegation from America and at three public meetings which I addressed in Stockholm I assured them they could readily count on the attendance of many American Baptists. At each occasion I read a telegram which Dr. G. A. Hagstrom had sent to me just before I sailed from New York on the relief ship "Estonia" in which he spoke of substantial numbers of Swedist Baptists in America already planning to visit Sweden on that occasion. A representative committee has been organized and I spent several hours with members of the committee discussing preliminary arrangements and such matters as would require early consideration. The Baptists of Sweden will be greatly disappointed if large numbers of Americans do not visit their charming city of Stockholm in 1923. In view of my own delightful visit there I can assure our Baptists at home that they will find in Stockholm a hospitality whose cordiality will long linger in their memory as one of the really enjoyable experiences in their lives.

"The Women Will Not Lag Behind"

THE shekels are beginning to roll into the hands of the solicitors for the Continuation Campaign although many states have not begun their canvass at the time this report is being printed.

A telegram received from West Virginia the second day of the pledge taking period reported that $13,500 had been raised and the momentum was growing. Of this amount the World Wide Guild had raised $2,500 and was "going strong" toward its $15,000,000 goal. The World Wide Guild chapters of Denver at one banquet addressed by Miss Helen Crissman raised over $950 in pledges, the quota for the entire state of Colorado being only $1,000.

Other gifts are coming from individuals: an undesignated gift of $1,000 from a New York state woman; $40 from a laywoman now living in Cuba but formerly a member of a Northern Baptist Church; two money orders for $3 each, one for the Woman's Home and one for the Woman's Foreign Society. The note which accompanied the latter stated that the giver regretted she could give no more but she had no income at all of her own so had to save this amount from money which people had given her.

In one church the women felt that the pledges already made to the New World Movement made it impossible to do anything more, but, after praying over the matter, they determined to raise an extra offering of $2 per month each to the special fund. $1 each month to be saved from luxuries and necessities, the other dollar to be earned in some unusual way. Possibly "over the top" churches may find this suggestion a way by which they can go the Second Mile.

Women of Northern California are starting on a voyage in a Miracle Ship, $10 to be paid in advance for the first year's voyage, special rates to the young women and children. The slogan is "Fill This Ship, Too." The women of the Long Island Association are making their gifts as a memorial to Mrs. R. B. Montgomery, who had been their president for twenty-five years and who passed away recently. At first they wished to make a permanent memorial for her in the form of a building but finally decided that in view of the emergency need Mrs. Montgomery would wish the money to be used in caring for the deficit and the regular operating expenses.

The last message we wish to bring to you has been passed on to us by Mrs. MacLeish. She says, "It is from a letter just in from one of Mr. MacLeish's Scotch cousins."

"The Woman's Foreign Mission Society of the United Free Church of Scotland reports that the contributions of 1921 met all liabilities of the society and cleared off a burden of debt which had hung on for years. This is remarkable, considering the depressed state of trade and the great amount of unemployment in the entire United Kingdom. If the women of Scotland can do so courageous a thing, surely the women of America will not lag behind."

An Episode in Evangelism

By F. C. WILCOX

"YOU!" I exclaimed, almost with a note of unbelief in my voice, "You want to be baptized?"

"Yes," in a quiet voice.

"But—" The remembrance of his past opposition to all attempts of his student friends as well as his teachers to win him to Christ came up before me like a cloud of doubt. He was the leading non-Christian student in the school, popular, versatile in ability, a member of the senior class and its president, first-prize man in oratory, always on the Y. M. C. A. cabinet. His qualities made him a conspicuous target for the members of the personal workers' group. Yet he was so very Chinese, that is, a lover of the classics, clinging to the old beauties of a lost Golden Age. Like all such, he was meditative, thinking much, speaking little.

He had previously asked for permission to stay in the school during vacation.

"But you have a home, and a comfortable one," I protested. "Besides you know the rules of the school."

"Yes, I know," a little plaintively.

"Then why don't you want to go home like the other students?"

"Well, you see," with an explosive effort, as though summoning his strength for a final effort, "you see, my mind is all disturbed. I want to be where it is quiet, where I can think upon the deep things of life. This Student Movement of ours has started up things in my mind that I never thought of before and I don't know what to make of them. Please let me stay."

"Well, I never—!" I was about to express my disgust for a young man in his teens who wanted to sit around and mope, for it sounded like that, when other boys were anticipating vacation and were getting ready for the great event of the year, Chinese New Year's Day.

"If you can't let me stay here, I'll go off to some temple and stay with the priests. My home is too crowded, no privacy, no freedom from interruption. I must be alone."

This, as a final argument, was effective. I gave my consent, but with the cloud of doubt still about me.

And then one day came the request, "I want to be baptized."

So it happened on the following Sunday, that a little company of sympathetic believers trailed down to the canal. In its cold waters, before them all, I put the bold question, "Si-tsang, ng slang-sing Yia-su ming-deo feh?"

And as boldly came the answer, "I do believe."

President Faunce, of Brown University, will sail in the middle of July for Copenhagen, where he is to represent the Church Peace Union at the meeting of the World Alliance for the Promotion of International Friendship through the churches. Later he will visit the League of Nations at Geneva, and will deliver two lectures at Oxford on "The Ethics of Patriotism."

"There are 531 Congressmen in Washington—436 in the House of Representatives and ninety-six in the Senate. Of these, all but twenty-eight are members of some church; 116 are Methodists, sixty-seven Presbyterians, thirty-seven Episcopalians, thirty-five Baptists, thirty Congregationalists, twenty-four Roman Catholics, twelve Lutherans, five Unitarians, three Jews, three Mormons and two Universalists. The others are distributed among various smaller denominations."

THE DOCTRINE OF DISCRIMINATION OF AMUSEMENTS

In play are found some of the most educative experiences of life. In recreation and amusement are found revitalization and toning up of one's physical, mental, and spiritual nature. Have not amusements in general obtained such a place in society's life and when carried on in decent fashion contributed so much of worth to the happiness of folks that the church can with sincerity throw some of its energy into the fight to improve some and abolish others? Can we not then improve society by educating our young people from early years to discriminate in amusements subjecting all types of recreation to the standard of an enlarging, rich, free Christ-like life.

These questions the writer raises in the serious hope that the problem of amusements which is occupying the minds of many young people may be clarified and solved in the light of its present day merits rather than in the light of a heritage of Calvinistic severity. The problem of amusements for young people extends far beyond the immortal trio that for twenty-five or more years has been the definition of amusements. It involves the evening ride in the bewitching automobile, the perusal of elaborately colored magazines, the reading of book after book with fascinating title, the evenings out, the dinners and soirees at public restaurants. All perfectly good when discrimination is practiced. Is the automobile to be a fine recreation or a possibility of character destruction? Is the picture magazine to stimulate one's artistic sense or arouse base emotions and cultivate a sense of poor art? Is the story to stimulate the imagination, enlarge experience, broaden sympathy, provide wholesome recreation, or is it to distort life, cheapen one's estimate of his fellows, substitute living in fancy for accomplishment in reality? A doctrine of prohibition of the things mentioned will not solve these serious problems. The insidious working of the evil is going on. How shall we conserve the good in all legitimate amusements and keep out the bad? The answer seems to have been worked out on the hard anvil of experience—with all the church's emphasis of the sin of so called worldly amusements they have increased—discrimination is the next move.

Why not believe in the fundamental idealism of youth? Why not habituate the children and youth to criticizing their own forms of recreation? Why not build in the young people a sense of righteous wrath when either theater, magazine, story book, or newspaper presents for consumption the low ideals of marriage, cheap values of life, the character degrading things against which all life is repulsed. The Christian youth of this land could raise its united voice of religious anger in protest against amusements that degrade and depreciate human character. Let the churches generate zeal and develop intelligence on this question of amusements and bring to bear in destroying the bad the group consciousness of idealistic youth that is willing to accept amusements when clean and wholesome and ready to destroy them when dirty and low. Why keep up the duplicity of a pulpit denunciation of amusements in general while frankly admitting in practical life the impossibility of eliminating them as a whole?

Youth hates a "don't" but will rally around a "do." Shall that "do" be "discriminate, boycott all that is cheap and low; take all that is high, valuable, and contributing to one's Christian character?"

WHAT ABOUT THE COVENANT?

Nearly every member of a Baptist church came into the membership by accepting a covenant of which this is the substance "Having been, as we trust, brought by divine grace to accept the Lord Jesus Christ and to give ourselves wholly to him we do now joyfully covenant with each other to walk together in love," etc. No other terms about this or that belief were proposed or even known. That has been the only guide in life; and it has been the one great controlling idea in the wonderful growth of our denomination. It has kept us close to the Saviour. It has kept us from wasting time in hair-splitting discussions about mysterious matters. It has given us sound confidence in God and in the religious teachings of Christ. By what right can any body of self-appointed censors and a gathered set of followers come in now and impose on the Baptist brotherhood and the Baptist churches some statement of doctrine beyond what was given us when we came into the churches? It is not the character of the articles that are objectionable. It is the idea of imposing any articles beyond those we took when we entered the churches. For one I dissent from the whole program of imposition. Suppose I did not accept these articles in every particular. What is my situation? Am I to be expelled? Is my church to be cut off from the fellowship of the convention if it does not accept them in toto? And if not in toto how much variation can be allowed? Before the convention takes any vote I hope it will stop to think what will be the situation of churches that do not open the question and adopt these articles.

THE "SEARCHLIGHT" AND DR. RAUSCHENBUSCH

A few days ago a company of ministers and others were gathered at a meeting to recognize a newly organized Baptist Church. During the evening meal a company was discussing the charges made in Dr. Straton's Searchlight against the schools and teachers, and especially those teachers who have passed on. The writer, who is a former student of Dr. Rauschenbusch, quoted from memory a sentence in a letter from his teacher a few months before his death. Referring to the letter I find the sentence to be, "We need the salvation of Jesus Christ more than ever before, and I believe in it more than ever."

After this statement was made, Dr. Charles A. Brooks said, "The last time I ever saw Walter Rauschenbusch, was at the meeting of German Baptist Brethren at Detroit. This was just a little while before his death. He had given a great address, and at the close a man came forward to talk with him about religion and when I saw them they were kneeling together, and Dr. Rauschenbusch was praying with him." This statement was confirmed by a layman of the Grace Church at Racine, who was at that same meeting.

Dr. Rauschenbusch needs no defence from any one. His life and his standing among his brethren amply answer any criticism brought against him. And this is written not to defend him, but that those who never knew him might know that he did believe in personal salvation of men. He always considered himself an evangelist.

Real Poetry Makers

Who Couldn't Write a Verse To Save Their Lives

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

I MET a girl yesterday—a girl with wide, wistful eyes, and quite a lot of bright hair tucked up under a soft velvet hat, and a curiously breathless little laugh. She was a stranger to me—only one figure detaching itself from a crowd—but I, she told me excitedly, was in no way a stranger to her!

"Why, I've loved your poetry," she said softly, "for years and years! I've read ever so much of it—nearly all that you've written, I guess. I remember lots of the verses. Some of them have made me smile—and some of them have made me cry. And just a few weeks ago I read one, after an awfully hard day with my children, and—"

I interrupted. I was glad of a chance to interrupt, for the most honest appreciation is often the most embarrassing.

"Your children?" I questioned incredulously. "Why—you're only a child yourself. Surely, you're not old enough to be married—and have children?"

The girl's wide eyes grew wider, under the shadow of her soft velvet hat. It was almost a full moment before she answered my question.

"But of course you would misunderstand," she told me, at last. "I'm so interested in my work that I never think to explain. No—I'm not married. But I have nearly two hundred children! I do settlement work, you see, in a large factory town. And the children of that town—bless their little hearts—are my especial charge. I teach them, and I organize their clubs, and I do my best to take care of them and—most of all—I love them. I can't help thinking of them, and speaking of them, as if they were my children."

I looked down into her eager face—so vividly full of enthusiasm and affection.

"I wish," I said, "that you'd tell me something about this work you so love."

And so she told me . . . She told me of the little Italians and Hungarians and Jews—of the one small Chinese girl and of the wee Spanish boy. She told me, in a slightly hushed voice, of the sentence prayers that she has taught them to make—quite spontaneously—in classroom. And of the shy questions they ask her about the secrets of this life—and of the life to come.

"I adore them," she said, "every one of them! And they know it. And they care for me—I think—almost as much as I care for them. But—" all at once she broke off, in utter confusion. "But I've been talking about myself! And it's you —you that I want to talk about! I want to talk about your poetry."

Again it was necessary to change the subject.

"Have you ever written any poetry yourself?" I questioned hurriedly. "Loving it as you do, I should think that you'd make up some little verses. It's ever so easy to write poetry, if you love it!"

The girl's slim, small hand reached out, swiftly. The fingers that touched mine were tremulous.

"Oh," she breathed, "oh, if I only could write poetry! But I couldn't. I couldn't make up a verse to save my life!"

There are ever so many people in this world who, by their own admission, couldn't write a verse. There are ever so many people who feel that they couldn't

JUST a smile when the road seems hard,

*Just a laugh in the gloom;
Just a hope, when the soul seems scarred,*

*Like a light in a darkened room. . .
Just the touch of a tender hand,
And a song, and a bit of prayer;
Just the courage to understand—
And the heart to truly care!*

Just these things—and your life may be,

*A perfect poem to the world;
Just these things, and the earth can see,*

*Your mind like a flag unfurled,
Just the touch of a tender hand,
And a message from God above—
Just the courage to understand,
And the heart to truly love!*

*Never a man will pass you by,
That does not take of your cheer,
Never a woman will meet your eye,
That does not hold you dear . . .
Poets and artists, they do their best,
But yours is the better part—
For you give of a friendship Christ has blessed,
And the love of a helping heart!*

construct a story or paint a picture or even do an exquisite bit of embroidery on fine linen. Oftentimes they are the folk who look up, with a certain humble friendliness, to the people who can do the things that they so admire. And yet I have known many of these same folk to make the realest poetry, the most beautiful pictures and the most marvelous stories in the world. They have made them out of their lives!

The girl, for instance, that I met yesterday. She was almost aghast at my suggestion that she try to write verse. She thought that the making of poetry was a marvelous thing—a great, splendid gift.

She thought that it was a marvelous, out-of-reach thing. And yet, every day, she is making poetry. She is putting it into the lives of the little children that she works with. She is giving it, hourly, by the light of her eyes, and the touch of her hand. It isn't the kind of poetry that is written neatly across a page of white paper—it's a finer sort. It's the kind of poetry that is written by love, across a white page of life.

There are other people, too, that are doing the same thing. There's the woman who leaves her housework every afternoon to read the Scripture to an old minister who is blind. There's the young girl—full of life and gaiety—who takes time away from her pleasures to go twice a week, on visiting days, to the hospital where the boys who suffered injury in the world war are lying. For there are many of these boys—heroes we called them a few years ago—who are practically forgotten now!

Yes, there are other people who are doing the same thing. There are people who cook dainty little things for invalids, and other people who do unexpected bits of mending for very busy people. There are people who find time to write thoughtful wee letters when they're most needed; there are other people who are never too rushed or too busy to give a word of hope or cheer or inspiration. There are all these people and many more—so many that it would be quite impossible to count them!

Yes, there are many poets and artists and writers who do not dream that they are making verses and pictures and stories. Look around and you'll see them, on every side, almost. You'll see them—and you'll recognize them when you see them.

They're ever so easy to recognize! Because they're just the friendly, kind, loving people who take time to make other people happier and better and more contented. Their poems are the pleasant words and deeds that will grow into sweet memories. And their pictures are the little acts of fellowship and faith and trust that will, in time, become visions. And their stories are the impressions that they leave upon the hearts and souls of the folk who know them, and the folk who meet them, and even the folk who are casual passers-by!—Christian Herald.

think. I wish Peggy wrote every week, although I like the other stories. The ones about the Japanese kimono were fine and I think I am going to compete for it, although I do not paint very well. I liked the story about "Something Up O Mitsu's Sleeve" and how he thought he could order a little god by mail. I am always sorry for the heathen children, aren't you? And now I must close.

Very truly yours,

The Young Reserves

A Coat of Mail!

Dear Young Reserves,

Long, long ago, when there used to be horrible ruffians on the highways, valiant knights used to put on their coats of mail and fare forth to rescue the fair ladies who were forever getting into all kinds of trouble! This was very exciting. And very thoughtful. For otherwise I can't think what would have happened to those ladies!

But there is a Blue Knight who comes along my street every day, and I must say that his coat of mail is even more interesting than the heroes of olden days ever wore—for this modern coat some of you have woven, link by link, from the Atlantic to the Pacific; and there is at least one fair(?) lady whom it helps rescue, as you will understand when you read the following:

Dear Miss Applegarth,

We saw the play "Wait a Minute" in THE BAPTIST and we gave it. I was the Chinese girl and mamma was the Voice of the Clock. Daddy made the clock. The people liked the play very much. We have a missionary evening once a month.

I was glad my poem was good enough to be printed even if I did not get the prize. Anyhow daddy has sent in my subscription to Everyland. The night we gave the play one girl recited "The Crusader Spirit" by Adelaide Noble, another girl recited my poem, and I recited "One Sent" by Y. T.

We have a Crusader Company. Mamma is the leader. We won a prize poster in the reading contest and six of our members were first to get a "foot of dimes," and besides printing our names in Missions Miss Noble wants our pictures for a poster to take to the N. B. C.

Since October I have read 15 mission-ary books. Sincerely yours,

Helen M. Goodwin,
Northwood, N. H.

To the Other Young Reserves,

I have always wanted to write you a letter, and when the poetry contest was on I fully meant to write a poem for it. But I am not much of a poet, I guess. But when I read Peggy's story about "Are You a Maker?" and that a poem was just something made I thought I could do that. Then when she told about their Valentine party I told my best friend and she thought it would be fun to raise money for the Continuation Campaign. So we gave a party. It wasn't a big one, though, but every one paid 10 cents to come and a cent a piece to play in the games, so we did a lot of laughing. Then the others got interested, so I guess we will raise $10 maybe. I think it is fun to have this kind of thing to work for. I am almost eleven.

Dear Editor,

I read all the stories and like them a lot. My uncle is a Presbyterian minister and so I know that ministers need children to work at things as well as grown folks. I have read "Stay At Home Journeys" and "A Noble Army." I like "A Noble Army" the best, but it seems as if they were all very brave doesn't it? We don't have to be so brave nowadays; I hope I'm not lazy though. I belong to a club and we're filling a box to send to Burma to a missionary. I said shouldn't we raise a foot of dimes, each of us. But the leader hadn't heard of it before, but now we are raising it, not the foot though as we are not Crusaders. I want to enter the new contest about finishing Bob's story, The Watch That Made the Dollar Famous. So I shall have to start to work on it.

Your new friend,
Tremaine Thayer, Spartenburg.

Dear Sir (oh, do excuse me, but it's so much nicer being a lady, Frances!)

I read the Young Reserves every week and like them. I like Peggy's stories about Bill. Bill is like my brother, I

*If I should live in fair Japan
How quaint my home would be!
My house would be of light bamboo,
With paper panes, you see;
And sliding panels for the walls
Of all the rooms and all the halls,
If I were Japanese.*

*My shoes I'd take from off my feet
Before I went inside;
And if the days were fine, I'd ope
My sliding panels wide.
And then I'd sit on thick soft mat,
And have some tea, or this or that,
If I were Japanese.*
—Blanche Elizabeth Wade in Everyland.

These are just a few of the links in our Baptist Coat of Mail, but as they seem like such strong links I wanted to share them with you. How I do hope every pair of eyes that reads these words belongs to a pair of hands that owns a cheerful pocketbook, so that every single one of you will give and give and give to the Continuation Campaign. Just as Frances said, "I am always sorry for the heathen children," so each of us must be sorry, too. But don't you remember in the story about "Close Quarters," how Bob overheard the poor quarters telling that their previous owners were sorry enough, but they did nothing! Absolutely nothing! I think this must be very surprising to the Lord Jesus, who gives American children so much and yet they don't think of sharing. Let's share, you and I!

Don't forget about the new contest, as given on February 25. There's a prize for the best article from a boy and another prize for the best article from a girl! So write me by April 1 how you think Bob spent his four quarters.

Puzzle Poems

(Answers to these will be given next week.)

1.
My first of anything is half,
My second is complete;
And so remains until once more
My first and second meet.

2.
Formed long ago, yet made today,
I'm most employed while other's sleep;
What none would like to give away,
Yet no one likes to keep.

3.
Pray tell me, ladies, if you can,
Who is that highly favored man,
Who, though he has married many a wife,
May still stay single all his life?

4.
Great numbers do our use despise,
But yet, at last they find,
Without our help in many things
They might as well be blind.

5.
As I was going through a barn my feet
Stumbled on something good to eat;
It wasn't fish or flesh or bone;
I kept it till it ran alone.

6.
Ever running on my race,
Never staying at one place,
Through the world I make my tour
Everywhere at the same hour.
If you please to spell my name
Reversed or forward it's the same.

Deut. 6:1-9; II Timothy 2:15
(CONSECRATION MEETING).

"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

To thousands of young church members, and old as well, the Bible is a closed book. Days, weeks and years pass by and the message of the great Book has no opportunity to impress itself upon the life of the believer. Results: A dwarfed spirituality, laxness in church obligations and uselessness in the kingdom of God.

A vital need of young people today is that of being grounded in the great truths of the Christian religion. These truths are found in the Book. It must be made a part of our very lives. But how?

1. A well-balanced stewardship. This will include not only one's money, but a definite portion of one's time set aside for a study of God's word. However fine the preacher may be, his sermons can never take the place of the quiet reading and study of the Book of Life. Too busy! How many days in succession would our young people be willing to go away to the day's work without food for nourishing the physical body? Spiritual nourishment is just as vital to a robust Christian life as good food is to the making of a robust body.

2. Group study. The individual can do much to overcome his faults and the increasing of his spiritual power by going it alone in his Bible reading. The meaning and value of the Scriptures will be greatly enhanced by associating one's self with others in the public worship of the church, including Sunday services and mid-week prayer meetings. Further, every young person needs intensive study and reading of the Book in Bible classes. To habitually absent one's self from the Bible school of the church is usually a sign of waning spiritual life.

3. To what end? "A lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my pathway." This is how the old Psalmist regarded the Word. If ever young lives needed this "light," they need it now to lighten their roadway through the rough places of modern life.

But not only for personal use. All life should be on a service basis. Better Bible reading should result in better service—in the home, in the church, in the community, in the nation, and throughout the world.

What Shall I Do With My Life?

This question is uppermost in the minds of many of our fine young people. The weeks are rapidly passing, and commencement are not so very far away. Many are asking "To what school shall I go?" Naturally, we reply, "To a Baptist school." For this issue of THE BAPTIST, we have brought together several articles which we believe to be of vital importance, bearing directly on the two questions named above. These articles have appeared at different times in the denominational press. We think they are worth a second reading.

To young people who are interested, we will mail free, on request, two pamphlets: "Why Go To College?" and "What Shall I Do With My Life?" Address B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

How to Find Your Life-Work

By J. CAMPBELL WHITE

1. Trust God's wisdom and love. He knows what is best for each one of his children and will give the best to every one who will follow his leading. (Rom. 8:28; Phil. 2:13.)

2. Accept God's plan for your life. God has a loving and wise plan for the world and for each of our lives in relation to his plan for the world. As we share God's life, we must share in his purpose and program. He desires each one to take the largest possible place in that program. (Eph. 2:10; John 17:4; Luke 24:45-49; Acts 1:8; Rom. 1:14-16.)

3. Obey habitually the known will of God. "Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge." By doing each day the revealed will of God for that day one becomes more and more sensitive to his will in all questions of conduct and of life. Only by purposing in advance to follow his will, wherever it may lead, is it possible to discover with any fulness what his special plan is for one's own life. (James 1:22-25; Josh. 1:8; John 7:17.)

4. Acknowledge God's ownership in your life with all of its powers and possessions. Expect the same kind of guidance from God with reference to going into business or professional life that you would expect in order to go into the ministry or mission field. (I Pet. 4:10; II Cor. 5:14-19; Acts 4:32; I Cor. 6:19, 20.)

5. Study the needs of the world. You will thus open an important channel of knowledge through which God can speak. One of Christ's commands is, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields." (John 4:35.)

6. Saturate your mind with God's thoughts. This may be done by developing habits of Bible study, meditation and communion with God. (II Tim. 3:15-17; Psalm 119:11; Psalm 19:7-11; II Cor. 10:5.)

7. Pray that the laborers needed may be thrust out by the Lord of the harvest. One cannot really pray for this without being willing to follow God's will concerning his own life-work. (Luke 10:2.)

8. Develop your latent capacities through education and use. Secure the best possible preparation for the work of life. Many positions are open to college-trained men and women that are not open to others. The more fully one develops his own latent powers the higher the responsibility he is able to carry. (II Tim. 2:15.)

9. Use your own mental processes. God has endowed you with powers of self-analysis, observation and judgment. When under the direction of God's word and spirit these are important means of discovering his leadership. (Psalm 25:9, 12.)

10. Consult friends of spiritual insight and discrimination. God very often sends important messages to us through human channels, and also uses us to convey his message to others. (Exod. 3:7-10.)

11. Learn to overcome temptations and obstacles. This is one of the best ways of discovering our available resources in God. All great leaders have had to overcome great difficulties. Your power to help others will be largely in proportion to your own successful conquest of obstacles. (I Cor. 10:13; Eph. 6:10-17.)

12. Trust your highest impulses. They are from God. They may come at an early age. Many of the present leaders of the church were strongly impelled toward a Christian life-work before reaching the age of eighteen. (I Sam. 3:1-4:1; I Tim. 4:12.)

13. Ask for divine guidance. There are many promises that God will guide his children, as they ask for guidance and are willing to follow it. (James 1:5; Prov. 3:5, 6.)

14. Receive and obey the Holy Spirit. Christ has promised this supreme gift to all his disciples to guide them into fullness of truth and life. (Luke 11:13; John 16:12-15; Acts 1:8 and 5:32.)

Why Go to College?

By J. E. DILLARD

"That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." (Psalm 144:12.)

1. A college education will add to your earning capacity. It will help you to make money, and help you to enjoy it and use it right when you get it. Andrew Carnegie says, "The business men of America have at last come to realize that a college education has a commercial value."

A college education will insure a success in life. Other things being equal, the college man has ten times the chance of succeeding in business or professions of the man with only a high school education, and he has 800 times the chance of the men with no schooling. The Western Electric Company has tried out college men for a number of years, and after ten years of experience gives the following conclusion: "Only 10 per cent of men without college education made good, while 90 per cent of men with college education made good."

2. A college education will help one to get at home in the world. It will teach you what men have done, thought and aspired to be. It will open your eyes to the beauties and wonder of the world you live in.

3. You will become acquainted with scholars of the highest characters and attainments, and form friendships that will be lasting and influential.

4. A college education will bring out and develop your native ability. It will keep you from being a round peg in a square hole.

5. A college education will help you to be of great service to others. A college will teach you how.

6. An education in a Christian college helps develop the very-highest type of character. Much depends on the atmosphere of the school.

As Sir Walter Scott lay dying he said to his son-in-law, Lockhart, "Be a good man, my dear, nothing else will give you any comfort when you come to lie here."

Why Go to a Baptist School?

By MILLARD A. JENKINS

I have no hesitancy in affirming that Baptist boys and girls, young men and women, should be educated in Baptist schools. I shall state five reasons why this is so.

1. It is a denominational duty. No one of us would say for a moment that the Baptist denomination should not maintain its aggressive program. Without educating our Baptist youths in our Baptist schools, how long could we maintain our growth and influence?

2. It is a denominational privilege. It is the duty of Baptists to provide schools for the education of our youths, and it is the duty of our youths to secure their education in such schools. Then surely it needs no argument to convince the most skeptical that we are all in the realm of exalted privilege both in providing for and attending such schools.

3. It is a denominational obligation. If the denomination has provided these schools, then is not the Baptist student under moral obligation to attend these schools which the loyalty and sacrifices of his denomination have provided? I think so. Certainly so if the student takes his church and denomination seriously, and if Baptist principles and doctrines are really meaningful to him?

4. It is a denominational necessity. Our schools, as a denomination, have added largely to our growth. If we maintain denominational life and progress, we must have leaders and workers, preachers and teachers, evangelists and missionaries. These are not likely to come out of other schools. They do sometimes so come, but not as a rule.

5. It is a denominational inspiration. The Baptist school is a radiating light center. The trained Baptist is a light bearer. The slogan of Baptists has ever been, "Let there be light." We could not long maintain these light centers if our Baptist youths went to others for their education. Nor can we maintain our progress if our young people are educated in schools not in sympathy with our views. Not only are our Baptist schools our denominational light centers, but they are our rallying centers. From these go our leaders, pastors, missionaries, professors, college presidents, Sunday-school and B. Y. P. U. workers. Baptist schools are the wellsprings of our life.

Going to St. Paul June 28 to July 2?

Fact IV.

As a manufacturing city, St. Paul ranks well toward the fore. However, the numerous manufacturing concerns are not centered in any particular locality, but are found in many sections of the city. Meat packing is the largest single industry of this kind. South St. Paul is not only the largest meat packing center in the Northwest, but it is also the fastest growing live-stock market in the world, while the new Armour plant, located at South St. Paul is the finest and most modern plant of its kind in the world. Swift and Co. have also for many years operated a large plant which compares favorably with the new Armour plant. The various companies provide guides for the guests who desire to inspect the plants; a trip through one of the packing plants is well worth while. There are many other large manufacturing plants in the city and St. Paul leads the Northwest in the production of fur goods, coke, hoisting machinery, rubber goods, food products, advertising novelties, refrigerators, gloves, hats, law books, and shoes. One of the most rapidly growing manufacturing centers will be seen in going out University Avenue. This district, known as St. Paul's Midway Industrial District, contains some of the finest industrial plants in the country.

Fact V.

It follows quite naturally that with its importance as a railroad, jobbing and manufacturing center, St. Paul should also be a leading retail center. There are probably very few cities, regardless of size, where better or more complete retail stores can be found than are found in St. Paul. On Sixth Street, Seventh Street, Robert Street and Wabasha Street, are located many of the larger retail and department stores, while most of the down-town section is occupied with retail stores of all kinds.

From Sunny California

Miss Marion Nicholson of the First Church B. Y. P. U., San Jose, writes: "Every Sunday, there are young people who go to a Porto Rican mission and hold Sunday school in the afternoon. On the second Sunday in the month some go to the alms house, and on the fourth Sunday to the W. R. C. Home. There is also a work opening up among the Chinese. We have street meetings Wednesday evenings."

A Live Men's Organization

By F. A. CAUSEY

The Baptist Brotherhood of the First Church of Pekin, Ill. (shown on page 207), was organized Jan. 7, 1921, with eleven men as charter members. At our first annual banquet, which was held recently, an increase in membership to forty-four was reported.

For some time our pastor, Rev. E. C. Poole, had felt the absence of the men in his congregation and at his request and due to his activity, a live men's organization, affiliated with the National Brotherhood, has resulted.

We adopted as our pledge, "I will be present at the regular church services whenever possible. I will assist the pastor in any way I may and I will get another man." Our slogan is, "Men, let's go to church."

Where formerly we had but five or six men at the church services, we now have as high as fifty. Our men have become interested in church activities. We have regular meetings once a week at one of the members' homes. Here we plan for future endeavor. We have four standing committees as follows: Membership, educational, welfare and transportation. Each committee is composed of wide-awake members and one of them at least is present at each service.

Our brotherhood has been responsible for our membership canvass. We have sponsored the construction and have financed the erection of a choir rail and large platform. We have increased the church finances by urging more liberal support and have been responsible for every stranger receiving an invitation to return to our services and, if possible, affiliate himself with our men's organization. Visitors are invited by letter to make our church their usual place of worship. We are consistently presenting invitation cards to men outside the church in the hope of getting them interested.

Our transportation committee has been responsible for the presence in our Sunday school of children who live too far away from the church to come alone and also for bringing "stay-at-homes" to our church services. Our welfare committee is responsible for entertainment and refreshment at the various church activities. The educational committee is at present interesting our men in stewardship and we hope to secure a goodly percentage of tithers as a result of this activity.

We have under consideration a boys' auxiliary to the brotherhood since we feel we should be sponsors for the training of boys under eighteen. The brotherhood has also recently organized a Bible Class which meets at the regular Sunday-school hour. We have taken up the study of the Bible from a historic viewpoint, contemplating in the future the study of specific books.

Our able pastor is the teacher and the men have shown much interest. We anticipate regular additions to the class since so much is to be learned through this course of instruction.

The Church in the Home

For several years Rev. M. R. Foshay, of First Church, New Haven, Conn., has been emphasizing the church in the home idea for the benefit of all "shut-ins" in his parish. This service is rendered through an abbreviated typewritten order of service like the one used in the church, including hymns, prayers and sermon, the same being delivered on Saturday by the Boy Scouts. One copy of the "Church in the Home" went to China and was translated into the Chinese tongue and used. An interesting fact to note is that Miss Florence Warner, an Episcopalian, who did the work of translation, returned to America and was baptized by Mr. Foshay, while he was pastor of the First Church, Manchester, N. H. One of such services was translated in the Braille system and read by the blind.

A Church Program

Frequently the question is asked as to what the church can really do to make effective the denominational appeal. A short time ago a meeting was held at the Second Church, Chicago, composed of the deacons, trustees, missionary board, and representative of the Women's Society to face this question. A co-operative program was worked out.

1. The trustees were given the job of collecting the delinquent pledges on the New World Movement.

2. The missionary board was given the work already started of conducting the six-week mission study course on stewardship.

3. The pastor and missionary board were assigned the task of securing in the congregation, before March 1, as many signatures as possible to stewardship pledges.

4. After having secured all the pledges of tithing possible in the congregation, the remainder of the membership is to be solicited by teams of men and women designated by the missionary board.

5. After completing the canvass for tithers, a canvass is to be made of all non-contributors to the New World Movement, special care being taken to see every tither and induce him to administer his tithe so that the New World Movement gets its proper share.

6. A big appeal is to be made to the Sunday morning congregation, on a good Sunday morning, for extra gifts by those already contributing.

International Uniform Lesson for April 2

ASA RELIES ON GOD

2 Chronicles 14:1-12. Golden Text: 2 Chronicles 14:11

Setting

Rehoboam ruled over Judah seventeen years, during which time he lost two-thirds of his kingdom, and set up idolatrous shrines of the worst order. Following Rehoboam, his son Abijah reigned for three years—a wicked, warring, idolatrous period. At Abijah's death, his son Asa succeeded and reigned for forty-one years, during which time Israel had eight kings. The geographical and historical difference between this and last quarter's lessons should be clearly fixed in mind—perhaps in no better way than by sketching a map showing the division.

Lesson

Asa was a man of initiative. From his wicked grandfather and father and from a mother whom he had to depose for heathenism, he could have had little inspiration for his good works. The quiet of the land for ten years was no doubt the result of the wars waged by Abijah. Thus Asa had time to work civic reforms. He "did that which was good and right in the eyes of Jehovah his God, for he took away the foreign altars and the high place and brake down the pillars and hewed down the Asherim (sacred trees, symbols of the goddess Asherah)." But having taken away he more than replaced in that "he commanded Judah to seek Jehovah the God of their fathers, to do the law and commandment." His destruction was constructive—he destroyed only that which must eventually eat out the roots of the nation. He built military defenses and raised an army—300,000 out of Judah and 280,000 out of Benjamin. Word of this army aroused the antipathy of Zerah, the Ethiopian, who came a thousand thousand strong to overthrow this new military power. Asa with an army one-half the size of Zerah's went out to meet him, crying "Jehovah, there is none besides thee to help. We rely on thee and in thy name are we come against this multitude. O Jehovah, thou art God; let not man prevail against thee." The Ethiopians fled toward Egypt, pursued by Asa's army to Gerar where they were annihilated.

Leading Thoughts

1. The spiritual resources of a race are the solvent of its problems.
2. "To set ourselves right with God first, and then to claim his help in spiritual conflict with the powers of evil, is still the way of victory."—Dr. J. M. Willoughby.
3. Wholesome consciousness of impotence should lead to overcoming faith.

Our Own Folks

He Toiled to the Last

By CHARLES L. WHITE

Dr. Datus DeWitt Proper has ended his earthly career of spiritual service. For forty years as missionary, general missionary, district secretary and associate church edifice secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, he has toiled manfully at the most difficult missionary tasks. A few months ago he came to New York for special service, and was at his desk as usual early Tuesday morning, Feb. 28. Two hours later he was seized with a sudden illness, canceled an engagement to give an address at the Alexander Avenue Baptist Church in the Bronx, and went to his room in Dr. Stump's home in Brooklyn. His physician did not regard him as seriously ill, and his daughter, Mrs. Saum of New York City, was with him Wednesday evening and left him apparently comfortable. Several times during the night and as late as 3:30 Thursday morning, Dr. Stump ministered to Dr. Proper, and at 4:30 he passed away very suddenly. He leaves a son and four daughters to mourn for him, his wife having died many years ago. A noble, consecrated Christian man, of great ability and high faithfulness has passed to that other room in his Father's house. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. They rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Our friend worked to the very last and two extraordinary articles from his pen were recently placed on my desk and were sent only a few days ago to our denominational papers.

Dr. Proper was born in Harrisburg Township in Van Buren County, Iowa Territory, January 31, 1844. He attended the public school during the winter terms until he was seventeen years of age when he entered Howe's Academy at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. A year later he enlisted in the army and served for almost three years in the 19th Iowa Infantry Volunteers. He was in several skirmishes and four battles in each one of which he was wounded. In the third battle he was captured and taken to the Camp Ford Confederate Prison, at Tyler, Texas, where for ten months he was held in captivity. The last battle in which he fought was also the last battle of the Civil War, at Spanish Fort, opposite Mobile, Ala., April 8, 1865.

Six months after returning from the war he was converted in a rural school-house revival meeting, was baptized, and joined the little Harrisburg country church. He was licensed to preach by the church on April 14, 1870, and was ordained July 24, 1872. During this year and a part of the following, he was pastor of the church of Pilot Grove, Iowa, nearly twenty miles away from his home, where he was working on his farm. At this time he began his theological studies with the Rev. William C. Pratt at Bonaparte. Early in the fall he left the farm and entered the Theological Seminary at Chicago, Ill., which was then starting under its president, Dr. Northrup.

Dr. Proper established his family at Bloomington, Ill., when he became pastor of the church in that place. Following this he held pastorates at Ames, and Iowa Falls, and at the annual meeting of the Iowa State Convention at Bedford, in 1878, was appointed a Sunday-school missionary in cooperation with the American Baptist Publication Society. In 1882 he was chosen by the state convention board of Iowa to become the missionary secretary of the convention in cooperation with the Home Mission Society. Seven years later he was serving the oldest Baptist church in Kansas, the First Church of Atchison, as pastor when he was appointed by the Home Mission Society general missionary for Western Washington, British Columbia, and the Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho Baptist Convention. There he laid deep and firm foundations and built a superstructure that abides.

In 1897 Dr. Proper became the general missionary of Colorado and the following year he was called by the Home Mission Society for the work of district secretary and superintendent of missions for the Central District. In the last eight years he has been the associate church edifice secretary of the Home Mission Society, and has traveled widely in the states west of the Mississippi, often making extended journeys in other parts of the country in the interest of the society's work. Dr. Proper's duties varied with the years, always heavy and important, but he occupied every position in his long list of burden-bearing responsibilities with honor, fidelity and spiritual results.

Funeral services were held in the chapel at 597 Lexington Avenue, New York City, on the afternoon of Sunday, March 5, Dr. L. C. Barnes officiating. There was a large attendance of relatives, friends and many fellow workers.

The stream is calmest where it nears the tide;

And flowers are sweetest at the eventide;
And birds most musical at close of day;
And saints divinest when they pass away.

Burma Notes

By J. HERBERT COPE

The Prince of Wales is in India and Burma just now and the papers are full of receptions, addresses and entertainments. He has been shown the greatest homage. Those who have met him are charmed. He is popular to an extreme and will leave in India warm feelings toward him personally if not officially. Of course the non-cooperators tried to wreck the plans but without success. The British lion has at last waked, much to the surprise of the trouble makers. Thousands have been arrested and given prison terms from one month to two years. They tried the Ulster bluff and raised volunteer companies which volunteers were clapped into prison and the end is not yet. On their release people expect there will be trouble and the government is preparing. European volunteers are being enlisted in various places and arms distributed, I believe. If the thing is coming to a show-down the government will be ready for any eventualities. There is no danger as long as the army remains true. The Ali brothers tampered with its loyalty and suffered immediately. Thus far there is no sign of its proving disloyal and until it does the rebels have no chance. This year ought to be a most important one in the history of the Indian reform movement.

Dr. Smith has gone to join Mrs. Smith and the great company who have surrounded him for the fifty odd years of his service. It was wonderful that almost up to the end he was able through his active brain to continue the work which his body was unable to perform. Mrs. Rose, affectionately called "Mama Rose," is alone the veteran missionary of Burma.

There seems no doubt that the Burmans are waking up as the non-Christians have in other lands and it is more difficult perhaps to preach to them than a few years ago. So the experience of Mr. Rogers is most encouraging. He says that one pongyi kyaung, that is a monastery, seems to be turning from a Buddhist into a Christian school. The monks are studying their Bibles daily and asking for tracts.

It was a blow when the government announced that it felt compelled to withdraw its support from the new trades school. The explanation vouchsafed to the mission was "for political reasons." The mission had been falling into line with the movements in other countries in the practical training of Christians; this will probably prove a serious setback. The missionaries are all wondering whether the same reasons will operate in relation to the proposed agricultural school which Case has worked so hard to found.

Professional begging in Rangoon has become such a burden that government and the missions are trying to stop it. The Buddhist gains merit by acts of charity and the Indians gain a living by preying on their belief. Thus professional beggars are brought over from India by their employers who share in the profits. The bill passed by the legislative council seems hardly to get at the root of the difficulty but perhaps may. It is interesting to find even Buddhists favoring the restriction of begging.

And in connection with the trade school one has to announce that the Nysums who came out last year for that institution have been compelled to relinquish the work and return to America. Mr. Nysum has been ill for over seven months and finally had to give it up. It is hard for one to accept a call to a life work and then find that the door is shut through circumstances over which he has no control.

A Rumor Corrected

Last year a number of churches failed to send in reports and the result was that woman's work in the denomination appeared to be on a decline. This caused concern on the part of all our leaders so a special investigation was held in order to find out the true condition. A questionnaire was sent to state and associational workers with the urgent request that a thorough investigation be made. The answers brought cheering news because the facts received proved conclusively that interest in woman's work was not on the decline but that there was an actual increase of over 135 woman's missionary societies over the year before.

In order that an accurate report may be given to the Northern Baptist Convention when it meets in Indianapolis in June, every local church is urged to carefully fill out the blanks for the Woman's Society, the World Wide Guild and the Children's World Crusade and return them at the proper time to the associated leaders. This is very important. There is no work more valuable to the denomination than that being done by these organizations.

HELEN M. HUDSON,
INA E. BURTON.

"Can We Stop Now?"

A meeting that few who attended it will ever forget because of the two speakers who brought back their accounts of Northern Baptist work, almost from the opposite ends of the world, was held in the board room at 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, on Jan. 17.

This was the joint meeting of the Foreign Mission Society Board, and the Woman's Foreign Mission Society Board. The two speakers were Rev. William B. Lippard, associate secretary of the society, just returned from helping distribute the cargo of the Fellowship Ship in the desolate lands of Europe, and Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo, candidate secretary, back from the Congo, with his account of a great spiritual awakening there. Each of the two gave his hearers a vivid picture of these far lands, with an accompanying realization of the tangible results which Northern Baptists are accomplishing there, and the necessity of continuing such a work.

Mr. Lippard, pale and worn from a trip full of hardships, but deeply moved by the glorious experiences he encountered in the distribution of the "gifts of love" (to use the German term for them), told the story of his voyage from its beginning, and touched upon various eloquent incidents of his stay in each of the countries visited. His own account of all this is appearing in THE BAPTIST from week to week, so that it is enough to say here that he made every person present see for himself the desolation and need of the lands where the fellowship gifts were sent, and the gratitude of the hundreds of men, women and children who gathered in unheated, unventilated churches to welcome Mr. Lippard as God's messenger of mercy from the Northern Baptists of America.

Then Dr. Lerrigo took up the story of Northern Baptist work, as he told of his months on the Congo, and declared that over 500 native Christians have been baptized there within the last few months. A full account of Dr. Lerrigo's report will be given in a later issue of THE BAPTIST. He declared that a greater Pentecost had come to the Congo than ever before, but that trained Christian workers were absolutely essential there in greater numbers to carry on the work. The fellowship ship, he said, would have been possible only to a denomination with long years of missionary training behind it, and a full realization of the world-cementing power of the friendship of Christ. Such a denomination, he declared, could not leave its work on the Congo, or elsewhere, half done.

"It is things like these that our societies are doing," said Dr. Frederick L. Anderson, chairman of the Foreign Mission Board of Managers, at the conclusion of Dr. Lerrigo's address. "Can we stop now?"

Kalamazoo Notes

Recently the Young Women's Mission Team of Kalamazoo College visited the Baptist Church of Okemos, taking charge of all of the services on Sunday, bringing messages of the world-wide program of missions. The Young Men's Mission Team has visited the Baptist Church at Eaton Rapids, bringing the same kind of a missionary program.

On the week-end of Nov. 18-20, one of the Young Men's Gospel Teams visited the First Church of Mason, having charge of the services on Friday evening, Saturday, and Sunday. On the same dates the second gospel team conducted the same kind of services with the Baptist Church of Stockbridge. These young people in every instance report most satisfactory meetings. The pastors of these churches, Rev. F. D. Hague of Okemos, and Rev. A. D. Werden of Eaton Rapids were the hosts to the mission teams, while Dr. W. B. Hartzog of Mason, and Rev. George F. McTaggart of Stockbridge entertained the gospel teams. All of these pastors had made careful preparations for the coming of the teams and expressed themselves to the young people as being greatly pleased with the service which they rendered.

The mission teams present the various phases of missionary activity and make an appeal for the support of world-wide missions through the co-operation of prayers, money, and life service. The gospel teams at the Friday night social meeting discuss the various sides of collegiate life, and on Saturday, among other activities, have a hike and weenie roast with the boys of the church. At the Sunday services such subjects as the following are discussed: "America's Need of Jesus Christ," "The World's Need of Christian America," "Our Personal Need of Christ," and "Jesus' Need of Us."

These young people have other engagements and will be glad to visit as many churches as they can without interfering with their collegiate work. The only expense incurred by a church in having one of these teams visit it would be the traveling expenses of the members of the team and their entertainment while with the church. Requests for either one of the gospel teams or one of the mission teams should be sent to the Extension Department of Kalamazoo College.

Christmas at a Dakota Prairie Mission

Word, delayed because of the heavy drifting Dakota snows, recently reached us from White Owl Baptist Mission, seventy miles from the railroad in Meade county, South Dakota, which was established last year by Rev. John Wesley Wynn, of their Christmas celebration which was not only in keeping with the spirit of the day, but picturesque in its character.

In the organization of the church at White Owl and also the Sunday school, Mr. Wynn said that he would be only too glad to help and assist in any special services they might have, such as Christmas services or Easter services, but especially suggested that these good people of the mission should not neglect having a Christmas tree. One of the members remembered this and silently went about things and went off into the brakes and brought in a tree, tramping for miles through the drifted snow and in an atmosphere one does not relish to be out in when a fireplace or the oven is at hand. In the hall where the mission services are held this conscientious member delivered the tree and then wended his way to the small store and post office combined and told those standing around what he had done. The very wind blowing outside at a gale would be enough to discourage most people and the denizens in the store were at first shocked at the audacity of the action of their fellow member. "But," said he, "let's go over and set the tree up." And another in the audience said, "Yes, let's do. We have over six dollars' worth of trimming around, so let's go over, set the tree up, trim it and make a fire in the hall even if we have to celebrate alone." So they went to work with a will and a prayer which means speed.

White Owl is a small place of just a dozen people, but it has a country telephone system and before the hall was entirely warm and the tree completely trimmed 175 men, women and children were on hand to help celebrate.

It will be recalled that Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tarune recently gave a deed to an acre of ground at White Owl for the building of a new Baptist Church at this point. In the acceptance of this piece of land in the presence of Rev. L. L. Mann and Rev. John W. Wynn, the little four-year-old son of Mr. Tarune drove the first stake.

North Dakota News

By FRED E. STOCKTON

Since the announcement of the new date for the Northern Baptist Convention, it has been possible for North Dakota to determine definitely the date for its next annual convention, which will be held with the First Baptist Church, Grand Forks, June 1-5. The program committee is planning for an especially interesting convention. The closing day Monday, June 5, will be devoted to the interests of the women and the laymen of the convention. Two separate and very interesting programs will be provided.

At a representative meeting of the laymen and women held in the state headquarters at Grand Forks Feb. 7, it was decided that the laymen of the state would be responsible for the collection of all amounts due on New World Movement pledges, and that the women of the state would assume the responsibility for collecting the $3,500 asked for in new money by April 30.

The following persons were named as the temporary Laymen's Council for the state: Thomas Greenshields, chairman, Fargo; S. C. Hendrickson, Grand Forks; George B. Newcomb, Bismarck; Paul B. Griffith, Grand Forks; S. D. Briar, Sawyer.

A special committee of women was appointed to carry forward the work of the Continuation Campaign throughout the state convention. This committee consists of: Mrs. N. J. Nelson, chairman, Grand Forks; Mrs. C. E. Webster, Fargo; Miss Lottie Lund, Powers Lake; Mrs. Victor J. Baldwin, Fargo; Mrs. George W. Buckingham, Jr., Grand Forks.

It was decided to hold three district conferences, to which a layman and a woman from each cooperating church are to be invited. These conferences were held at Minot, March 7; Bismarck, March 9, and Fargo, March 14. In addition to the presence of the state director of promotion, these conferences were attended by a member of the state laymen's council and the chairman of the woman's continuation campaign committee.

North Dakota will do its utmost to help meet the present denominational situation.

Connecticut Convention

A special session of the convention was held Feb. 21, in Calvary Church, New Haven. By ten o'clock the majority of the 342 delegates, representing nearly 100 churches, were assembled for business. Rev. J. N. Lackey, presiding. Dr. James McGee, pastor of Calvary Church, welcomed the delegates.

The early morning hour devotional period was conducted by Rev. D. A. Pitt, of Central Church, Norwich, who called attention to what our feelings would be when we came to the end of life if we failed in this crisis. Whatever discouraging features there may be, attention was directed to the encouraging features that could be seen at several points. The devotional period at the close of the afternoon session was conducted by Rev. H. J. White, of the First Church, Hartford, who based his remarks upon the parable of the talents.

The Lotus Male Quartet of Tremont Temple, being in the city, found its way to Calvary Church, attracted by the gathering crowd. Rev. C. A. Merrill of Noank, an old acquaintance of the songsters, brought their presence to the attention of the president. The quartet favored the convention with two selections: "The Old Rugged Cross" and "Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters."

Dr. A. B. Coats, state secretary, then outlined the purpose of the special session to be that of facing the denominational crisis. Rev. H. B. Sloat, director of promotion, presented a tabulated statement showing the status of the New World Movement in Connecticut, and pointed out the special task to be accomplished by April 30. Rev. D. B. MacQueen, of the First Church, Bridgeport, spoke on "Why We Are Where We Are," in explanation of the denominational task being half done. Mrs. J. D. Rough, state director of the Women's Continuation Campaign, outlined the plan for the women's work. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, director of the General Board of Promotion, in a full, frank and fair statement outlined the denominational situation. Opportunity was given for questions. The questions asked evidenced a desire on the part of the people to get an intelligent understanding of the present crisis, for the purpose of knowing just what ought to be done to meet it.

Their answer follows later in the report of the Committee on Findings.

Two banquets had been arranged, one for the men and one for the women. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, Judge F. W. Freeman, Dwight Chapman and A. M. Harris spoke at the men's banquet so effectively that the men voted to organize a state laymen's council and Dr. J. N. Lackey was authorized by the vote to appoint a laymen's council of seven members. The speakers at the women's banquet were: Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, Miss Mary L. Howard and Mrs. J. D. Rough. The tide of enthusiasm ran high. The women are fully organized and out to win.

The sustained interest was shown by the fact that the majority of the delegates remained for the evening session. Rev. W. B. Lippard, told of his experiences with the distribution of the cargo of the "Ship Filled in Fellowship." It was a fascinating story, realistically portrayed. Dr. J. H. Franklin of the Foreign Mission Society, spoke convincingly on "Why We Should Meet the Present Denominational Crisis." When Dr. Franklin had finished it seemed that everybody felt that "We can do it and we will." The closing address of the evening was delivered by Judge Freeman—a man's message to men.

Two important matters were passed upon at the convention. The report of the Committee on Findings: "We the representatives of the Baptist Churches of Connecticut in Convention assembled in New Haven, February 21, 1922, after hearing a full statement of the origin of the New World Movement, desire to record our conviction that the Movement was born of God, and that it is not more than our share of the great world task in this strategic hour."

"We also wish to record our judgment that in view of the success already attained, and with the removal of some of the hindrance that caused some not to participate, that it is well within the possibilities for us to reach the goal of $24 per member per year.

"Moreover, after a very full and frank statement by Dr. Aitchison regarding the Board of Promotion and the work, we desire to express our confidence in that Board and its grand Secretary, Dr. Aitchison, in their loyalty to Jesus Christ and the Kingdom of God.

"Finally, we desire to register our purpose to present all the facts to our people so that we may get the largest possible response from all our members, in order that Connecticut Baptists may raise our full share of the $15,000,000 needed for our work before April 30 for the sake of Christ and the World for which He died and rose again."

"The doctrinal statement for the denomination": On motion of Mr. MacQueen and seconded by Dr. Pitt, the following resolution was passed:

"That in view of the proposal made on behalf of the Northern Baptist Convention, and approved by Presidents Montgomery and Mullins, that both Conventions consider the whole matter of a doctrinal statement for the denomination, it is the sense of this Convention that we recommend to our churches that action on creedal statements might wisely be deferred for the present, and that in the weeks and months immediately ahead of us, all our energies should be devoted to the task of completing our share of the New World Movement.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES in First Church, Bangor, Rev. F. S. Bernauer pastor, have been remarkably successful. Rev. Benjamin C. Bubar was the evangelist. Mrs. Bernauer assisted in personal work as well as in singing. Over forty, most of them adults, have been baptized and many more have been accepted for membership. There was a special service, March 5 for the reception of new members and the first communion of the enlarged church family.

LISBON FALLS: Evangelist Harry Taylor and his daughter Ruth conducted successful evangelistic meetings in this church. Twenty-one people have united with the Baptist church; nine with the Methodist. Pastor Davis and his wife were unceasing in their efforts.

ROCKPORT: Pastor Andrew Young has seen the fruitage of his faithful sowing in the revival which has attended the services under Evangelist A. G. Saunders. Many decisions for Christ were made.

PORTLAND FIRST: This church has the largest enrolled membership, and the largest congregations on Sunday evenings of any of our Baptist churches in Maine. Pastor J. Harrison Thompson is leading into every line of real Christian service and is preaching a gospel that meets the actual needs of men. Every department of the church is in a flourishing condition.

IN NOVEMBER special meetings were held at First Church, Steubenville, under the simultaneous plan of evangelism with Chas. J. Pearce of Lorain as leader. There were fifteen confessions, eight uniting with the church. Americanization work is launched, in homes, teaching English to the housewives, clubs for boys and girls, and evening classes.

WORK AT WASHBURN with the new pastor, Rev. Byron H. Tomas, is advancing. Registration in the Sunday school has risen to 182, making it necessary to provide increased accommodation. The space over the audience room has been utilized and three class rooms provided at a cost of $500.00. Special meetings are in progress and interest is developing.

Dr. Aitchison at Presque Isle

Pastors and churches of the Aroostook Associations gathered in large numbers at Presque Isle, Feb. 23, to confer with Dr. Aitchison on the great questions of the hour. His address was followed by a long conference on the denominational situation and the things that have made it difficult. Questions concerning the New World Movement and objections to it and its policies were all met in masterly fashion. Some of the pastors voiced their resentment at the recent attacks upon the missionaries that have been given wide spread circulation. After characterizing these as they deserve, the associations passed the following resolutions:

Whereas grave rumors are being circulated which reflect upon the loyalty of our missionaries and denominational leaders to Jesus as Savior and to the Bible as God's word; and

Whereas the present financial depression has brought a staggering debt upon all our societies embraced in the New World Movement and

Whereas many churches have not yet made a complete canvass for this work:

Therefore, be it resolved that this conference of pastors and delegates representing the Baptist churches of North and South Aroostock united Baptist Associations deplore such rumors which make for suspicion and division in our ranks and that we express our confidence in the faith and character of our missionaries and leaders.

Resolved, that we urge upon all our churches the duty of giving our own denomination first place in their benevolences and that we believe that consecration and loyalty call for a careful canvass in every Baptist church in order to provide the necessary funds to maintain our work.

Resolved, that we pledge our support to the women in their effort to raise $2,000,000 and to the laymen in their plan to organize laymen of each church, association and state convention for the support of our work at home and abroad.

Resolved, that we re-affirm our faith in the basic truth of the Bible for which the Baptists stand and that we will be loyal to our denomination in this testing time.

VERMONT

DR. CLARK T. BROWNELL, pastor of First Church, Brattleboro, is preaching a series of sermons Sunday evenings on personal questions as follows: "A Boy's Question," "A Teacher's Question," "A Woman's Question," "A Scholar's Question," "A Young Man's Question," "A King's Question," "God's Question," "Everybody's Question." This series is attracting large audiences and proving helpful. Dr. Brownell has had baptism every Sunday evening since his church voted some months ago to go out after at least sixty to win to Christ.

THE MEN OF THE CHURCHES AT SOUTH NEWFANE and East Dover have entered into a contest for ten Sundays to see which one can have the larger class by the end of that time. Feb. 19, there were sixty-four present at Newfane and about the same number at East Dover. Rev. F. K. Hackett is pastor at South Newfane; Pastor C. O. Dunham at East Dover; Pastor Hackett is now being assisted in evangelistic meetings by Rev. Walter F. Sturtevant. Later the special services will be transferred to West Dummerston, another church under the pastoral care of Mr. Hackett.

DR. CLARA C. LEACH, a Vermont girl, a graduate of Bellows Free Academy, of Wellesley College and of Temple Medical College, and who has had post graduate work at one of the hospitals in Philadelphia and has now been for five years doing medical missionary work in Kityang, China, now home on furlough, has taken charge of the woman's continuation campaign in the state. Dr. Leach has visited most of the larger churches, but as she is to enter a medical college in New York for further study early in March she will be unable to visit any more of the fields. The work will be carried on by Miss M. Adele Orton, associate state director.

PASTORS AND CHURCHES are taking hold of the evangelistic campaign splendidly. It is hoped and expected that every church will make a definite attempt for conversions and additions to the church by baptism before May 1.

CONNECTICUT

STRATFIELD CHURCH, in one of the finest residential suburbs of Bridgeport, dedicated a new church house, Feb. 16. The address was delivered by Rev. D. B. MacQueen on: "Spiritual Foundations"; dedicatory prayer, Rev. John W. Grainger, benediction, Rev. W. M. Richardson. Rev. P. S. Goertz has been acting pastor for six months, while Pastor A. J. Harms is studying in Chicago.

REV. J. N. LACEY, pastor South Church, Hartford, baptized eight candidates, Jan. 28.

DR. RUSSEL H. CORWELL delivered his lecture "Acres of Diamonds" in First Church, Hartford, Feb. 1. The audience taxed the capacity of the house.

CONNECTICUT IS MOURNING THE LOSS OF Col. W. H. Hall, of South Willington. Mr. Hall was prominently identified with business interests and political life. He came of a family long identified with the work of the denomination. This family, through the generous gifts of its members to the New World Movement, made possible "Willington Hall" connected with Judson College, Rangoon, a memorial to the "Vintons and Johnsons," whose ancestral homes were in Willington this state.

REV. H. J. CHASE, pastor at Preston City is carrying on the work at Ledyard. Already twenty have decided to follow Christ; seven have been baptized.

REV. D. P. GAINES, Waterbury, has organized a men's class. Sunday, Feb. 26, the attendance was 75. In addition to his regular work Mr. Gaines gave much time during February to the interests of the Stewardship Campaign throughout the New Haven Association.

NEW YORK

EARLY IN 1920 Rev. Abraham B. Machlin came with his bride to visit relatives in Buffalo. Through this visit a work among the Jewish people has become a vital part of the program of Buffalo Baptists. In order to capitalize the entire Christian sympathy a plan of interdenominational cooperation was devised and approved by the Buffalo Federation of Churches. An attractive building now known as "The House of the Prince of Peace" was acquired by the Baptist Union. The work has been greatly strengthened by the coming of Miss Grace Brederhof of Toronto, who has mastered the Yiddish in order to commend Christ to the Jew. There are now forty Jewish Christians in the evangelical churches of Buffalo. The budget of the mission for the current year is $6,500.

MRS. MARTHA G. LOVETT, wife of Rev. E. H. Lovett, pastor of Leffert's Park church, Brooklyn, N. Y., died Tuesday, Feb. 28, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. A. Partridge, Rochester, N. Y., after a lingering illness. She has been an invalid many years but in personal influence was a great force for church and kingdom during her life of over seventy years. Funeral services were conducted at Rochester by Rev. C. Wunder, pastor of Second Church, with interment at Davenport, Iowa. Deceased is survived by her husband, two sons, Rev. W. P. Lovett of Detroit, Mich., and A. H. Lovett of Davenport, two daughters, Mrs. Partridge and Mrs. F. D. Barker of Lincoln, Neb., a sister, Mrs. Hattie L. Frose, San Diego, Cal., and eight grandchildren. Rev. A. Frank Houser conducted the service at Davenport, where Dr. E. H. Lovett had been pastor of Calvary church.

FEB. 16, LOUIS G. ZIBELLI was ordained at the Strong Place Church of Brooklyn after four years' of special study. Mr. Zibelli is employed jointly by the Home Mission Society and the Brooklyn Church Extension Society and in cooperation with the Strong Place Church.

NEW JERSEY

ON FEB. 27 IN FIRST CHURCH, CAMDEN, the Permanent Council of the Camden Association voted to recognize the Jobstown Church as a Baptist church and to recommend it to the fellowship of the Camden Association. The organization is the same as that of the Fannin Church, Camden, recently acted upon in the same manner by the Permanent Council, having an affiliated membership in addition to the regular membership. These affiliated people from other evangelical bodies are limited somewhat in their privileges. The pastor, R. J. Beazley, is a senior at Crozer.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE ORIENTAL COLLEGE CAMPAIGN IN Western Pennsylvania began in Pittsburgh, February 16, with a luncheon at the William Penn Hotel. Speakers scheduled were Mrs. E. C. Cronk, Mrs. D. J. Fleming and Mrs. Henry W. Peabody. Other centres in western Pennsylvania where interdenominational meetings are to be held for the campaign are Erie, Warren, New Castle, Oil City, Meadville, Altoona, Clarion, DuBois, Johnstown, Washington, Uniontown, Beaver and Blairsville. The Woman's Baptist Foreign Mission Society has included $150,000 in the New World Movement Campaign so that all gifts by Baptist women for these Colleges may be counted on the $6,000,000 pledged by the Women's Boards on the "Continuation Campaign." Should the women of the co-operating denominational Boards give $1,500,000 by January 1, 1923, an additional million is available from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial Fund. Such gifts mean physical relief and spiritual truth to hundreds of millions of women in Asia. The New World cannot be built upon an illiterate, degraded womanhood.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

FIRST CHURCH, RIDLEY PARK, Rev. Wayland Zwyer, pastor, organized a League of Christian Stewards in February. The league has grown until it includes one-third of the members. In November the church purchased a parsonage. In January the Ladies' Aid installed electric lights at a cost of $500. Since January, the B. Y. P. U. has increased its average attendance by 300 per cent, and it was far from a dead society before that time. The Sunday school averages an attendance of 75 per cent of its enrolment.

PENNSYLVANIA LAYMEN ARE COOPERATING with the Baptist Laymen's Council of the Northern Baptist Convention. At a conference held in Harrisburg March 1, the following was unanimously and heartily adopted: "That it is the sense of this group that we proceed at once to carry out the purpose and work of the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council to the time of our next state convention through the Laymen's Union of the Pennsylvania Baptist General Convention." The chairman of the council, Mr. E. E. Bailey, Oil City, was further authorized to call a series of regional conferences of laymen in the state, to whom would be presented the objectives as outlined by the National Council.

ILLINOIS

JACKSONVILLE CHURCH will begin a series of special meetings, April 2, to be conducted by Evangelist Frank M. Dunk of Normal, Ill. The Sunday school has voted to conduct a daily vacation Bible school in July. The "Gastronomic Appeal," in a recent issue of The Baptist has no appeal here for Martha has consented to stay out of the kitchen during 1922. The pastor, Rev. A. P. Howells, is being called on frequently for his illustrated address, "The Passing of the Last Frontier," an appeal for Mexican recognition in behalf of Christianity.

PURSUANT TO THE FINDINGS of the Permanent Council of the Chicago Association, at its meeting at Baptist headquarters Monday, Feb. 13, at which thirty-six churches were represented by fifty delegates, the moderator of the association, Dr. R. N. Van Doren, presiding, and the secretary of the Permanent Council, Rev. A. C. Hodgson, serving as clerk, Mr. John Rodin, a member of the LaSalle Avenue Church, was, on Friday evening, March 3, at that church, ordained to the gospel ministry. Rev. Joseph B. Rogers, pastor of the church, presided at the ordination service; Mr. Paul Johnson was clerk. The sermon was preached by Dr. Geo. W. Taft, who also offered the ordaining prayer. The charge to the candidate was delivered by Dr. R. N. Van Doren, and the other parts were taken by Revs. A. C. Drummond, M. G. Dickinson, Wilfred Noble and A. C. Hodgson.

REV. C. W. WEBB has completed three prosperous years with Wood River church. Three years ago there were forty-nine discouraged members. The first year membership increased by sixty-one; the second, by seventy-one and the third year by thirty-six with twelve awaiting baptism. A year ago last October ground was broken for a new church building to cost about $25,000 when completed. Services are now being held in the basement. By hard work the church has put $13,000 into the building. The location is central in the business part of the city. Any one interested in contributing to the building fund may send it to the pastor.

Shurtleff College

The second semester has opened with the largest enrollment in the history of the institution. There is enthusiasm on all sides—athletic, literary, social, and religious. Much interest has been taken in the basket ball tournament, which is being held in the Shurtleff College gymnasium. The first number of The Pioneer, the new college monthly has appeared, the subscription price being one dollar.

The George Washington Banquet was held at Upper Alton Church, with over 100 students present. Toasts were given by representatives of all the classes and of the faculty. The religious activities of the college are noteworthy, many of the students taking part in the prayer meetings, the Christian associations, the student volunteer movement, and in the work of the gospel teams.

While the students and members of the faculty have been active in the various phases of college life, the administration has not been either idle or indifferent. In addition to the regular college courses, President Potter is providing certain definite religious instruction. Recently Rev. Charles Durden, of Galesburg, spent a week here delivering religious addresses to the student body and to the faculty. His spiritual talks were uplifting and interesting. In a plain talk before the faculty Mr. Durden emphasized the importance of a proper attitude towards religious questions and the power of example before students. Another important matter is the continued movement for $1,000,000 for endowment and $500,000 for buildings and equipment. This movement is being conducted by Dr. Myron W. Haynes, who during this year will address the churches on Christian education. Though he will not solicit funds at present, he will appreciate invitations from the pastors to present the cause of Christian education to their churches.

OHIO

CINCINNATI REPORTS INDICATE a thriving condition. Sunday-school attendance is above the average, men's Bible classes show marked increase in attendance. The winter evangelistic campaigns have been blessed. With the coming of two new men on the field every church is now supplied with a pastor. Rev. Clarence A. Mitchell, formerly of Indiana, was given a reception by the Columbia Church Feb. 2. The Norwood Church has called Rev. Miles W. Smith, formerly of Stratford Street Church, Boston. Rev. Smith began his work Feb. 5. Walnut Hills Church, of which Rev. S. H. Bowyer has been pastor for four years, has approved plans for a $75,000 Sunday-school and social rooms, work upon the building to begin at once. Rev. John H. Spindler of King's Mills, cooperated with the inter-pastoral evangelistic movement, having Rev. W. M. Hart of Coshocton assist in two weeks special meetings. The result was forty-six decisions; twelve renewed their allegiance to the Lord. A four months' old men's Bible class numbers seventy-seven. At Ninth Street Church Dr. John F. Herget is preaching to congregations that tax the capacity of the building. Dr. Herget teaches three great Bible Classes each week. added to the church. At the last annual meeting the church budget was adopted together with "Articles of Faith," "New Hampshire Confession" and by-laws for the church. The church is planning to purchase ground adjoining the present building for future expansion, which is already needed.

THE GREATEST RELIGIOUS CAMPAIGN in the history of Grand Junction closed Feb. 26. The first of the month Evangelist James W. Kramer and singer Ralph E. Mitchell opened meetings under the auspices of the Methodist and Baptist churches. On Sunday nights all attempts to get the people into the building were given up and scores had to go away although the Baptist edifice had seats for 1250. Nearly 300 persons signed for Christ and the church.

REV. J. W. PATTERSON has been pastor of First Church of Sycamore three months, during which time the Sunday school has been re-organized and has doubled its attendance. Eight new members have been added to the church, prayer meeting has increased from eighteen to seventy-two in attendance. The De Kalb Baptist Choir presented parts of the Messiah on a recent Sunday evening to a crowded house.

BETHANY CHURCH (WEST SIDE), COLORADO SPRINGS, F. F. Butler, pastor, went "over the top" in the missions campaign culminating Feb. 26. Over $1,155 was pledged to be paid by April 30, in accordance with present plans of the N. B. C. Rev. G. G. Laughlin, superintendent of missions in Denver, assisted in the campaign. In the last year there have been over 100 additions to the church membership, the majority by baptism.

ARIZONA

FIRST CHURCH, PHOENIX, is interested in the New World Movement to the extent of $12,998.53 a year. The budget for local expenses is $8,000. Sunday, March 5, was pay-up and thank-offering day and the offering amounted to $987.68. Since Oct. 1 the church has received eighty-three new members. Revival meetings have just closed and there is expectation of at least fifty for baptism on Easter Sunday.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

REV. G. W. STONE, who retired from the ministry and went to California several years ago was recently married to Mrs. Harriet Nelson at Hollywood. They are active workers in the Hollywood church.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

REV. E. E. DULEY has been appointed special Bible worker and begins his work in San Joaquin Valley. He has been connected with the different departments of the Publication Society for some time.

REV. J. L. H. HAWKINS, OF OKLAHOMA, has accepted a call to first church of Exeter and has taken up his duties there.

DR. ROLVIX HARLAN, secretary of social service and rural community work for the Home Mission Society, accompanied by Rev. Clark H. Bancroft, director of town and county work in Northern California, visited a number of fields in the interest of more efficient work in this department. More adequate buildings for community work, as well as a better type of work in the Sunday schools, are needed. Most of these community activities, are in the New World Movement, and on the collections depends ability to carry out plans we have.

MRS. CARRIE A. ROBINSON, Assistant to director of promotion, and woman's worker in Northern California, who is on a trip to the Orient writes in part: "The morning service of the Chinese Baptist Church of Shanghai is started. This church is held in the gymnasium of the Y. W. C. A. About 100 present, and they listen eagerly as Pastor Wu breaks to them the Bread of Life. We learn that this is a self-supporting church, but too poor to erect a place of worship. We find Shanghai Baptist College has a beautiful campus, large, well equipped brick buildings, a community house at the entrance to the campus, where club work of all kinds is carried on by the students for the people of the city. A large zinc tub, banked around with flowers, is in the center of the grounds. Pastor Wu is standing in the water, and one by one eighteen young men mount the steps and descend into the baptismal waters."

OREGON

A COUNCIL COMPOSED OF REPRESENTATIVES from the various churches in the Umpqua Association convened at Marshfield Church, Feb. 9, to consider the advisability of annulling the ordination papers of Rev. Jesse T. Anderson (sometimes known as Rev. J. Thomas Anderson) former pastor of Marshfield Church. After Rev. W. Norton Ferris called the meeting to order, stating its object, the call was read, after which the council went into executive session to consider the evidence to be presented. The evidence was of documentary character and no arguments were made. After the evidence had been considered thoughtfully and prayerfully, a motion was unanimously passed annulling the ordination papers of Mr. Anderson. Besides the delegates present from the churches of the Umpqua Association, there were members present from the White Temple of Portland, and a representative from the State Convention who were asked to sit in the council. Alva Doll acted as clerk.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

FIRST CHURCH, SEATTLE, reports a total of 240 members received last year, disbursements in the general fund, $20,954; building fund $8,587; $100,000,000 Fund $12,418, closing the year with all bills paid. The church subscribed $100,000 to the H. M. D. Fund. In fifty-two years of its history it has never failed to meet an obligation and it does not propose to fail in meeting the obligation to the denomination now.

REV. FRED BERRY, DIRECTOR of evangelism for Western Washington, has left the hospital after fifteen weeks and is at his home in Seattle. His many friends in Michigan, Nebraska and Kansas where he worked long and successfully, will be glad to know that he is more comfortable and gaining in strength.

Obituary A TRIBUTE

On Sunday, Feb. 5, Mrs. Martha Dye Lindsay, widow of the late Thomas B. Lindsay, died at her home in Minneapolis. She had been in poor health for a year, but had been faithful in her attendance upon the various meetings of the church till within a very few weeks of her death. Mrs. Lindsay was born in Wisconsin, Nov. 3, 1844, was a graduate of what was then Milwaukee College at Fox Lake, taught a few years and in 1866 was married to Mr.

T. B. Lindsay. They moved to Rochester, Minn., and in 1883 came to Minneapolis. Here they immediately identified themselves with Central Baptist Church where they were always large supporters of the church and its benevolences. They were among the largest givers to the state and the various enterprises of the denomination, state and world-wide. Mrs. Lindsay was treasurer of the Woman's Society of Central Church for more than twenty years and until the church merged with Calvary.

Mrs. Lindsay was preeminently a Christian gentlewoman of the old school. One who knew her family life intimately said of her, "She was devoted to her home, it came first in her thought and she was a model parent." She was quiet and retiring, but when one came to know her she proved a genial companion with a keen sense of humor and a staunch friend.

Her sympathies and activities extended beyond her home, to the church, to the large missionary enterprises, to special needs, and to the philanthropic organizations of the city. Till within three years of her death she was a member of the Board of directors of the Y. W. C. A. and then was made honorary member. She established the first Y. W. C. A. girl's camp, was a supporter of its summer home at Lake Minnetonka, a member of the Traveler's Aid Committee and of the Dunwoody Hall Board. For as many years she was an active member of the W. C. A. and especially interested in its Woman's Boarding Home and the Jones-Harrison Home for aged women. She was also a member of the Woman's Missionary Board of the Northwestern District.

Mrs. Lindsay was strong in her convictions and true to them, faithful and conscientious in the discharge of duty, so quiet and unostentatious in her activities that very few knew the scope of them. Because of her generous giving of herself and her means many lives will have been enriched and her memory will be an incentive to more sympathetic, generous living. She rests from her labors but her works do follow her.

KATHARINE K. GALE.

A HUSBAND'S TRIBUTE

Fannie Lillian Haggard was the daughter of devoted Christian parents, Daniel and Harriet Snow. She was but a small child when the family migrated from New England to the middle west, living successively in Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois. It was at Bloomington in the latter state that Fannie, then less than twenty years of age, met him who was to be her husband. Together they were active in the same church and attended college in the same town. She did not finish her school course but upon the graduation of her fiance married and accompanied him to the theological seminary at Morgan Park, now the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. Three happy years were thus spent, including, during practically the entire period, the pastoral care of the little church at Warrenville, west of Chicago.

After completion of their work at the seminary brief pastorates were enjoyed at Red Oak and Dubuque, Iowa. Then followed six years of missionary life in Assam; fifteen years in Watertown, near Boston, in connection with the work of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; nearly a year in Russia; three years in New York; and almost a year and one-half in beautiful Wolfeboro, N. H., her last resting place.

While never urging change in the life and work of herself and husband she always eagerly, joyfully and helpfully entered with him every line of duty that presented itself. She and he were one in thought, purpose and execution—his constant adviser and moral and spiritual support. An ideal wife, she maintained a model home while giving much time to interests outside the family circle. The missionary spirit was ever her guiding principle.

She was unequalled as a mother and guide for her children, of whom there are three: Roy S., Harriet E., and Harold Witter; and upon her son-in-law, Rev. H. H. Hunt, and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Roy S. Haggard she made a lasting impression. Modest and unassuming she made friends easily and left an admiring group in every place she lived. While not appearing to be strong she always enjoyed good health. She anticipated filling out the full four score years of her parents. But it was not to be. At the age of fifty-seven she was suddenly stricken and in three months was gone. So quickly was she taken from her life of happy and varied service and fellowships that it is not yet possible to realize it. She will be sorely missed.

The members of her family desire to emulate her who was always cheerful, loving, helpful, faithful. They weep not as those without hope, but cherish her memory as a rich and beautiful treasure and expect to see her again. They bow to the will of her loving Savior.

Friends from many sections of the country have been profuse in their praise of her whom they loved, letters, telegrams and floral tributes bearing witness to the esteem in which she was held. Sympathy for her dear ones has been lavish. The people of Wolfeboro are beyond praise for their rare devotion and kindly acts; and in their her adopted town she was laid to rest March the sixth. Professor Frederick L. Anderson, D.D., of Newton Centre, who had known her since the days at Morgan Park, conducted the service and gave a most comforting message. He was assisted by local pastors: Rev. B. F. Black, Rev. T. E. Scammon, and Rev. F. L. Long, also Rev. W. L. Linaberry, representing the Congregational fellowship.

"I cannot say, and I will not say That she is dead. She is just away! With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand She has wandered into an unknown land."

FRED C. HAGGARD.

seem as though Nature herself was conspiring to hinder our meeting, but not so. It was an unusual opportunity. We had been invited into one of Satan's strongholds, and those men were held there, because of the storm, just ready for our message. Thus nothing daunted we sang another hymn and continued the meeting with the audience God had given us.

The men and boys in front sat on the floor almost under our very feet, those behind them stood up, while those in the back stood on a bench and hung on to the rafters to enable them to see the speakers. What a picture it was! Overhead was a hideous image. Around us, packed to the very ceiling, was the audience in various stages of dress and undress. Beyond was the "holy of holies" with its idol and burning incense, the odor of which came to us now and then. We had been invited even into that inner sanctuary, but on account of the lack of air we preferred to stay in the outer room. Out and around all this raged the storm—a veritable battle of the elements. For one hour and a half the men listened earnestly to the truth. The three fine Gospel talks were interspersed with hymns so that they got the message in word and song, and I believe some of them received an impression that they had not had before. One man hanging to the rafters in the back stopped the Bible woman in the middle of her talk and said, "What you say is all right for you, but you are intelligent. Of course God is good to you. How can He be good to us who are so ignorant?" What a pleasure it was to read James 1:5 and point out the Way more fully to this man! At last we realized it was getting late, but the storm had not slackened. There was nothing else to do but brave the elements, so leaving two of the Bible women to stay all night with a Christian family, the rest of us waded down the flooded village lane to our car. Of course we were soaked and it was not without dangers that we reached home, for in the heavy downpour our driver could not see the road and almost upset us, but still we wouldn't have missed the opportunity to witness to the true God in that Hindu temple. The Bible women were able to hold another meeting the next morning before they started home, so we feel the trip was most worth while, and what seemed at first a hindrance was changed into an opportunity and a blessing.

Our Book Shelf

The Book of Missionary Heroes, by Basil Mathews. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

Here are the stories of twenty-three missionary heroes, beginning with the Apostle Paul and including Raymond Lull, Francis of Assisi, Livingstone, Mackay, John Williams Patterson and Henry Martyn. The stories are historically accurate and often thrilling. A splendid book to put into the hands of young people at the hero-worshipping age. Peace has its heroes as well as war and youth should be taught so.

The Unseen Side of Child Life, by Elizabeth Harrison. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.25.

Another book by this well-known expert on child life. This one shows how much can be done to give children joy in the growth of their own will power and how far children may follow the matter-of-course obedience to necessary laws on which depend the foundation of health, family harmony, good citizenship, religion, etc. Teachers have long been interested in this kind of literature; parents should know that there are here most fruitful suggestions for them if they care to use them.

Psychology and the Christian Life, by T. W. Pym. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

Interest in the application of the new psychology to the Christian life is continuous, especially among educators. This book is a worthy contribution and the more to be praised because it is not speculative overmuch but deals largely with the practical side of the subject. Prof. Pym is head of Cambridge House, University of Cambridge, England, and wrote this book at the special request of the Christian Students Movement of England. Among the most interesting chapters are those on "Faith and Suggestion," and "The Psychology of Sin."

Practical Law Made Plain, by Judson S. West, Justice of the Supreme Court of Kansas. Hartford, Conn.: Edwin Valentine Mitchell. $1.

A readable book of 114 pages, telling in a pleasant and often humorous way what the average person should know of law. There are included such matters as how the courts work, pleading, evidence, criminal law, contracts, real estate, inheritance and will, etc. The author is one of our Kansas Baptists who has had forty years' experience at the bar and on the bench.

Nile and Jordan, by G. A. Frank Knight. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $12.

The sub-title makes clear the contents of this large volume: "An archeological history of the inter-relations between Egypt and Palestine, from the earliest times to the fall of Jerusalem in A. D. 70. With five maps, appendices and three indexes." Many things in this volume are to be passed upon by the scholar, such, for instance, as the date of the Exodus. But the whole book is decidedly interesting to the general reader who knows his Bible or who is interested to see what suggestions may come from a careful and orderly presentation of the evidence which is increasingly being gathered by archeologists. There is presented a vivid picture of the varied and striking ways in which Palestine and Egypt, contiguous territories, influence each other in politics, military matters, religious conceptions, morals, commerce, trade, law, art, literature, and the like, throughout 7,000 years. One is not confined to the conclusions of the writer but has spread before him much of the evidence and may form his own decisions. Chapter by chapter there is a great mass of detailed information, going back even to what little is known of paleolithic man in Egypt and Canaan. One cannot but be stirred by the picture of these ancient and notable civilizations. The book contains fresh interpretations of many passages of Scripture. A chapter on "The Egyptian Origin of the Book of Job" is suggestive.

"It Is to Laugh"

Mrs. Worth had just learned that her colored workwoman, Aunt Dinah, had at the age of seventy married for the fourth time. "Why, Aunt Dinah," she exclaimed, "you surely haven't married again!" "Yassum, honey, I has," was Aunt Dinah's smiling reply. "Jes' as of'en as de Lawd takes 'em, so will I."—Ladies' Home Journal.

An instance of momentary success in the collection has been noted when the minister published the following soliloquy in the congregational calendar: "I am 25 cents. I'm too small to buy a quart of oil; I'm too small to buy one-half pound of candy; I'm too small to buy a ticket to a good movie show; I'm even too small to buy a box of undetectable rouge; but most people think I'm 'some money' when I come to church."—The Christian Register.

The clergyman's eloquence may have been at fault, still he felt annoyed to find that an old gentleman fell asleep during the sermon on two consecutive Sundays. So, after service on the second week, he told the boy who accompanied the sleeper that he wished to speak to him in the vestry.

"My boy," said the minister, when they were closeted together, "who is that elderly gentleman you attend church with?"

"Grandpa," was the reply.

"Well," said the clergyman, "if you will only keep him awake during my sermon, I'll give you a nickel each week."

The boy fell in with the arrangement, and for the next two weeks the old gentleman listened attentively to the sermon. The third week, however, found him soundly asleep.

The vexed clergyman sent for the boy and said: "I am very angry with you. Didn't I promise you a nickel a week to keep him awake?"

"Yes," replied the boy, "but grandpa now gives me a dime not to disturb him."—The Christian Intelligence and Mission Field.

THE FINE ART OF TEACHING

Owing to the intrinsic fascination inherent in music itself, teachers of that subject have sometimes failed to devote sufficient consideration to the fundamental pedagogical principles, said Karl W. Gehrkins, in an address before the National Conference of Music Supervisors last spring.

The teacher's problem, he said, is similar to that of the composer. The latter repeats his thematic material often enough to make the auditor perfectly familiar with it and to produce symmetry and unity through repetition. But at the same time he must keep his auditors interested in the composition and so he varies his theme and relieves it and holds the interest by injecting bits of contrasting material from time to time.

So in teaching, the instructor must go over the same points again and again, must see to it that his pupils are thoroughly grounded in the fundamentals of music, but he must do all this not only without losing their interest, but also with a constant increase of enthusiasm on their part.

As Mr. Gehrkins pointed out this has not always been done in the past. Many can recall the teacher who began by "pointing to a big hollow dot," saying, "when you see this you strike this key, and you count four while holding it." The theory teacher has discovered that harmony may be a living thing of absorbing interest if the pupil early begins to work with actual tones harmonically and rhythmically arranged. Many other schemes are suggested to make the study of music vital—some of them irrational, some even idiotic. But though many will fail of their purpose, the study of the art of teaching music interestingly has begun, which, after all, is something accomplished.—The Musical Leader.

ORGAN DEDICATION

Completion of a three-manual Kimball organ in the First Baptist Church of Everett, Wash., was marked by a recital by Judson W. Mather of Seattle. The instrument is a gift of Mrs. Mathea Severson, a public spirited woman of Everett and one of the parishioners of the church. This was brought about largely through the untiring energy and cooperation of Arthur E. James, a prominent Everett teacher and organist of the church. All departments of the instrument, including the entire great, and a well-placed echo, are in swell boxes, thus giving flexibility and expressiveness to the entire ensemble. Over 1,500 persons attended the recital and 300 were unable to get into the auditorium. The following organ numbers were played by Mr. Mather: "Sonata in the Style of Handel," Wolstenholme; "The Seraph's Strain," Hollins; "Christmas in Sicily," Yon; "Echoes of Spring," Friml; "Oriental Sketch in C minor," Bird; "Burlasca e Melodia," Baldwin; "Fantasie in E minor," Lemmens; "From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water," Cadman; "Overture to Mignon," Thomas.—The Diapason.

MUSIC REVIEW

From J. Fischer & Bro., New York, N. Y.
Secret Languages Foster
Swinging Foster
When Lovers Part Foster
Evening Fox
Bedouin Song Dunn

The songs of Fay Foster are always of interest and value to the seeker of effective program numbers. The three titles above are no exception to this statement. "Secret Languages" is a brilliant "chat-ter" song, clever in concept and potent in appeal. Its sly humor will endear it to the fortunate hearers. "Swinging" is an attractive waltz-song, one providing fine opportunities for vocal effect—an unusually valuable song for teaching purposes, or for lightening up a program. The last of the three songs by Miss Foster is a brilliant outburst which would prove a fine climax to an exceptional group. It is a "big" song, where the effects are gained by surprisingly simple means. The Fox song is a sympathetic setting of lines from Milton's "Paradise Lost," full of poesy and admirable in its musical material and structure. The "Bedouin Song" is a lively setting of a fine poem by Frederick H. Martens, with a likeable melody and pulsing accompaniment.

A Shepherd of Souls

IT is by working for the soul that we best learn what the soul is worth. If ever in your ministry the souls of those committed to your care grow dull before you, and you doubt whether they have any such value that you should give your life for them, go out and work for them; and as you work their value shall grow clear to you. Go and try to save a soul and you will see how well it is worth saving, how capable it is of the most complete salvation. Not by pondering upon it, not by talking of it, but by serving it you learn its preciousness. So the father learns the value of his child, and the teacher of his scholar, and the patriot of his native land. And so the Christian, living and dying for his brethren's souls, learns the value of those souls for which Christ lived and died. And if you ask me whether this whose theory I have been stating is indeed true in fact, whether in daily work for souls year after year a man does see in these souls glimpses of such a value as not merely justifies the little work which he does, but even makes credible the work of Christ, I answer, surely, yes. All other interest and satisfaction of the ministry completes itself in this, that year by year the minister sees more deeply how well worthy of infinitely more than he can do for it is the human soul for which he works. May you find it true in your experience. May the souls of men be always more precious to you as you come always nearer to Christ, and see them more perfectly as he does. I can ask no better blessing on your ministry than that.

Fresh from the Field

The Baptist Temple, Rochester, N. Y., has authorized the construction of a $1,000,000 building at North and Franklin Streets, to include the present church and several floors of office buildings and also the appropriation of $75,000 for the erection of a new church edifice in the eastern or southeastern part of the city. High tribute is paid to the efforts of Rev. Clinton Wunder under whose leadership the church has embarked on its present ambitious program.

In accordance with the findings of a regularly called council which met on March 9 with the First Church, Roodhouse, Ill., Mr. J. S. Brinkman, pastor of the church, was on the same day ordained to the gospel ministry. The ordination sermon was by Rev. W. E. Pool, the charge to the candidate by Rev. J. O. Favorite and the charge to the church by Rev. D. O. Hopkins. Rev. W. E. Pool was moderator and Rev. E. L. Wendell clerk.

Dr. David H. Bauslin, long acknowledged a leader in the Lutheran Church of America and since 1896 dean of the faculty of Hamma Divinity School, Springfield, Ohio, died suddenly on March 3. From 1901 to 1912 he was editor of The Lutheran World and from time to time has contributed scholarly articles to other religious publications.

The Livingston Avenue Church, New Brunswick, N. J., Rev. C. Everard Deems, pastor, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary March 12-19. In connection with this jubilee there was issued an anniversary booklet, most attractive in form, containing a history of the church, and other facts regarding it, besides many pictures of the present and former building and of pastors and others who have been prominent in church life. The present membership is 643.

Rev. H. Clarke Colebrook, now pastor of the First Church, Gloversville, N. Y., was at the meeting of the board of managers held at Syracuse on March 6 elected superintendent of missions for New York state, as the successor to Dr. W. A. Granger. Mr. Colebrook hopes to enter upon the duties of his office early in May.

Dr. Farrier of the N. Y. state board of promotion reports that twenty churches of that state that had pledged their quotas in full or had exceeded their quotas, had on Jan. 15 paid in 100 per cent of the amount which would be due on their pledges on April 30. The list of churches follows: Angelica, Cherry Creek, Flat Brook, Second Hamilton, Keuka Park, Killawog, Lyndon-Rawson, Minerva, Montour Falls, Ovid Center, Penn Yan, Perry, Preston Hollow, Indian Red House, Redwood, Reed Corners, Royalton, Second Milo, Spragueville, First Trenton. A number of the churches have paid 100 per cent of what they pledged, but the above have pledged the full amount of their quotas and have already met the 100 per cent payment. For the month closing March 15, the state board of promotion has received in contributions 105 per cent of the amount received for the corresponding month of last year.

Rev. and Mrs. Walter Bushell of Moulmein, Burma, are spending a few weeks at the home of their daughter at 108 High Street, Orange, N. J. Mr. Bushell recently underwent a serious operation at the Post Graduate Hospital, New York City, from which he is slowly recovering. He and his wife were appointed missionaries

Saw Sa's Farewell To the Women of America

Beloved Friends:

After a year's stay here in America, finding and making lovely Christian friends, getting a full measure of care, love, counsel and help, it is indeed a difficult task to tear oneself away. The time is long enough to make one homesick, too. Yes, it is—especially so when every home letter from friends and relatives tells of how they wish I was back home, how they look forward to the home coming day to come down to the docks to welcome me, how they thank God for what I have been doing and how they pray for my well-being and speedy return.

When I think of them over there and when I reflect how I have lived among you here like one of your own daughters—a veritable member of the family—I feel I belong both here and there. I have just as sad a heart in leaving America as when I left the shores of Burma. One thing is sure, therefore, that the ladies of America will always be in my grateful pleasant memories.

There are many things, too numerous to be mentioned, that enrich my life as a Christian and as a doctor. These also I value as treasures in my thankful heart. As a small example, I will mention just one, namely, the achievement of a strong nucleus of a public library for the young people of Rangoon. My dear kind friend, Mrs. Adams, has done most for this. She is a woman of energy and she has faith in Burma. She made me go right on. We asked little helps just from a few close friends. They responded very generously—readily. The Cleveland friends gave most of the books. With such a backing up of kind friends, the little project was sure to come to a happy success. I am very happy and proud to let you know that we have now 800 books which will bring such a great pleasure and joy to our young folks. Besides, there are over 300 religious books which will go to make a religious library for the pastors of our land where religious reference and help books are scarce. We still need good periodicals of which Mrs. Peabody said the Atlantic Monthly and the Everland will be sent by the New England District. If other districts will be so good to follow this kind example, we will be fairly well supplied in current thoughts and literature, while at the same time, it will serve as a connecting link between us in Burma and her staunch friend and bigger sister, America. Mrs. T. E. Adams of Cleveland has the list of books and any matter may be referred to her.

This is just to say good-bye for the time being, for the world has grown small since it is drawn tight and close by strong cords of love.

With kindest regards,

Yours very cordially in Christ,

(Signed) SAW SA.

(The magazines which the doctor covets are Atlantic Monthly, already subscribed, The Geographic, World's Work, Popular Science Monthly, Popular Mechanics, The American, Current Opinion, St. Nicholas, Scribner's and some woman's magazine. This means that if each district will send one of these, the new public library of Rangoon, Burma, will have a good start, for one year at least, on current literature for all classes of readers.)

forty-three years ago. They are naturally anxious to get back to their work in Burma.

Rev. Joseph Novotny, president of the Baptist Union of Czechoslovakia, is planning to visit America in the late spring and early summer. Mr. Novotny is the son of Rev. Henry Novotny, who organized the first Baptist church ever established in the territory now known as Czechoslovakia. For many years he received support from the Foreign Mission Society. Upon the death of the father, Rev. Joseph Novotny became pastor of the First Church at Prague. In 1919 he joined the Czechoslovak troops in Siberia and with them made the famous march across Russia in order to render service in the cause of the Allies. Mr. Novotny is the brother of Madame Kolator, who was a guest of the Woman's Society in connection with its jubilee meeting last year. His brother, Mr. John Novotny, is a student at Newton Theological Institution.

According to Dr. John H. Finley, organized religion is not winning in New York City. Even the Roman Church has lost nearly 200,000 adherents in the last ten years. All the synagogues together have not seating capacity for one-tenth of the Jews, and there are a million people of Protestant antecedents who are unattached to the churches.

Professor John H. Strong, son of the late Augustus H. Strong, and some time professor in Rochester Theological Seminary but lately of Eutaw Place Church in Baltimore, has accepted a professorship in the Biblical Seminary in New York, of which Dr. Wilbert W. White is president.

Two students at Peddie Institute, Hightstown, N. J., last November went to Etra, N. J., a few miles from Hightstown, and securing the use of an abandoned school house organized a Bible school with only six persons. The work, however, has grown until now there is an average attendance of nearly forty. These two boys, Dwight Bahr and Lewis Davis, are meeting with success in the conduct of this Bible school which is the only one in Etra. They are both making good at Peddie and have demonstrated their loyalty to the Lord by thus improving the time of their Sundays.

Ten Russians, converted to the Baptist faith while enduring the hardships of German war prisoners, chanted psalms to 500 detained and disconsolate immigrant many of them Russians, on Ellis Island during religious services recently. The strangely mixed choir was led by Job Bokmelder of the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, N. J., where the Russians are studying to become Baptist preachers. "These men have passed through hell on earth," said Bokmelder. "They entered the Czar's army at the outbreak of the World War. When the Russian army went down before the Teutons they were captured and sent to German prison camps. Three years of hardships there trained their minds to piety. Baptist missionaries converted them to their creed. As soon as they were released they started for America. They will all become Baptist ministers and go back to Russia as missionaries."

Rev. William Ashmore, and his wife have been sojourning very quietly in Southern California and in Colorado, endeavoring to regain their physical strength which has been somewhat reduced by

An Alarming Diagnosis

From various symptoms we have been led to believe that there must be something wrong with us. A well-known subscriber has diagnosed our case and made the cold chills run over us by announcing that we have "the publicity frenzy." It must be something like hydrophobia. We wonder if there is any cure. By the way, have you done your full duty by THE BAPTIST? Is your subscription paid in advance? Have you sent in your share of new subscriptions? Every person who thus does his duty will help cure our attack of the "frenzy."

Killam's Kollum

"News"

"The congregation stood and sang number 144." This is a part of a news item sent in by an Illinois pastor. The hymn was doubtless most fitting and the fact contains several matters of general interest. You will note first that there was a "congregation." This will interest those of us whose congregations are at the vanishing point. In the second place the congregation "stood." It did not sit or sleep. In the third place the congregation "sang," and finally the congregation sang number "144." Almost any one with a little practice can develop the "news sense."

A Hasty Preacher

A very good man in a neighboring state sent to THE BAPTIST a well written and worth-while article. The editors dropped him a note saying it would be printed. Several weeks passed by and, worn out by watchful waiting for his article, he wrote us a curt note, "You may stop my paper." Most of our readers have either rushed into or toward print. Be patient and in due season you may see your brain child. Do not be too hasty and stop your paper or this high privilege may never be yours. How perfectly human most men are.

This Is Not a Lemon

"Move forward my subscription to THE BAPTIST twelve months. I am one of the fellows who did not believe that it was wise to put money into you. I am changing my mind. You are doing a whole lot better than I expected. Success to you."—Rev. J. B. Lemon, Greenfield, Mass.

What Do We Hear?

We are frequently admonished to keep our ears to the ground. "You'll hear something if you do," said a friend recently. We have tried it. We, like some men of old, are a little uncertain as to the meaning of the rumblings under the ground. Sometimes we think it is thunder and sometimes the voice of God. We are coming to the conviction that after all the posture is hardly becoming a Christian. We prefer as a habit of life to lift up our eyes unto the hills. We prefer to see those hills filled with the chariots and horsemen of God. It may be a good thing occasionally to put one's ear to the ground so that we may be informed on our religious politics. The things that we see, however, make a deeper impression than the things we hear. THE BAPTIST should be read by every Baptist family.

son of their forty-three years of missionary service in South China. Just before returning to America late in 1920, Dr. Ashmore completed his translation of the Bible into the Swatow dialect, and Mrs. Ashmore published a most interesting history of the South China Mission. The denomination will be glad to know that both Dr. and Mrs. Ashmore have improved in health. They hope to be able to return to South China within a few months.

The fourth annual convention of the Christian Fundamentals Association will be held in Los Angeles, Cal., June 25-July 2. In announcing it, Dr. W. B. Riley says: "The friends and members of this movement throughout the country realize that our work is only well begun. Each of the three conventions now recorded in history has had a definite objective. Philadelphia brought together the conservative forces of evangelical denominations and welded them into one body. Chicago revealed the strength of their numbers and brought them to a realization of their power. Denver drew the line between truth and error and showed the conflict to be an irrepressible one. Los Angeles will more clearly point the ways of conquest in this—the greatest controversy of the century. Fundamentalists leaders in the various denominations have been brought to see clearly the existence of infidelity in high places; to decide definitely that to save their denominations from destruction, it will have to be dislodged, and every national convention of 1922 will ring with debate about the Authority of the Book, the Deity of Christ, the Effectiveness of the Cross, and the purging of infidelity from professorships, pulpits and the printed page."

Our Denominational Division from a Layman's Viewpoint

By JAMES C. COLGATE

FOR a layman to take part in a theological discussion is a dangerous experiment—an experiment which the writer has no desire to try. In common with other Baptist laymen he has fairly decided views upon the theological dissension which is interfering with our denominational efforts at a critical period. These views are expressed by Mercutio in "Romeo and Juliet" when he said: "A plague upon both your houses." This thing has gone too far. Both sides are right and both wrong. Meanwhile the work suffers.

In the Watchman-Examiner of March 9, Dr. Rosselle suggests that the doctrinal divisions which are at present weakening the effectiveness of our denomination grow out of two different views as to the inspiration of the Bible—the one, that it was written substantially at the dictation of God; the other, that it was written by various men at various times under the influence of the Spirit of God but partaking of the individuality and limitations of the various authors. Dr. Rosselle further suggests the wisdom of confining our discussion to this point in the endeavor to find out whether or not those holding these different views can come together in some kind of agreement which will permit their cooperation in denominational affairs. There seems to be a great deal of common sense in these suggestions. Grant the first theory of inspiration and you have a certain fixed and rigid system of theological thought, varied only by discussion over certain doctrines based on texts seemingly inconsistent with one another; grant the second theory and you open at once a vista of endless investigation and changing views, calling into play the use of education, scientific research, and the reasoning faculty with which man has been endowed.

It is not the writer's intention to discuss the merits of either theory. Much has been and can be said in support of either view. The practical question in the writer's mind is whether the fact that A holds one view makes it impossible for him to unite in Christian fellowship and work with B, who holds the other. If A is right, is B a heretic, or vice versa? The writer has heard men whose lives are Christ-like, whose personal influence is full of inspiration to better living, who seem to carry with them something of the spirit which radiated from the Master, referred to as enemies of God because on theological questions they do not agree with the views of others.

To the lay mind this seems wrong. For A to call B a heretic or B to ridicule A because they hold different views in regard to the inspiration of the Scriptures and have different theories on theological doctrines, while both love and worship a common Lord cannot be to the credit of either or pleasing to their Master.

If our Lord should suddenly appear at one of our conventions as he did to his disciples of old how ashamed we would be of those differences for which we have so obstinately and perhaps acrimoniously contended! The words of the Quaker poet seem particularly appropriate:

"Push every lin, close every book,

The strife of tongues forbear.

Why forward reach or backward look

For love that clasps like air."

Or the words of the great Apostle: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels and have not love I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." Or the words of our Lord himself: "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Giving up no convictions, holding fast to the right of individual opinion, can we not in love for our common Lord work together in his name and for his cause and incidentally pay our denominational debts!

A Statement to the Denomination

Inasmuch as it has come to the attention of the board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the executive committee of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society that statements have been made from time to time, either orally or in published form to the effect that missionaries in the service of our societies are teaching and preaching other than the evangelical gospel common to our Baptist faith, the board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the executive committee of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society herewith announce that they know of no such condition existing in the case of any missionary; that furthermore they are prepared to investigate fully any case in which definite charges are presented.

The greatest care is exercised in the examination of all candidates who present themselves for appointment as foreign missionaries. The case of each candidate is first examined by the candidate secretary. A written statement as to his or her doctrinal beliefs is required from each candidate, which is carefully reviewed. The candidates themselves are then personally examined by the committees of candidates, which are standing committees of our societies. This complete procedure takes place before any candidates are finally presented to the boards for appointment.

In view of the extreme care thus exercised by our boards of managers in the appointment of their missionaries, and in view of the constant touch maintained between the headquarters of the societies in New York and the reference committees on the various fields as to the work, life and teaching of the missionaries, we are of the opinion that the constituency at home should likewise exercise the greatest care in making or crediting criticism against the men and women representing the constituency on the foreign field, unless such criticisms are based on well authenticated facts.

Even should such criticisms be so based, it is of the utmost importance that they should first be presented to headquarters in order to enable the boards to make a complete investigation. General criticisms without specific information to justify them can only be attended by harmful results to the entire missionary enterprise. See Matthew 18:15-17.

Finally we say positively that none of our missionary trust funds have ever been loaned by our societies or by their officers to pay the debt of the Interchurch World Movement or for any other purpose. All such trust funds are sacredly kept and the interest on them invariably goes to the object prescribed by the donor or donors.

The Baptist

Will Baptists Battle at Indianapolis?

NORTHERN Baptists are edifying the world by a godly scrap. In response to the demand that we tell the world what we really stand for, we are demonstrating our ability as partisan fighters. And the snickering and ungodly press does not fail to make the most of the situation. We are being well advertised.

Just what is it all about? Nobody quite knows. Some outsiders insist that premillennialism is what is muddying the waters, but this is promptly denied by insiders. There are charges of laxity of belief among ministers. But almost everybody seems to assent in a general way to the Des Moines Confession and to the Philadelphia statement and probably would to any other carefully considered utterance. There are charges of heretical teaching in the schools and colleges, but individuals are seldom named.

Certain demands which are presented are intelligible and will probably have to be faced at Indianapolis. There are three of them: 1. Our denominational boards, societies, missionaries, teachers, etc., must represent and not misrepresent the denomination. This involves some theological definition. 2. Real business methods must be introduced into the conduct of the affairs of our societies. The Baptist body, which is democratic, must be democratically controlled. The present excessive centralization ought to be modified.

The one clear thing in the whole situation, however, is that an organized group within the denomination is making very definite plans to capture the next convention and hints at a rather drastic reorganization when this has been accomplished. Against this movement there is no real opposition. Let us suppose that he attempt to dominate succeeds. Where are we as a Christian body? Simply in turmoil for a few years and then back to something like our present position of evangelical liberty. Meanwhile there is nervous tension. Everybody is excited. Never has there been so much unrest in secretarial circles. And the situation is made almost tragic by the feverish attempt, in the unfavorable atmosphere which has been created, to raise sufficient money to enable us to end the year without debt.

Fundamentalists are conducting their campaign on the supposition that they are the only genuine Baptists. The Evangelicals do not believe this, but are afraid that the people may be deceived by honeyed words. In our judgment neither group fully or adequately represents the great body of Baptist churches, which are yet to be heard from. We Baptists are certainly a conservative people, but we are not extremists and have always been able in the past to love each other despite minor doctrinal differences. And as a whole we have in years gone by resented the suggestion that we shall do every "i" in the exact fashion in which some self-appointed leadership demands that we should do them.

In this whole matter, as we see it, the emphasis thus far is all wrong. The ultimate basis of union among Baptists is not found in a set of doctrines but in an experience of the grace of God in Jesus Christ. Confessions of faith make headway so long as they are expressed in terms so broad that they do not convey accurate meanings. But no confession means anything at all if men are not one in Christ Jesus.

Much insistence is laid by some of the brethren on right thinking—that is, on doctrine. And we do not minimize this. But the Scriptures assert that the devil holds some correct theological views and yet is a devil. And it is possible that there are brethren "sound" as a rock and yet wholly lacking the spirit of Christ. Right thinking does not necessarily mean right living. Multitudes can say, "Lord, Lord," with the most perfect accent, who yet do not do the will of the Lord. But right living is mighty apt to lead to right thinking. We had far rather trust the man who is living in daily right relations with his Lord than the man who has a perfect system of theology but whose daily life is uncharitable and unlovely and unchristian.

Various voices are urging prayer and brotherly kindness, both excellent things, as the remedy for our present ills. But what's the good? At Indianapolis we are to have a packed convention. We do not say this in any unkindly or unfavorable sense. We mean simply that one group among us is trying to have present a very large, instructed delegation. There is no formal opposition. This sort of ecclesiastical politics is new. No one knows where it may lead. The only possibility of balanced judgment is to get the facts of the case down to every church. But that cannot be done without organization which does not exist. Let the churches be warned, however. There is an attempt this year to make the interpretation of a small group, which in the last two years has gathered about itself a large following, the official interpretation of the convention. It is a crisis even greater than that which confronts the New World Movement. If Baptists are really lovers of liberty and still abjure ecclesiastical dictation, there will be something doing at Indianapolis.

The time has come when this whole matter should be thrashed out. What are Baptists anyway? What do they stand for? What kind of leadership do they want? Are they worshippers of the old alone or do they look to the coming day? Are they to live according to the spirit or the letter? We are sick and tired of evasion and a patched-up peace which gets us nowhere. Let's face the situation as men and women who are not afraid of facts, who are loyal to the moving spirit of a living Christ, and who would rather have a good fight than be untrue to our best thought and leading.

Editorial Comment

WHY A PASTORS' NUMBER?

Pastor and church are almost as intimately related as husband and wife; therefore any attempt to present matters of interest to the pastor and concerning him must perforce be of concern to the entire membership of the church. That is why this number of THE BAPTIST which has been prepared with the pastor in mind is of the utmost concern to all the people of our churches and should be read with care by all.

The selection of a pastor is of the utmost importance. Churches do not always realize when they are doing this that they are determining the relation of the church to our denominational enterprises, are deciding whether it shall have a local or a world vision, whether its young men and women shall be sent to college and then out into Christian service, whether it shall have a real or only a perfunctory message for its community, whether in short it shall live in the twentieth century or in the remote past. It is a pity that churches so often neglect all these considerations and take a man merely because he is recommended or because he happens to be very young or for some other such reason. The pastor is to be a leader; a church should consider whether he has the gifts of mind and heart necessary for leadership in that particular place or whether, like many of our Sunday schools, he is to serve up to a given age and then see the members of his flock slip beyond him.

The life of a pastor with his people is a matter deserving constant and prayerful consideration. What should be his habits of study, the character of his pulpit work, the extent of his pastoral visitation, his relation to the educational program of the church? How far should he assert his will as leader and how far should he accommodate himself to the customs of the church? What about his own devotional life?

Both pastors and churches are interested in the ending of the relationship existing between them. When should a man resign? How will he know that the time has arrived? How can the change be brought about with least injury to the Lord's work? What should be the prime considerations before the church at such a time?

On many or all of the subjects there will probably never be complete agreement. That is why the material published in this number, some of it coming from ministers and some from laymen, is of such importance. On many subjects here discussed men will differ. But the purpose of the editors will have been accomplished if all our readers can be made to think and if here and there a church or a pastor finds some light on a perplexing problem.

A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE IS DANGEROUS

Dr. Dieffenbach, editor of the Christian Register (Unitarian), has been picturing in his paper and from at least one Boston pulpit the fearful state of the Baptist denomination, and the menace to it and to all the rest of men of premillennialism. His prophecies almost make one wonder if religion has any future in a time when churches are menaced by such delusions as he pictures.

He seems to think that all Fundamentalists in the Baptist body are premillennialists, that all premillennialists are of the Dr. Haldeman type of belief whom he quotes, that they have lost faith in a God of love and that the second coming of Christ will be altogether a gory affair, accompanied by great slaughter in which the saints will rejoice.

We are somewhat jealous for the journalistic profession and are sorry to see a man hurl reckless charges against both individuals and schools when verification or denial in advance could easily have been secured. The editor made a sensation but his "exposures" disappeared before the cold light of truth. A more intimate knowledge of Baptist churches and their methods and ways of thinking would be helpful. We are again convinced that it is better not to know so many things than to know so many which are not true.

THE NEW CREED OF THE DISCIPLES

As a result of the discussions within the membership of the Disciples, the board of managers of the missionary organization of that body a few weeks ago adopted a statement which is virtually a creed by which its missionaries in China should be tested. This was in the interests of peace. But the result to date seems to be a sword. For the extreme conservatives are questioning the sincerity of the board and doubt if it really intends to dismiss missionaries in China who practice open membership. And the forward-looking group resents this intrusion on the liberty which has always belonged in the church and harks back to its old cry, "No creed but Christ." Nobody talks as if he were really satisfied. It would look as if it is as true as ever that definitions divide and only love and service unites. Baptists, who have several difficulties on their own hands just now, cannot fail to be interested in this controversy in a sister denomination.

WORLD UNREST

Recent disturbances in South Africa have been another reminder that a good part of the world is built upon or adjacent to a sleeping volcano. Outwardly this was a labor disturbance, but inwardly it was political and social. The idea which lies back of the phrase, "self-determination of nations," has been working like leaven with the result that white man has been arrayed against white man in defense of their respective theories of government. Meanwhile the 6,000,000 Kaffirs stand over against the 1,500,000 whites of South Africa and wait their chance. Even now it is said that the principal restraint upon them is their faith in General Smuts and his word.

What a world it is, to be sure! Russia, the Near East, Egypt, Persia, India, China and the Philippines—almost everywhere men are restless. A new world is being born. America should not be too complacent in the belief that this new world is to be altogether like the old. Missionary organizations may well know that in China and elsewhere coming events are going to show whether there is in them any real vitality. Christianity has won thus far by its ability to make constant adaptations in presenting its universally-valid truths. Some of the new adaptations may even shock us out of our settled belief that we have wrought out the final system of church organization.

LET SALARIES GO UP AND NOT DOWN

The financial depression is naturally resulting in a suggestion here that the salary of the pastor should be reduced. The war is over, some people say, and salaries should get back to a proper level. But the salaries of the preachers have never been on a decent level. There has never been a time when they have not been shamefully small. That men have carried on the work with the handicap imposed on them by low salaries has been a signal manifestation of the grace of God in their hearts. If salaries have been increased a little, let us thank God that he gives us pastors who are worth much more than we pay them. And instead of talking of lower salaries, let us consider if the meagre stipends of the preachers cannot be raised a little more. There is no sense or godliness in cutting down the pay of men who in the past have been greatly underpaid.

The great need in any church, which gets to talking in this way, is first a fresh experience of the love and grace of God, and secondly the inauguration of a real financial system such as would be approved in a going business. There would then be no trouble about the minister's salary.

WANTED: A COURSE IN ETHICS

From a state and town which shall be nameless comes this letter: "I received your letter concerning my subscription being in arrears and I regret it but just at present I can't pay up. I am taking another Baptist paper now also, and I don't feel able to keep both just now, so please stop THE BAPTIST until I can pay up my present subscription."

Presumably he paid in advance for his new subscription, but by doing this finds himself unable to pay previously contracted obligations. What he has received he will not pay for just yet; what is yet to come he will pay for. New obligations are given preference to debts. What about the morals of this transaction?

Among its other activities, should the Northern Baptist Convention establish a course in business ethics?

PULPIT SENSATIONALISM

Some discussion has been heard of late in New York City and other centers regarding sensationalism in the pulpit. Particular attention has been paid in Eastern papers to the withdrawal from membership in Calvary Church, New York City, of Dr. MacArthur in protest against certain of Dr. Straton's methods. The "sensationalists," as they are called, urge that a live church in a metropolis necessarily becomes sensational in the presence of great evils. It is said that Paul and even Jesus were sensational, which is perfectly true, although it must also be said that they were so because of the pungent character of the truth they uttered rather than because of the subjects they chose. Jesus was singularly silent on the social abominations of his day.

Two things, it would seem, are involved. One is the matter of good taste. Great subjects should not be made ridiculous by mountebank performances. The other is that the methods used should be such as to promote the object for which the pulpit exists—namely, to preach Jesus Christ and to promote his kingdom on earth. When they lead sensation-seeking crowds away from this end, they have failed.

Cardinal O'Connell of Boston has toned down somewhat the princely pretensions with which he returned from Rome when first he received the cardinal's cap. Nevertheless the sense of his dignity continues to sit heavily upon him and he does not fail to say, when the stage is properly set, what seems to him likely to be effective for the pulling down of religious strongholds in the building of which he has had no part. He is quoted as having said in Rome recently: "I do not understand why little American Methodists collect money in the United States trying to purchase the souls of little Italians who have had their religion for 2,000 years." The process of enlightenment is not difficult. The nearer men and women live to the headquarters of the Roman Church the less they have to do with it. Spiritual destitution in Italy is intense. What the Roman Church cannot or will not do, the Methodist and other churches are trying to do. By the way, why does the Roman Church maintain missions in parts of our own South which are solidly Protestant?

HE DOES NOT UNDERSTAND

PLAYING POLITICS WITH WORLD PEACE

Weeks ago THE BAPTIST urged that our people should bring constant pressure upon United States senators for the ratification of the treaties growing out of the Washington Conference. The wisdom of that advice has been abundantly justified by recent events.

Many motives have worked against ratification. There were senators who were out for revenge because the United States did not enter the League of Nations. Others were looking for political capital in coming campaigns. Yet others seem to be opposed to everything they do not originate and the words of a few are hard to understand except on the assumption that they wish the United States to wave the big stick in the Pacific, no matter what the results. Our American imperialists sometimes seem to seek a war with Japan with the idea that through such conflict the United States would become a world empire. The thought of peace is not welcome to these gentlemen.

America's worst foes are those of her own household. It is this sort that is playing politics with world peace. Let all good citizens beware! Let all good Christians cry aloud!

The Preaching of the Bible

The Bible is coming into its own. Wherever a preacher is distinctly biblical, people are found attending more largely than in other churches.

By G. H. O'DONNELL

THERE is an unmistakable call for more and better preaching of the Bible. Such preaching is plainly in demand. Where it is sincerely and adequately undertaken, a new interest and power are experienced by preacher and congregation alike. Even where, as is so often the case, it is done inadequately, with prejudice and with a very narrow interpretation, the people give it a far wider hearing, and are apparently more influenced by it than they are by any other kind of preaching. Judged by the two standards of attendance of the people and of the influence which it has upon them, certainly just standards, biblical preaching is by all means the most popular and influential preaching of today. The Bible is again coming into its own. Wherever there is a preacher who, with even ordinary skill and industry, makes his preaching distinctly biblical, people are found attending more largely than they are in any other of the churches of the community.

How shall such preaching be done? What is its method? What are the results of such preaching, and are they worth while?

Historical Interpretation of the Bible

The modern preacher must use as his foundation the historical interpretation of the Bible. He can use no other and be honest with himself. What is the historical interpretation of the Bible? It is simply and only to seek to arrive at the actual meaning of the various writings in the Bible—what those writings meant to the men who wrote them, and what they meant to the people to whom they were written. Historical interpretation of the Bible attempts to reconstruct, as nearly as may be possible, the actual historical situation from which the various writings of the Bible arose. What was the purpose in the mind of the writer? What circumstances drew forth the writing from him? How did those to whom he wrote understand his message? These are the questions of the historical interpretation of the Bible. And surely these are, beyond the possibility of contradiction, the aims of all genuine and earnest study of the Bible.

This means that the modern preacher will recognize the human element in the Bible. (We take it for granted that the divine element will be recognized by him.) The various types of literature in the Bible must be understood as such: poetry, history, prophecy, discourse, proverbs. The purpose of a poem is confessedly different from that of history. And to ignore these various types of literature will be to fail to interpret the Bible truly and as its authors intended. Then, too, the modern preacher must discriminate between sober history, prophetic vision, figurative and symbolic speech.

Casting aside all prejudice from his mind, the preacher of the Bible is, by every means at his disposal, to arrive at the original meaning of the portion of the Bible which he desires to expound to his congregation. But he will make a fatal mistake if he protrudes this historical method and its processes into his public preaching. The historical method is a necessary and unavoidable preliminary, without which he can never arrive at the real purpose and teaching of the Bible, but it must not be confounded with that purpose and teaching. The preacher's audience will be waiting for the great spiritual message of the Bible, not for the technicalities of the historical method. The study is the place for these. The very briefest historical setting which is adequate is permissible, perhaps necessary, in the pulpit, but the pulpit is a platform for the proclamation of spiritual truth, not a lecture room for the teaching of the methods of historical study. And the more skilfully the preacher can keep these technicalities, though means to an end, out of sight and of hearing, the more powerful will be his preaching of the Bible.

Modern Thought Forms

The second step in the preaching of the Bible is to state the purposes of the Bible, its mighty spiritual teachings and profound ethical emphasis, in such thought forms as will be intelligible to, and will inspire and move, the men and women of today. The permanent values of life remain unchanged through the centuries, and the message of the Bible has to do with those unchanging values; but the preacher must remember that the human understanding and expression of those values varies with each generation. The message of the Bible must be clothed in the thought forms of the present generation, if that great Book is to inspire and move the men of today. It will be no easy task, thus to restate these spiritual truths. It will take painstaking and exhaustive study, but it is the only way in which to make one's preaching truly biblical. Let no man think that he is really preaching the Bible unless he succeeds in doing this. The spiritual truths of the Bible are timeless, and we may be sure that men will hear and heed those truths, if only they be proclaimed to them in simplicity and in power.

I fully realize that such preaching is far more easily outlined on paper, than it is actually put into practice. It may be truly said of such biblical sermons, as Christ once said of a demon, "This kind cometh not out, save by prayer." Any man who succeeds in preaching the Bible must be willing to pay the price of long and hard study, of hours of meditation, of earnest petitions on bended knee.

Results of Bible Preaching

What are the results of such preaching of the Bible, and do they justify the immense amount of work which is necessary as preparation? We are putting every thing in our day to the practical test. We ask, "Do the results justify the movement?" Now, judged thus, biblical preaching leaves all other methods far in the rear. It has many and worth-while results, results which are attainable by no other method of preaching.

1. The Bible is thus enthroned in the hearts and minds of men, but it is enthroned in such a way that it may live alongside modern thought and modern methods of scientific study. The people still believe the Bible. There is no appeal so powerful as the biblical appeal. The masses are today, as they always have been and always will be, persuaded that the Bible is the Word of God, and they accept its message as final. Preacher as we have outlined, the Bible comes into its rightful place of leadership. And it is a leadership which is sane and fundamental. Congregations which have listened for a few years to such preaching of the Bible will have no trouble with either ultra-conservative or ultra-radical views of biblical scholarship. Premillennialism, postmillennialism, or any other "ism," will be unable to mislead them. Just and true views of the Bible will have been implanted within them, and the false views can no longer find any footing for appeal to them. Surely this is a much needed outcome of our preaching, in a day when many students of the Bible are flaunting false vagaries before men.

2. Such preaching gives to those who hear norms or standards of the spiritual life which they can then apply to any of the problems or crises of today. If a man preach continually on social themes, or if he indicate continually along what lines he thinks social and economic problems are to be solved, his hearers will soon forget his proposed solutions, and when those are forgotten, the whole sermon is gone. But if a man preach the great ethical and spiritual truths of the Bible, his hearers have such truths to apply to those problems themselves. They can then look at all social and economic questions from the spiritual viewpoint, and so come to their own solutions. Thus men who listen to truly biblical preaching receive spiritual standards which they can carry with them through life, and which are applicable to all problems under all circumstances. In this way only can an intelligent membership in our churches be developed.

3. Such preaching will bring the churches back to the place of esteem and influence which they ought to hold in every community. There is a widespread impression—right or wrong—that the churches have forfeited to some extent the confidence of the public because they have been putting many other things before the preaching and teaching of the Bible. There are large numbers of people who still believe that the business of the church is primarily spiritual, and that many modern churches have degenerated into mere social centers, and their pulpits into platforms from which to preach socialism or other watery economic theories, or have become the centers of frantic efforts to win the people by entertaining them. Once the Bible is really enthroned in the pulpits of our land, rising public esteem and reverence for, and devotion to, our churches will surely follow. And it is very much to be doubted whether the churches can be brought back by any other means to the power and influence which they ought to have.

4. It will take hard study, long hours of preparation, to enable any man, even the most gifted, so to preach the Bible. But the mastery of the Bible which will thus be developed by the preacher who attempts it will make him a marked man wherever he appears before an audience. He will speak with authority, the authority of the Bible. Furthermore, his historical interpretation of the Bible will appeal to all thinking people, especially to the large number of students in our schools and colleges. The truly biblical preacher will find himself the center of an ever-enlarging influence, the greatness of which will give him a sense of really contributing much to the life of his day, and which will often drive him to his knees in humble and beseeching prayer.

I do not believe that there is any other method of preaching, which, for power, influence, attractiveness, and worth while results, can be compared with the preaching of the Bible.

The Minister's Habits of Study

How to develop a mental habit which will enable one to lay down Balfour's "Defence of Philosophic Doubt," water the beans, give the baby his bottle, rub liniment on his wife's face, and pick up his Balfour again.

By U. M. MCGUIRE

ORDER is heaven's first law"; and by so much is the average minister's study lacking in resemblance to heaven.

It was a prominent and successful minister who said to me, "I cannot study except when I am under the necessity of preparing a sermon or an address for a particular occasion." His habit of study, therefore, is simply a series of spasmodic efforts to keep out of the reach of the foolkiller. It conduces to occasional and vocational efficiency. It is better than nothing. Even by that method the effort of preparation for public address requires a measure of organized research and of reflection. It is educational, incidentally. But its chief aim, and hence its main product, is eloquence rather than culture, a speech rather than a man.

Another friend places emphasis on regular time schedule for study.

His program calls for four hours daily, from eight o'clock a. m. to noon, running through all the days of the week except Sunday and Monday. He is busy in his church meetings on Sunday; Monday is his day of rest; the afternoons of the other days are given to field work. As a method for creating the habit of study, this schedule is to be commended for persons who tend to neglect study, who require an automatic time rhythm as a condition for doing their best work, or whose mental inertia is too heavy for them to swing effectively without the help of a habit.

Human Service Before Schedules

But a fixed schedule of time for study, notwithstanding its obvious merits, is subject to such frequent and unavoidable interruptions that it cannot insure all of the time and opportunity for study that the average minister requires. With all care to avoid unnecessary interruptions, there will come times when the minister must choose between his schedule and a funeral, a marriage, a conference or attention to those who are sick or in some other distress. At such a time it is often perfectly clear that the schedule must give way to human service. In addition to a regular schedule of daily periods, one must acquire the ability to break the schedule and yet to preserve the habit of a student, that is, he must be able to snatch and utilize available fractions of time outside of his regular schedule. His success as a student may depend sometimes almost wholly upon his ability to make the most of such opportunities.

A pastor said the other day, "In order to study, I must have silence and be undisturbed." The advantage of such favorable conditions requires no argument. But suppose there are unavoidable noises and occasional or frequent interruptions; what then? Must one permit such things to reduce him to intellectual impotency? Suppose the baby is crying, the boys are whooping in the back lot, the minister's wife is suffering from toothache and the beans are scorching. One needs a mental habit sufficiently stalwart to lay down Balfour's "Defence of Philosophic Doubt," water the beans, give the bottle to the baby, rub liniment on his wife's face, and then begin Balfour where he left off, while the boys continue to yell. And such a habit can be acquired. Too much coddling of the mind makes it finical and feeble; keep it brave and hardy.

The mental regimen should aim to create not merely a comfortable routine, but habitual mental vigor. For this purpose, "thinking does the deed." Beyond all questions of program is that of power. Thinking like praying, must become a habit of the mind itself under all circumstances; and the more unfavorable circumstances are, the more resolutely one must hold himself to systematic reading and vigorous thinking, not merely to prepare sermons but to create in himself a capable and well-furnished mind. Fundamentally, this achievement is a test of will power.

He who acquires control over his mind, will find a way to organize both the time and the subjects for study according to discovered conditions and needs.

The Minister's Recreation

The minister who fails to keep fit fails in his loyalty to his Lord. An anemic, nervous physique is a disgrace to the ministry, a dishonor to God and a living libel on the Gospel.

By E. LEROY DAKIN

RECREATION is a necessity for every worker. The nature of your work determines what constitutes real recreation. The minister's recreation must be such as will enable him to be more efficient at his particular task. A minister is just a piece of ordinary—sometimes very ordinary—human stuff. To be at his best, to have his powers at the nth degree of efficiency, he must keep himself fit, and the self that is to be kept fit is his whole human nature—the whole of him as a man—a physical, thinking, social, moral, spiritual being.

Loyalty Demands Recreation

The minister who fails to keep fit, fails in his loyalty to his Lord. God expects us to give him our best, and our all at its best. He has a right to it. A minister's recreation, therefore, ought, and if adequate it must, make provision for the requickening of his whole self. It must bring his whole nature back to normalcy. I must, however, insist upon a progressive standard of normalcy. His daily recreation ought to guarantee a nobler, worthier, more competent servant of God.

Failure to shape our time schedule, making due allowance for the maintenance of our "body at its best," is deliberate disloyalty to our Lord. An anemic, nervous physique is a standing disgrace to the ministry, a dishonor to God, and a living libel upon the gospel.

To keep the balance—there's the rub! To maintain a strong body and at the same time keep an alert mind, well fed, stimulated, and fertilized by first hand grip with the best thinking of the day, is not easy. But mental staleness is the most prevalent cause of pastoral changes and preacher's "sore throat," and the necessity of finding other employment.

The minister who fails to make a place in his schedule of recreation from week to week, and especially during his summer vacation, for several rounds with the punching bag of hard thinking, is in danger of allowing his engine to slip into second before he strikes the grade, and that's bad for him and worse for his church. The ministry of the minister is an intellectual task, and when he fails to make provision for getting rid of stale thought cobwebs, putting in some new mental furniture, hanging some new pictures in the gallery of his mind, he may be taking "time out"—six weeks in summer—but he is not getting recreation.

Makes Minister Human

An adequate recreational program for the minister must also make provision for his reestablishment in society as an ordinary human mortal. A Monday morning volley ball game is wholesome medicine for the minister who is inclined to put himself on a social pedestal and expect folk to yield to his will just because it is his will. The "sanctified" Methodist preacher and the overbearing Baptist or Presbyterian brother, alike need the rough and tumble of the play of equality for the maintenance of a wholesome, frank, sincere straight-forward approach in dealing with the affairs of the spiritual life.

The minister who deliberately thrusts himself for a little each week, without apology, bare-handed, into the work of the chamber of commerce, the Kiwanias, Rotary, or Lions' Club, there to stand as a man among men, a citizen among citizens, and make his contribution to the efficiency of such civic bodies, for the welfare of the community, will find the true value of his moral and spiritual appreciations and get a good line on his own efficiency, or lack of it, as an exponent and advocate of moral and spiritual values.

Man as Well as Minister

The minister who remembers that he is first of all a man, a citizen, and a Christian before he is a minister and who aggressively relates himself to the common responsibilities of the people of his community, can and will find the recreation that will enable him to come back to his specific and major function as a man of God, providing he has sense enough to remember always that he is a human being, living in a physical house that must be kept in repair as a means of the accomplishment of the ministry entrusted to him by God.

My mother once gave me a sharp prod concerning this very matter which I pass on, for what it is worth. She said: "My boy, God has given you some common sense, but it doesn't seem to have given you enough to enable you to use what little you have."

No amount of exercise, fresh air, fishing, swimming, mountain climbing, travel, reading, or "roughing it" will give the minister any real recreation unless, recognizing his true function as a man of God, he uses what bit of common sense he may have for the re-relating of himself to his particular task and the investment of himself at his whole human best in that task.

Practical Problems of the Ministry

Straight answers from frank-talking ministers and laymen on matters which interest ministers

What are the most unfailling signs that a minister's usefulness is at an end in any particular field? Should a minister resign before he has another field?

A Duty to His Family

IN answer to the question, "What are the most unfailling signs that a minister's usefulness is at an end in any particular field?" I would state, indication of lack of interest in the pastor and his work, shown by falling off in church attendance, particularly in the prayer-meeting services, also a lack of cooperation on the part of church members with the pastor's plans for work of the church.

In answer to the second question, "Should a minister resign before he has another field?" I believe every man owes a duty to his family second only to that which he owes his Lord, therefore in my opinion a pastor whose family is entirely dependent upon his salary for their living should hesitate about offering his resignation until another field is open to him. Under other conditions, a man's self-respect should cause him to resign his pastorate as soon as it is made clear to him that any considerable portion of his members desire him so to do.

Unfailling Signs

THE most unfailling signs that a minister's usefulness is at an end may be stated as follows: When he fails to get results. When there are few if any additions to the church membership. When there is a steadily failing attendance at the church services. When there is an increasing lack of church financial support.

Should a minister resign before he has another field? If a minister is in good standing with the church and in the community it is better for him to seek another field before resigning. It is more difficult for a man without a position to get a hearing than it is for a man to change from one position to another.

Should a minister apply directly to a church for the pastorate or should he go via influential friends?

Making a Direct Appeal

A MINISTER who is truly called of the Lord should be very frank with the church or community he wishes to serve. The scripture advises us, "All things are asked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do."

It must be mighty embarrassing to a man who knows God to try any subterfuge to get a new field, by indirect influences. My experience of many years in serving on pulpit committees leads me to believe that many of the letters written by outside parties are written simply in a spirit of good fellowship as they desire to get the applicant a position, and not with any serious or prayerful consideration of the needs of the field or the qualifications of the person recommended. Yes, I am in favor of a pastor making a direct appeal to a church or community that he had in a prayerful way considered as being desirable for him and also to the mutual advantage of the church to be served.

Registration Bureau Favored

I WOULD not personally be in favor of the minister applying to the church for a pastorate, nor do I much favor coming the route of influential friends except as they might know the need of the church in question.

I have often thought that a registration bureau could be arranged, using the state convention office for same, through which churches might indicate their immediate need or their future need, and, on the other hand, a pastor or minister could file his desires—all information to be confidential and handled with consideration and care.

More Pastorates Than Preachers

MY experience has been to see churches looking for pastors rather than pastors for churches. I think this is no more true in the rural and small town church than in the city church. There are at all times churches looking for pastors and I am sure THE BAPTIST can find a large field of usefulness in acting as a medium through which these churches can find men suitable for the positions. Capable, consecrated ministers are at a premium and I believe there are more pastorates than there are preachers to supply them.

Mrs. C. E. JOHNSTON.

Langdon, N. D.

Recommendation Preferable

IN my opinion a minister should not apply directly to the church for a pastorate, but should be recommended by a mutual friend. In my judgment, a man who writes direct to the church does not stand so well with the pulpit committee as one who is recommended to the church as a man especially adapted to the particular field covered by that church, and who does not spend his time in introducing himself to the church and telling them first hand of his accomplishments.

I realize the sacredness of his calling to the ministry, but I feel positive that he should cultivate such a spirit of interest in the kingdom of God and cultivate and develop his natural gifts in leadership, knowledge of the Word, and pulpit power so that he can well fill any call which comes to him through the recommendation of his personal friends, who know his past history and ability.

Does "candidating" violate a proper self-respect?

Contrary to Ethics

A CHURCH should call a pastor on his record, after investigation, and not on a single Sunday's performance. It is generally necessary and well for a minister to visit a church which has expressed a desire to extend a call, if he has any thought of accepting it, but to "candidate" in the sense of entering into any competition with his brethren for a vacant pulpit is a violation of his self-respect and contrary to ministerial ethics.

ROBERT A. ASHWORTH.

Yonkers, N. Y.

Candidating Betokens Competition

CANDIDATING in the usual interpretation of the term does violate a proper self-respect. The candidate is in the position of a young woman who "throws herself" at her lover. The fact that he candidates shows that he is willing to accept if proposed to, with the other side dictating the terms. In candidating he is at the mercy of the whole church membership which may have very divided interests concerning a pastor. He is probably competing with one or more brother ministers.

In my judgment, a minister should not visit a church with a view to a call until the church has looked up his record, secured testimonials concerning him, has eliminated all other prospects, and is almost fully assured that it wants him for its pastor. Neither should he visit a church until he has learned fairly well all the facts concerning it and is practically sure that he will accept the call if extended.

The Whole Idea of Candidating Wrong

By W. S. ABERNETHY

THE clerk of the church at Smithville wrote to the pastor of the church at Three Forks after this fashion: "Dear Brother: We have been pastorless since the resignation of Rev. So and So last fall. We would like to have you fill our pulpit on Sunday, May 10. When you arrive take a street car marked 'Uptown' and go to the Town and Country Club where you will be entertained during your stay. Sincerely yours."

It was an influential church and doubtless its pulpit committee imagined that to dangle attractive bait of this sort would be all that was necessary. The reply from the minister at Three Forks was to the effect that he was very busy and could not possibly come. He thanked the brethren at Smithville for the invitation but felt obliged to state that the chief reason why he could not come was that their church was pastorless. He did not feel that he could bring himself to the point of setting out his sermonic wares to be sampled by a congregation in quest of a preacher.

What an archaic method of selecting a minister is this which many churches still employ! What satisfactory idea can a congregation obtain of a man's qualifications for leadership? What can they learn of his ability to get along with folks, of his genius or lack of genius for bringing things to pass, of his vision of kingdom enterprises, from hearing him preach a few trial sermons? He may know the orator's tricks, he may stampe the congregation into a unanimous call at the close of the evening's service, and then what? Usually a leisurely repentance. Sermons are important, of course, but many a man can preach and do nothing else. Brilliant people are not the ones who do the world the most good. At most any one can put together a few sermons that have a pleasing effect, but the work of the minister calls for more than that.

Let a church carefully examine the record of a man. If he has held other pastorates let it satisfy itself that he possesses common sense along with other qualifications that a minister is supposed to need. Let it be sure that he is a church builder and not a church wrecker. Let it hear him in his own pulpit and not subject him to the humiliation of being "sampled" by a congregation that may or may not be entirely sympathetic.

And if the minister does really want to move to another field and is the recipient of an invitation to supply in a pastorless pulpit, what shall he do? Is the average church, after all, a good deal like the love-sick youth who is rebuffed by his girl? Every discouragement he receives serves but to rekindle the fires of devotion. "Busy here. Don't preach in pastorless pulpits anyway? If you want to hear me, come where I am." That kind of a method may possibly produce better results than a couple of trial sermons. Anyway, the whole idea of candidating is to my mind wrong, to be discouraged by churches and ministers alike. Fortunately most churches are abandoning the practice and many ministers are refusing to subject themselves to such humiliation.

Washington, D. C.

Should Ministers "Candidate"?

THE writer has never candidated, but sees no objection to it if it is properly understood and safe-guarded.

A man may as properly seek a definite field of work as he may seek a certain woman for his wife; the former is no more a delicate matter than the latter. He should not stultify himself by competing with many suitors, nor she disgrace herself by flirting with several aspirants for her hand at the same time. Yet many a man or woman has remained single, or secured the wrong mate, because of false hesitation to speak on the right occasion. So many ministers have been without churches and many churches without pastors, or there have been misfits, because they lacked a frank and direct method of approach.

Certain principles should be followed always: (1) No minister should seek a call unless he intends to accept it. Flirting with churches from vanity or for leverage elsewhere, is an abomination. (2) No minister should deliberately or invidiously compete with other candidates. (3) No church should invite men to appear before it to "look them over"; that should be done quietly and elsewhere.

The ideal, of course, is for the office to seek the man; but that happens little in this world. It is flattering and pleasant, but not essential.

CLARENCE M. GALLUP.

Providence, R. I.

Record of Work Should Be Kept

CANDIDATING need not necessarily be humiliating to a sensitive, self-respecting minister, but situations have come to my notice which I think would be very embarrassing. A premium is often put upon those least lovable qualities in a minister—his own tendency to want proper appraisal—for example, the instinct to have his own qualities and capacities recognized, sometimes called the instinct or ambition leading to self-assertion. Thus the man who can be his own press agent often has the advantage, at least temporarily, in our system or lack of system in candidating.

We are practically shut up now, apart from the self-evidencing career of a comparatively small number of outstanding ministers, to the necessity of a man's friends opening the way for him on their own initiative, or at his suggestion. There is no violation of proper self-respect in a man announcing to his friends that a change, or a different sort of opportunity would be acceptable to him.

"Paying Up"

BY WALT MASON

THE first day of the month arrives, as scheduled by the almanac, and then, to save the merchants' lives, I toddle up the street and back. Escorted by the village band, I climb up Main street's asphalt hills, and with my checkbook in my hand, I pay up all my monthly Bills. It's good to see the grocer's face when I arrive, with checks on tap; it's good to see the glad smiles chase themselves around his haggard map. And from the butcher's furrowed brow the shades of trouble flee away, when I would pay him for the cow I bought in fragments, day by day. The weary baker seems quite gay, and heaves no more his heartsick sighs, when I invade his mart and say, "I'll pay you for those concrete pies." Oh, many books have told us how to make the world a brighter place, to speed the optimistic plough, to light up every mourning face. And doubtless all such schemes are fine, and Pollyannas cut much grass; but I contend this scheme of mine will all the other schemes surpass. I might invade the merchants' store and say a lot of sunny things, and he would rate me as a bore, and throw a score of bricks and things. His heart is sick with grievous woes, his trade is slack, he's needing cash; and sunshine words and spiels like these appear to him as tawdry trash. But when I come and say, "By heck! Produce your bill—I'll pay it now," he promptly falls upon my neck, and plants a kiss upon my brow.

For the great majority of our ministers who do faithful work, a record should be kept accessible to state convention secretaries and church committees. However, even in our unsystematic way it is very difficult for true worth and capacity for service and leadership to remain long concealed and long denied an opportunity of real service, and those who, apparently lacking in self-respect, push themselves beyond their deserts, for the most part, and in due time, "have their reward." New York City. ROLVIX HARLAN.

Should the Northern Baptist Convention provide a ministerial bureau, clearinghouse or similar device to provide our churches with ministers and our ministers with churches?

"A Fine Thing"

I SURELY believe a ministerial Bureau, or clearing house, as mentioned in your letter, would be a fine thing. Spokane, Wash. D. H. ANDERSON.

A Ministerial Bureau

I THINK the Northern Baptist Convention could profitably have a ministerial bureau, provided it was handled by men of wide acquaintance and a broad outlook. Really to do good such a bureau must tell the truth and not hand along a "lemon" to a weak church. I think it could be made a very useful department. Boston. CHAS. W. BAILEY.

Does Not Favor Creation of Bureau

INASMUCH as our ministers devote their entire lives to our denominational work every possible thing which the denomination can do for them individually or collectively, should be done. However, I would not favor the creation of a bureau as a separate piece of machinery for this piece of work. I think the Northern Baptist Convention could request the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board to undertake this work. The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board is thoroughly organized with several of the most competent men of the denomination operating it, and this board could lend its good offices and make such a service a department of its work. No other activity of the denomination is more closely in touch with our ministers than this board. Sioux City, Iowa. D. C. SHULL.

How to Divorce the Unmate

SHOULD the Northern Baptist Convention provide a ministerial organization (1) to provide pastorless churches with pastors, and (2) to provide churches with ministers with churches.

These are important questions, but I suggest, if indeed they do not comprehend a question of infinitely greater importance, namely, how to separate church and pastor when, for any reason, they do not fit.

I have not thought these questions through, but at the risk of offending against the democracy of the local church I venture the following tentative arguments in support of such organization:

(a) A local church, because of lack of acquaintance with available pastors, is always confronted with a most serious question when a vacancy in its pastorate occurs.

(b) Ministers are forbidden by the accepted rules of ethics from personal effort to procure a pastorate.

(c) The termination of a pastorate otherwise than by voluntary resignation always presents a question of great delicacy and extreme delicacy, and a group of men such as your question has in mind could readily differentiate between a local disturbance based upon reason and based upon the activities of the chronic growler, and in each case, and with minimum friction, suggest the remedy most needed.

The form of your inquiry does not permit an elaboration of these propositions but I submit them as worthy of serious consideration, although, as already indicated, I do not profess to have reached a final conclusion on the subject. Denver, Colo. CHAS. R. BROOKS.

The Minister as a Pastor

The value of pastoral visitation is determined by the spirit and purposes of the calls made. Making calls merely to report is a wicked waste of time.

By A. H. OWENS

THE average minister has to engage in many kinds of work besides the pulpit ministrations which are necessary and important and have a direct bearing in and contribute to the success of his work in caring for the spiritual welfare of the flock over which the "Holy Spirit has made him overseer." All of them may be deemed important in their own respective places and relationships, but pastoral work is supremely important. Yet in many cases it is lamentably neglected and might be designated "the neglected ministry." Not purposely neglected but left undone by some because they do not like to do it. It is irksome to them—a weariness to the flesh. By the others, because of physical weakness to which they have fallen heir—the want of health or strength delar from the execution of this duty. Visiting uses up strength of mind and body and unfits them for the pulpit ministry, and so the other ministry must go unattended to. True and sincere sympathy is herein extended to any brother so afflicted. In other cases it is neglected on account of so many other things crowded into the daily and weekly program. This pertains chiefly to city pastorates. The continuous round of meetings, educational, social and religious—that must not only be attended but in most cases prepared for. The string of appointments pertaining to civic and denominational affairs, together with the interview impositions by so many canvassing tramps, and the necessary study and preparation of mind and heart for the pulpit, leave little time for pastoral work, and so, in many cases, it is not done. The supremely important has been supplanted.

From the pastor's standpoint pastoral work is necessary to furnish him with the opportunity to acquaint himself with his people, to familiarize himself with their names and faces. Recognizable terms will contribute much to the success of any pastorate. The Master said, "I know my sheep"—"call them by name." Likewise should the under-pastor seek the same privilege. This can be best done in the homes where they live.

Getting Acquainted

Pastoral work gives the members of the church and congregation an opportunity—which many of them seek and which they should not be denied—of knowing the pastor. A Christian man of rare qualities of mind and spirit was obliged to affirm, "I really don't know our pastor." On being questioned as to his statement he said, "Well, I recognize him in the pulpit and when I see him on the street—but I do not know him. He has never been in my home. I have never been able to get next to him—to visit with him." This was a sad confession considering the length of that minister's pastorate. The members of the church should have an opportunity of knowing the one who ministers to them from the pulpit—to know him as a man, a Christian, a friend, a brother. Some have family and some have business problems, life plans, perhaps, upon which they desire the light of loving counsel. Pastoral work can supply this.

Pastoral work furnishes the pastor with a knowledge of the conditions under which his people have to live, the burdens they bear, the hopes and aspirations they entertain and the trend of their daily lives, thus creating a bond of sympathy between the pew and the pulpit. This knowledge acquired by the personal touch in the Name should stir his emotions, quicken his impulses and better fit him to minister from the pulpit to their conscious needs. The felt needs of the individual home and life obtained during the week should shape and color his sermon on Sunday and make it more effective. The confidences of the home should never be dragged into the publicity of the pulpit but the heart-felt consciousness of his people's requirements should make his sermon "fit" and helpful.

A Spiritual Tonic

Pastoral work is desired by the majority of churches. They expect the pastor to visit their homes and stand ready to accord to him the warmest kind of welcome and an open ear to his counsel and admonition. The pastor requires the exhilarating effects on his own heart of visiting. The greetings received are a mental and spiritual tonic. The Christian fellowship of the adults and the gleeful smiles of the children as they gather around and climb upon his knee are a balm for jaded nerves. Pastoral work should yield unspeakable joy and pleasure and be most refreshing. The writer must here say that he can get more genuine pleasure out of an afternoon visitation than he can get out of the same time spent in fishing. There is real fun in seeing people and talking with them about eternal things, but little fun in waiting the pleasure of a silly fish to bite.

No one method of pastoral work can be universally accepted and operative. For the conservation of time and strength some plan should be followed with a view to the greatest good. No kind feeling should be entertained for what might be called "district calling" on certain days. It is too mechanical and formal to meet the needs of the needy. I have obtained the best results from this simple method. On Sunday night after the day's work has closed, while the nerves and brain are regaining normal composure I sit down to think calmly and make a list of (1) All who showed signs of conviction at any of the services of the day; (2) familiar faces missed from the services; (3) known cases of sickness and sorrow among the members of the congregation. These, with what could be called prospective attendants, will engage the energies of most pastors, particularly in the city, for the rest of the week.

The true value of an afternoon visitation must not be calculated by the number of door-bells rung or the "how-do-you-dos" exchanged. Its value to the Lord and the people must be determined by the spirit and purpose of the calls made. The ceaseless running from door to door making calls to report to the papers is a wicked waste of time and should not be indulged in by an ambassador of Christ. In visiting the conscious question should be on the mind, "What is the object of this call? To visit and cheer a sick one, to comfort in bereavement's hour, to revive waning faith, to turn wayward feet back to Christ, warn against paths of sin and indifference, to find out why some one is absent from church, or is it to try to lead one in the home to Christ?" A well-defined purpose in each individual case greatly helps in shaping the conversation and seems to open the way to the goal. A fixed worthy object in every call lifts "calling" from the plane of mechanical drudgery or pastime to a hallowed ministry.

Victory or Defeat in Our Campaign?

By A. S. CARMAN

OURS are the resources of the Infinite if we will rise to the apostle's climax, "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." This is a spiritual campaign, its triumph contingent on a recognition of God's ownership. This is the master-principle, assuring us untold possessions, and controlling us in their disposition. God is testing our ability to use our money aright. "When a Christian begins to make money, God wins a fortune, or loses a man."

The Extent of Baptist Wealth

No census of Baptist wealth, as such, is practicable; but fair estimates of the national wealth are attainable, and our denomination doubtless has its full per capita share of the wealth of the northern states. The national wealth in 1920 is estimated at $280,000,000,000. The Northern Baptist share of this may be estimated at $4,000,000,000. This sum at 5 per cent represents an income of $200,000,000 a year. The annual tithe of this would more than give us the sum we need this spring in our campaign!

The Extent of Baptist Income

The statistics of annual income in the United States are stupendous. The wealth is not with the few. Those in "gainful occupations" number 50,000,000 and at the low average of $1,000 would earn $50,000,000,000 annually. Other sources of income bring the total to $70,000,000,000 or $80,000,000,000 with a Northern Baptist income of $1,000,000,000 a year. This assumes less than $750 per capita income for Baptists, where the Presbyterians estimate their per capita income at $1,000.

Making Our Money Work for God

Our stupendous resources are worthless unless thrown into action. At present one third of the denomination bears all its burdens. Not one in twenty pays his tithe. The time is so short, the need so great, that each one of us must continue to do his sacrificial utmost, regardless of the averages of others. But we must not forget that even greater than our $15,000,000 goal this spring is the spiritual goal in sight, namely:

1. The enlistment of the silent majority.
2. The adoption of a program of giving, adequate to our task as a whole, and proportionate to the prosperity of each.

The Country Field and Its Minister

BY H. Z. DAVIS

WHAT I mean by the country field is a field where the church may be located in the open country or in a country village from which it ministers to the open country as well as to the village. We recognize that today the people of the country have a larger touch with the world than in former days; nevertheless even today the tendency in the country districts is towards narrowness of vision and worldliness, the people are still of the earth "earthly." They still enjoy bubble blowing and are attracted by the glittering tin toy. They are not to be blamed for this for their bringing up and surroundings tend to make them such. Of course there are exceptions in every community. In their social gatherings you will not be likely to find them discussing literature, art, science or theology, but the common things in the little circle of their daily life. The young people in these social gatherings indulge in the games and amusements which their fathers and mothers indulged in when they were young, thus their social gatherings and meetings, on the whole, are spent and enjoyed. When they come to church they do not object to but rather enjoy the order of service that was in vogue when they were children. It is acceptable because it requires no effort on their part to follow it. They might take a nap and wake up and fall right into line. Also they may like it from custom or for some other reason. Life is monotonous wherever we are, but nowhere more so than in the country.

Into this situation or something similar with a thousand and one little variations in different fields the new minister comes. What does this field need? First, it needs a spiritual impetus. The chances are it may be asleep—it may be asleep in Jesus—nevertheless it is asleep. It needs a minister who will rekindle the spiritual fire. It needs a minister with a large, intelligent and practical vision of life in its relation to God, man and material things—the gospel's vision of these relations applied to this particular field's needs. The gospel is large enough to be practically applied to any people. Therefore, let me repeat, its need is for an intelligent, practical gospel minister, himself gripped by the conviction that the gospel rightly ministered to the people will yield gratifying results to the praise and glory of God.

Piety Not Enough

It needs a resourceful minister—a man who can "turn the battle to the gates." Piety is not enough; learning is not enough. There must be wisdom to enter into things as they are and manipulate them so as to make these very peculiarities of the community to conspire in reaching the desired goal which must be worthy of the gospel of Christ.

It needs a minister who must be awake to the fact that the church and community need his best, and "some more," and who will throw himself without measure into his task, looking unto Jesus, the Lord of the harvest and the author and finisher of his faith. Once I preached a sermon at a public gathering of churches and after the sermon a sister said to me, "What are you, who can preach thus, doing in that small church?" I have had churches whose membership was small enough to give me leisure, but I never found one that did not need the best sermons I could preach nor fields that could not tax my spiritual, intellectual and physical strength beyond their capacity. The country field needs a minister who has a practical religious vision of its needs and possibilities that will tax all his powers to their full capacity. The work is there, may God give the minister eyes to see it.

In a country field the minister must have a stimulant or sooner or later he will find himself and the church asleep on the job. It is so easy to settle down to a deep sleep in a country field where there is so much monotony and religious drowsiness on every hand. Often there is much discouragement to religious enthusiasm and intelligence—so little to spur one on to preach better and work harder. Therefore, the minister must draw stimulus from wherever he can find it. There is, after all, always inspiration and strengthening to be at his best to be found on the field. Let him be on the alert for them. Then let him draw on the boundless sources of inspiration from without. Let me mention a few of these: There are devotional books and articles in periodicals—books and articles that will feed the spiritual fire of devotion to one's task. He must keep alive to the social, physical and spiritual need of the people and continually watch for the opportunity to "put across" plans that will advance these interests, working continually to produce the opportune time. Helps that will instruct and inspire the minister to keep awake and alert along these lines and to act wisely may be found in books and periodicals such as Missions, THE BAPTIST, and various magazines. There are the public religious gatherings, such as conventions and conferences, etc. A minister cannot neglect these and be at his best, or even his second best on any field. The minister must be resourceful spiritually, intellectually, socially, yes, and politically. He can and ought to be the leader of the community along these lines as well as others that might be mentioned, for who is more worthy this leadership than the man of God who equips himself for the task.

Last, but not least, the minister who would be at his best must familiarize himself with the Bible and its great central figure—Jesus. Let him not forget that Jesus is the bread and water of life for himself and for his people. Keep your eyes upon him who emptied himself of all the glory he had with the Father and took upon himself the form of man and became obedient unto death; even the death of the cross. It is his work you are called to be engaged in as his ambassador.

The Support of the Ministry

BY E. T. TOMLINSON

A RECENT statement issued at the Episcopal church headquarters, New York City, shows that there has been within the past two years a total increase in the salaries of rectors in the Protestant Episcopal church of $2,415,554. The total for Congregational expense is $18,781,706. For the same purpose in the Northern Baptist Convention the total is $16,369,606.

The most striking part of the statement, however, is that 98 per cent of all the parishes of the Episcopal church, in addition to the salaries paid their rectors, pay also their annual premiums or dues which go to make up their Retiring Pension Fund. Their pension plan is similar to the one in use in our own denomination, except that the annual cost is slightly higher, being 7½ per cent of the annual salary in the Episcopal church and 6 per cent in the Northern Baptist Convention.

Our churches are beginning to respond to the appeal of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board to place in their annual budgets an item covering not merely the salary but also provision for the retiring pension of the pastor. The striking figures of the Episcopal church, however, suggest two or three queries.

Is government by bishops more efficient than government by congregations? If not, why is the response to the appeal among the Episcopal churches to make provision for the retiring pensions of their rectors so much larger than it is among the Baptists who represent a pure democracy? Do Episcopal churches magnify the ministry more than do the Baptist churches? Do they hold it in higher regard?

Two years ago the average salary of a rector among the Episcopalians was $1,800. Now the average salary has been increased to $2,259. In addition, 98 per cent of the churches, as has been stated, have also added provision for the pension.

In 1906 the average salary of ministers in the Northern Baptist Convention was $668; in 1916, $1,087; in 1921, $1,350.

There has been a general response to the appeal of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board and others to increase these salaries, but I am convinced that the minister in 1916 with his average salary of $1,087 was better off than he is in 1922 with his average salary of $1,350. The churches have generally increased salaries, but the increase has not been proportionate to the increase in the cost of living.

We have made ample provision for the support of the young man preparing for the ministry. Two things, however, are imperatively needed today. An increase in the support of the minister while in his active period, and provision for the time when he can no longer work. We have made a good beginning in both these lines. Within ten years the average salary has been doubled, and the Benefit Board has received more than $7,000,000 for its permanent fund, the income to be used for worthy ministers, missionaries, their widows and dependent orphan children. We should, however, recognize that while the support of the minister ought never to be extravagant (no one is fearful of this as an immediate peril), it ought to be sufficient to enable him to do his best work, without being tormented by fear of poverty in his old age.

The splendid response in the last few years to the appeal of this board has been an inspiration. It has provided a fine beginning. When one, however, looks about in the other denominations he realizes that what has been done is only a beginning.

Providing for the Minister's Old Age

BY P. C. WRIGHT

ONE of the most encouraging evidences of recent denominational activity is the new conscience regarding the care of the aged minister. It is evidence of the church's appreciation of service rendered and its responsibility therefor. It puts new emphasis upon the importance of a worthy ministry.

Fifteen years ago, as far as can be ascertained, the ambition of the leading Protestant denominations for an endowment to deal with this problem did not involve a sum in excess of $20,000,000.

Today these bodies possess a total endowment of about $50,000,000. The annual expenditure of these same denominations now exceeds $5,000,000.

No body of Christians has shown a more serious purpose to cope with the situation than the Northern Baptists. The Ministers and Missionaries' Benefit Board was organized August 15, 1911. On that date it had no incorporation and no funds. A committee had been created in response to the offer of Mr. M. C. Treat, of Pennsylvania, to give $50,000 if the denomination would raise $250,000 by December 25, 1911.

Behind every great movement there is a personality with a great vision. Secy. Henry L. Morehouse, of the American Home Mission Society, said, "This is the greatest obligation of the Baptists today." He was chosen the first chairman, and then the first president of the board. Almost his first act was to pledge one-half his entire savings to the "greatest obligation of Baptists." Rev. Everett T. Tomlinson was chosen executive secretary and has thus far guided the enlarging work of the board with quiet, judicious, efficient ability.

The funds of the board have grown through gifts, legacies and annuities to approximately $9,000,000. Never in the history of the denomination has so large a sum of money been raised in so short a period of time. All rejoice in this great achievement. However, the vision also has grown. President Morehouse spoke even more wisely than the best informed knew.

During the first ten years the board confined itself to helping those in age or in need, and this continues to hold first place in sense of responsibility and joy. Last year the board aided about 1,300 individuals each month.

As the first decade of work closed, another responsibility was placed upon the board, which has taken form in the Retiring Pension Fund plan, adopted in 1920. This responsibility, because of the nature of it, created a third, so that at the present time the work of the board lies in three directions: First, grants made to the aged, widows and orphans in need. Second, special pension grants to men who are now past sixty-five years of age and hence ineligible to membership in the Retiring Pension Fund. This obligation will cease within a few years as the number of these men becomes less. Third, co-operation with men under sixty-five years of age in creating a pension reserve out of which pensions will be paid at sixty-five years of age and thereafter.

Every day adds new applications to the list of those seeking membership in the Retiring Pension Plan. The experience of other denominations, as well as our own, convinces the board that the plan is safe, sound, wise, equitable and cheap when compared with others. An actuary of one of our greatest insurance companies reviews every step taken by the board and follows every detail involved in individual membership.

The great need of the hour is a sufficient endowment with which to meet the responsibilities placed upon the board. Is it too much to expect in view of the splendid achievement of these first ten years, that the denomination will see that the endowment is largely increased? It is commonly recognized that the conduct of this work will have strong influence upon the quality, as well as the condition, of the Baptist ministry in the years to come. The strengthening of the leadership will mean uplift for every phase of Baptist work throughout the world.

Churches everywhere should see that their pastors are made members of the Pension Plan. Is your pastor a member? If not, why not?

The Pastor's Sermon

BY FRANKLIN W. SWEET

DR. SHAW, formerly pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, Rochester, once said he had spent forty years getting ready for next Sunday. Dr. Samuel A. Greene of Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, could have said the same toward the close of his notable ministry. Dr. John A. Broadus told the writer that if a man had but thirty years to live, he could well afford to spend twenty of them preparing to be the right kind of a minister the other ten. The description of Dr. J. H. Jowett's first Sunday and sermon in New York is before me as I write. It was a great day when such a voice came to that city from God. Phillips Brooks, the despair of preachers in degree is their inspiration in kind when he says "the utterance of living truth by living men was never more powerful" than in his time. Since the days when God gave his message to men through the voice of his Son, every true Christian preacher, however humble his sphere or gifts, has regarded his sermon as a message from God through him to men about Christ's interpretation of human life and destiny.

The pastor's sermon should be a message, not a discussion of abstract truth, not an essay fascinating in its form and only remotely applicable to some pressing need of human life. No language is too beautiful if it but feather the shaft of truth to pierce the hearts of men but the sermon is a message first true, then clear, next forceful and with such art as will enable it to best accomplish its religious purpose. Dr. Augustus H. Strong was accustomed to tell his students, "Young gentlemen, every sermon should be governed by its object rather than its subject."

Other forms of speech may have a sense of divine compulsion, but the sermon must have that element to be worthy. For his own effectiveness and for the helpfulness of his hearers, all must feel as the pastor preaches, "Here is a man sent from God." Without that heavenly authentication the minister has lost the seal of his ministry, the dynamic of his utterance. The sermon must be a word from the Lord for the assurance of his servant and to validate his utterance to men.

More, the effective sermon must come within the range of the preacher's own religious experience and profound personal convictions. True, the young preacher thereby is limited, but with that faith in Jesus Christ, without which no man should preach at all, and with that knowledge of God in the Bible, life and personal experience which a Christian man who aspires to be a minister should have to be recognized as a pastor, the young preacher has scope enough to begin to preach. To increase the range of his message he should widen the sphere of his convictions and deepen the character of his life, while God lengthens the number of his days. A wise Sunday School superintendent was in the habit of saying, "the best cover for a Bible is not sheep skin or morocco but the hide of a boy." It is that part of divine truth which gets into the heart of the minister which is the limit of his effective preaching material. Shallowness, dishonesty, hypocrisy are before him when he preaches beyond the realm of his vital religious experience and divine instruction. His message, to be real, must be fruit from the divine sap through the tree of his own life.

The pastor's sermon must interpret life in the terms of moral conflict and victory. It must wave the banner of God. It must flash the ideals of Christ. It must illumine the past and search the future and enrich the present. It must take men to a mount of vision from which they see life from God's point of view. It must give the revelation of God's Kingdom to come. It must glorify God and Christ and human life and destiny. It must set time in the midst of eternity. It must magnify the grace of God and throb with the note of human recoverability through Jesus Christ. It must have vision and emotion and encouragement. It must sting the dull conscience into action. It must warn and plead and woo the souls of men. It must lead men to God and to Christ, to peace and to pardon, to duty and to human service. We are now told that its crowning grace must be its length, not more than twenty minutes. Alas, who may attain!

It is said of Dr. John A. Broadus that after a sermon from which the multitude went away blessed and inspired, he returned to the home of his host discouraged, and threw himself on a couch exclaiming, "Oh, dear, I didn't preach. I never preached. I never heard anybody preach. I wish I could really preach just once." In the measure that a preacher appreciates his high calling and loves his brother men, he shares the despair of Dr. Broadus while he aspires toward his high ideal for his sermon.

The High Cost of Missionary Work

BY HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

I VE just returned from a speaking trip in Maine, Connecticut, New Jersey and West Virginia. Everywhere I met crowded audiences of eager and responsive Baptists, but almost everywhere I had questions asked me about the expenses of our New World Movement. One woman said to me, "I can't give when I am told that 60 cents of every dollar I give goes to pay expenses." Another, a man, told me that his pastor was telling every church in the association that not more than 10 cents out of every dollar given went into actual work, while 90 cents was used up in extravagant expenditures.

Experiences like these and the answering of many letters has convinced me that a plain true word ought to be spoken on the cost of missionary and philanthropic work. First I want to assure every one that we are actually doing our work at less cost than we ever did before. We are spending more money to be sure, but we are getting vastly more, and the proportionate cost is lower. If it costs you, for example, $20 to do a piece of business and you receive only $100 you are paying 20 per cent. But if it costs you $100 to collect $1,000 you are paying only 10 per cent and the work gets $900 in addition to its former receipts. You have multiplied your expense account by five and your receipts by ten.

Just so with the New World Movement. The necessary expenses are about $850,000, but we receive $12,500,000. The cost of our national method of collecting the money is only 6 8/10 per cent—a very low cost indeed. It must never be forgotten that the machinery of the Board of Promotion was set up to collect $100,000,000 and that it would cost us little if anything more to administer the larger sums. If we get the $19,000,000 which we seek to realize this year we shall have the same cost $850,000, or a little more than 4 cents out of every dollar collected.

Reducing Overhead

We cannot make this too plain to our people. Let me give you another example. Before we had the New World Movement it cost the Woman's American Foreign Mission Society 16 cents on every dollar of its income to do its business; because the income of the Woman's American Home Mission Society was somewhat smaller it cost them a somewhat larger per cent. But at this very same time the Woman's Foreign Mission Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which had an annual income of $2,500,000, was able to transact its business at a cost of less than 4 per cent, not because it was more economical or more efficient in its management, but because it had a larger income. The way to bring down the percentage of cost is to increase the gifts. Every business man understands this; his overhead expenses are proportionately larger on a small volume of business.

As to the silly and often malicious lies about its costing 60 cents or 90 cents on every dollar to get missionary money into action, they originate where all lies do—with the devil who is the father of lies. It never did, under any circumstances, cost anywhere any such sum. The overhead cost of missionary operations, owing to the large percentage of voluntary workers, is lower than that of any other business. It ranges from 5 to 20 per cent.

But allow me to say a word about what makes up this necessary cost of promotion and administration. There is rent, salaries of executive officers, stenographers, auditing, travel, conventions, conferences, literature, stereopticons, publicity, foreign exchange, and a thousand other minor costs. The least part of the whole expense is taken up in purely administrative costs such as salaries, rent, stenographers. These are all pure expenses of doing business in an orderly and efficient way. The greater part of the cost is spent in informing, educating and stimulating the consistency. If we were spiritually wide-awake and mentally alert and deeply Christian we could cut off at least $500,000 a year in expenses. Every time we refuse to answer a letter we waste the cost of writing that letter plus the postage. Every time we insist on having a "live" missionary for our basket meeting we add to the travel expense.

Tail Twisting and Ear Tickling

I heard about a missionary in India who has two ponies. You know the driver in India sits just behind the pony on the dashboard. One pony would not start until his tail was twisted vigorously, and the tail-twisting had to be repeated at frequent intervals. The other simply would not start until you tickled his ear. Some Christians are like those two heathen ponies! They need hard twisting and ear tickling to induce them to give. All this costs money.

Seriously, a lot of this money ought not to be charged to expense but to education. When we hold these conferences and gather these conventions and send these missionaries, we are simply sowing seed for the future. Hearts are quickened, eyes are opened, consciences are stirred. We ought not to set off these promotional expenses as contrasted to missions; they are a part of the missionary process. When I am invited to go before a state convention I go as a missionary with faith and prayer as do all the others who are giving themselves to this blessed service. It is the Lord's work. He blesses us in the doing. Certainly it costs. So does anything that is worth while. What is cheap is really the costliest thing that we buy. I haven't much use for "bargain-table" missions. I distrust people who promise to do my missionary work for nothing. "The waters of life are free," said the old darkey preacher, "but, my brudder, you done got to pay for the pump."

Some of those missionaries who go out on such cheap plans have to pay a terrible cost in sickness and inefficiency. The "regular" missionaries could tell a tale of the number of such missionaries that they have succored in illness and for whom they have raised money to get their passage home. Our missionary societies pay decent living salary, provide necessary equipment and living quarters, and in so doing are doing the work of Christ.

Those Independent Agencies

Some day I am going to write a plain letter on the peril of giving missionary money to independent agents, whose accounts are not audited and whose work at best is not so efficient or so truly spiritual as that of our own missionaries, home and foreign.

I want to put my whole weight back of the statement that our Board of Promotion, and our missionary societies are economically and conscientiously administered. There are many of us who run out to cheap eating rooms when staying at hotels, who ride in day coaches when on short trips and who plan in every way to save every penny possible. We know that we are handling trust funds, many of them fragrant with personal sacrifice. Please believe in your leaders, your brothers and sisters in Christ. Don't take the heart out of them by captious criticism. Be sure that no root of covetousness in your own heart is the real trouble. It may be that the reason for not giving is only an excuse, not a reason. Please don't allow any one in your presence to pass on that "musty fusty" old lie about its costing 90 cents on a dollar to do missionary work. Interrupt his speech to ask for his figures to substantiate this statement and study our reports until you can give figures of your own to refute him.

This is a "time for every good man to come to the help of his denomination."

Main Drive of the Tithing System

By BERT WILSON

We are having an agitation of the tithing system. Many will plan to inaugurate it in their churches. The testimonies are so overwhelmingly conclusive that the tithing system will produce the money, that short-sighted preachers and churches may hastily try it out. Their reasoning will be about as follows: "Other plans have not produced the money; we need the money. The tithing system will produce the money; we will inaugurate the tithing system in order to get the money." Thus the main point is missed entirely.

What the Purpose Is Not

1. It is not to get money to pay church debts.
2. It is not merely a substitute for other methods of raising money.
3. It is not a cure-all to cure the many ills of the church.
4. Primarily and fundamentally the main drive is not for money at all.

What the Main Drive or Motive Is

1. It is to teach men to put God and the church first.
2. It is to teach men to recognize and acknowledge God's ownership.
3. It is to teach men that God's minimum ratio of giving is the tenth. The exception to this rule is: the man who has been exceptionally prosperous who should freely give very much more than a tenth.
4. It is to teach that tithing is an act of worship.

The main drive, therefore, is to secure not the tithe, but the tither; not the gift, but the giver; not the money, but the man; not the possession, but the possessor. (Quoted from his pamphlet "How to Inaugurate the Tithing System in the Local Church.")

The Open Forum

THE PRIMARY LOYALTY

"It hath been signified unto me concerning you. . . . that there are contentions among you. Now this I mean, that each of you saith, I am of Paul; and I am of Apollos; and I am of Cephas; and I am of Christ. Is Christ divided? . . . but we preach Christ crucified." 1 Cor. 1:11-13:23

In these days of contention between some in our fellowship—days of the questioning of the doxy of those whose doxy differs with your own and is therefore heterodox; days of the superstress upon the second coming of our Lord when three-fourths of the world's population is hardly, if at all, conscious that he ever had a first coming in the completeness of the revelation of a gospel that can redeem lost men and a lost world, what is the issue to those who would make one?

Would it not be well to appeal to this passage in which Paul deals with the contentions in the Corinthian fellowship? Some were priding themselves upon their attachment to Paul, others to Peter and others to Apollos. There were several centers to their differing devotion, yet they were all supposedly disciples of Jesus Christ. And Paul called them to their senses with a simple and a single question. "Is Christ divided?" In our Baptist fellowship we may have, as we do, differing schools of thought and we may each love them dearly. As pastors we may have our sacred associations with the seminaries where we made suitable preparation for our life's ministry, those associations dear to our hearts. We love those faithful men under whose inspiration we were led to a more intimate knowledge of Jesus Christ, who mayhap have introduced us to him. But are we to make our primary loyalty to those who introduced us to him, to the introducers or to the Introduced, Christ himself? Are these schools of thought to have our primary devotion or the one around whose personality and whose principles their teaching centered? He is not and he can never be divided. In these contentions are we not being led away from the primary into certain secondary loyalties until secondary loyalties have become supreme? I love my seminary; I will not cease to love it or the men upon its faculty who deepened my insight as to the love and the life and the program of my Lord and strengthened my faith in him, but God forbid that I should come to make my love for these as superior to my love for or my devotion to my Lord. In a day when the heart of the world is broken and men's hearts are weary and the need for him was never greater, may we not, brethren, heed Paul and come to his sane conclusion, "But we preach Christ crucified?" "The wants of the world are many, the need of the world is but one—that for Jesus Christ." While we wait in vain contentions his program lacks full-hearted support, his kingdom tarries in its coming and his promises await their fulfillment.

STEWARDSHIP

I read with no little surprise the article against tithing in your issue of March 11. I was not surprised that some one should oppose tithing but I was not prepared to find such a protest under the caption of "A Plea for Christian Stewardship."

What does the brother wish? What would he have? He suggests "systematic, proportional, Christian stewardship, but not tithing." The brother must admit that tithing is, at least, systematic and proportional and has, therefore, two-thirds of his own standard of giving. It would be interesting to know, also, upon what grounds the brother can assert that tithing is not Christian. He says himself that the Bible message on the subject is "Freely ye have received, freely give." By what authority does the brother sit in judgment upon the spirit in which the tither gives? No one has ever asked any one to tithe who could not do so freely and with a sincere desire to further the work of the kingdom.

The brother objects to tithing on the ground that under the Jewish law the tithe was "a tax, something to be paid as a legal obligation or duty." True; and why was the tithe levied? The tithe was levied for the reason that it was thought that the interest of the group demanded such action. In this democratic twentieth century the church still believes that tithing is a fine principle of giving but rejects the principle of compulsion that was formerly connected with it. The leaders of the Northern Baptist Convention are just as firm as the brother himself in applying the principle of freely give, and have never suggested that the tithe should be the maximum. Many no doubt ought to go far beyond the tithe in giving. It certainly cannot be said that our leaders have ever suggested that the membership of the church be forced to pay a tithe or any other definite amount in the support of the kingdom.

If the brother believes in systematic, proportionate giving but not in tithing, what ratio does he suggest? One-fifth? Or one-twentieth? The first would be grand indeed and the second would put the denomination upon a higher plane of giving than it has ever known. If Brother Alborn wishes to form a stewardship league on the one-fifth basis, God speed him in his work.

And why should the brother object to the tithing feature of the stewardship league? If he believes in systematic, proportionate giving, reason would dictate that he should encourage people to take the first step in Christian stewardship by urging them to become systematic, proportionate givers through tithing, even though he may feel that the basis of giving is too low and that stewardship involves far more than money.

BIOLOGICAL NOT THEOLOGICAL

Mention was made in THE BAPTIST some time ago of the effort that was being made by the Florida Baptists to make the teaching of evolution or Darwinism illegal in the schools of the state. Since that time Professor Miller of the University of Kentucky states, in Science, that it was largely due to the efforts of Baptist ministers that a similar bill was introduced into the Kentucky legislature.

The point made by the editor of THE BAPTIST that any legislation to control belief is diametrically opposed to all Baptist principles and traditions is well made. Another point worthy of consideration is this: Darwin, whose name is most frequently associated with the theory of evolution, holds an enviable place in the minds of most scientists. His fame is not only enviable but it is also envied by many modern workers. They would be only too glad to find flaws with the theory and to replace it with one of their own. And there are also many men of as great or greater ability than Darwin who are honestly and with unprejudiced minds weighing the facts to separate the true from the false. If there are flaws in the theory one or the other of these classes of men will be much more likely to find them than people whose education, however broad in other lines, has not been such as to acquaint them with the facts and principles involved. Biological evolution is a biological and not a theological or a political problem and will have to be settled by biologists and not by theologians or politicians. We can afford to stand aside and allow them to thrash it out among themselves. It was a wise man who said: "And now I say unto you, refrain from these men and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught; but if it be of God ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

If our listener-in at Hades had listened a little longer he might have heard the general manager of those regions tell how at one time he had side-tracked the church from its work of spreading the gospel by getting it to fighting Copernicus, and then some time later by starting it after Darwin. He had found that the getting of earnest Christian men into this work helped him more than sending direct agents like Paine, Voltaire, or Ingersoll.

The New Little Pilgrim's Progress

"I will lead on softly according to the pace of the children." Genesis 33:14.

THE suggestive beauty of this text never seemed quite so forceful as after reading a very illuminating article by Mr. Angelo Patri in the February Delineator on "The Seven Great Sins Against Childhood," sins committed in the blindness of love or fear or ignorance by the very parents who would protect and make successful the children in their keeping—only they do not know seven simple facts of child culture. In brief these are: 1. Thwarting curiosity. Mr. Patri explains: "When a child comes into the world he faces a tremendous struggle. Helpless in body, with but the germ of a mind, he must begin at once the search for experience and growth that will, in the next twenty or thirty years, make him a man who will measure himself successfully against the forces of a complex civilization."

"Nature armed him for the struggle by endowing him with an insatiable curiosity. That is his lever. With it he will lift the dead weight of ignorance that presses him down. With it he will poke and pry and dig and delve into the secrets of the life about him, commonplaces to his parents, but as fresh as the dawn of a new creation to him. Do his parents appreciate this and lend themselves to the working of his questioning mind? Hardly. And here they commit the first great sin against childhood. The child sees a bright box on the table and reaches for it. He will feel out his strange object. He will find out what it means. 'No, no; baby must not touch,' says his mother. He persists, and she slaps his hands. At the very outset he is in combat with those who should be fighting at his side."

There is, of course, wisdom in thwarting curiosity that would endanger a child, but those hundred and one tedious questions which the exploring young mind evolves, why snub them and produce another "average" individual? Why thwart an eager, searching, experimenting nature? Mr. Patri tells that delicious Kipling story about the Elephant Child whose curiosity gave so much trouble. "His friends and relatives spanked and spanked, but he kept on until his curiosity led him into the place where his nose, poking into where it wasn't supposed to be at all, was stretched into a trunk, and he became 'different'—a new sort of elephant, with advantages over the old ones who had spanked him." Curiosity is the essence of the child's mind, God-given. 2. The second cardinal error parents make is in neglecting to study their particular child. They decide what manner of child he ought to be, and proceed to train him up accordingly. They would have another child instead of accepting the one they have." In other words: "forcing." God made each child a unique personality. It is his nature to be "different" and the misunderstanding parent often stunts and dwarfs something rare and beautiful.

3. The third parental sin is not realizing that "childhood is a stage of growth as distinct as old age. It must be respected if the child is to reach maturity unhampered by distorted notions and clouded vision." You know these parents too well, they are the ones who dress their children in oldish clothes, take them to theatres, movies and restaurants, often in the innocent desire to bring happiness but robbing youth of its normal growth, with its own point of view developing rhythmically and in order.

4. Next Mr. Patri lists "robbing a child of its leisure. Their Puritan souls cannot bear to see the child trifle away his time." With exquisite insight he shows how a child's "spiritual body grows with wise use of his leisure time." Day dreaming?—"he needs that extra time for cultivating his imagination." Playing?—"he needs that leisure for growth." Creating things curious to adult eyes?—"Art is strange in its beginnings. Often they are not recognizable. The little puddler's (in clay) clumsy efforts may be the first faint stirrings of its breath. Then preserve his leisure for him. There is a growth in the child's play that far outstrips the growth in his work."

5. "The sins of parents against adolescence are as the sands of the sea for number. The worst—the fifth great sin—is nagging. And mothers are the worst offenders here."

Adolescence is so hard for the child because parents do not understand him. They look at the ungainly boy and wonder why he is so unpleasant, so unhandy, so clumsy, so un-everything, and then lose patience, and with it their hold on the boy.

"You are the size of your father, and you act like a baby!" This because a lad cried unexpectedly.

"You great lumbering calf—why don't you look where you are going?" He had tripped over the spindle-legged furniture in his aunt's tea-room.

"My soul! can't you remember anything? You have a head like a sieve." He had forgotten to do an errand.

All this is unfair. The adolescent is big with a bigness that surpasseth his own understanding. He has not yet acquired the mechanism for its graceful management, and he is sensitive about it. One must be very gentle and patient and not descend to personalities when correcting him. It is not well to see too much. Let him alone. Try to hold on to your temper and your patience while he tries to find his legs, his arms and a stable set of nerves."

It seems to us that this fifth sin (and the next), is the most un-Christian to which Christian parents are prone! It is here that the little text about "walking softly" is so appropriate.

6. "What shall we say to the one who commits the sixth and meanest of sins against childhood—exploiting it for his own gain? Child exploitation is as varied and as widespread as the population of the world. It is practiced by rich and poor, by the intelligent as well as the stupid."

"I do want you to see baby, she is so cunning when she tries to wake up, rubbing her little fists in her eyes? And the young mother takes up the sleeping baby to please her vanity."

He tells of other parents who unwisely make John recite little pieces, keeping him keyed up nervously, parading naive acquirements to an over-applauding public, or dressing a child conspicuously as a personal vanity, or—on a very different basis—demanding working papers of the school authorities: "Exploiters of childhood every one of them. Masters of child labor, from the dainty lady to the gnarled old peasant. Taskmasters who would coin the golden hours of childhood into the mean coins of their material gain. An inexcusable, contemptible sin!" (And one, by the way, which leads to that "smarty" period when the child, grown self-conscious and conceited, "shows off!")

The Children

By CLARENCE E. FLYNN

WHEN two gray haired old parents meet
In quiet home or busy street,
The talk will run in formal style
On formal things a little while.
Then, following a silent spell:
"The children, are they doing well?"

Then faded eyes grow quickly bright.
Worn features take a sudden light,
As they recount with pride and joy
The story of each girl and boy.
How these old parents love to tell
That every child is doing well!

The great All-Father up above,
I often think, in words of love
Recounts each victory and success,
Joys in His children's happiness.
I think He, too, delights to tell
That all His own are doing well.

—Christian Herald.

7. The last sin is—lying to children, ah, surely you knew it would have to get itself included. "If you do that the bogeyman will get you!" The child will soon know that this is not true. But the harm has been done. He has learned to fear and to doubt. Mr. Patri makes mention of the promises made to children and then broken for convenience's sake, of the social lies over the telephone about "splitting headaches" when the young listener knows there is no headache. "It is impossible to measure the disaster of lying to children. It not only teaches them to lie in their turn, but to distrust people. . . . The soul given over to untruth is lost, for it cannot find its way in a world tuned to the stern loveliness of the truth. Truth is the goal of human beings, the ultimate end of their search. Toward it they struggle, suffering all things, enduring all things; for truth is the face of God."

The little pilgrims in your home have no other choice than to keep step with their parents in the great journey of life: Let us proceed softly on account of the children!

The Young Reserves

The Tale of the Sad Starch Hare

"T was in the month of Starch," the Hatter began.

"Pardon me," said Alice in Blunderland, politely, "but don't you mean the month of March?"

"I said Starch and I meant Starch," the Hatter replied. "Starch is a much more sensible name for the third month in the year, anyhow, for isn't it a time of stiff breezes? Of course! And aren't the sidewalks glossy with frozen snow, like starched shirt bosoms? Of course! And isn't starch made up of powdery whiteness just as snow is? Of course! Well then, as I was saying, it was in the month of Starch that the Sad Starch Hare—"

"Meaning the Mad March Hare?" Alice inquired.

"See here," objected the Hatter, "who's telling this story, you or I?"

"Oh, I beg your pardon!" gasped Alice, "It just sounded a little as if you had a cold in your head, sir. I'm making lots of blunders today."

"As usual," commented the poor Hatter with a resigned air. "Well, as I was saying before I was interrupted, it was in the month of Starch that the Sad Starch Hare found the weather so chilly that he came to pay a visit at our house. But no sooner was he inside the door than he began marching around—"

"Shouldn't you say starching around?" Alice suggested.

The Hatter sighed. "My dear Alice, if his legs were stiff as starch how could he circumnavigate my domicile? There's all the difference in the world between the March that you read on your calendar and the march that you do with your legs. Shall I go on?"

"Pray do," said Alice meekly. And this is what he told her: It seems that the Sad Starch Hare, who had never lived indoors before, thought that of all the blunders in Blunderland the greatest had been made in naming the contents of a house. Blunder Number 1, he complained, was to be told on entering to hang your hat and coat on the tree, please.

"I'd like to see Mother Nature allowing you to do that, outdoors," he cried; but when he saw the tree he really grew sadder than ever. Such spindly arms! Not a leaf! And as for roots, only four queer sticks above ground. Can you guess what kind of a tree this was? (The blunders are all listed at the end of this story, so that you can guess them as you go along.)

Blunder No. 2 made him want to telephone to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals when he heard that there was a horse in the laundry, although just at first he had thought this quite proper: "I suppose the horse nibbles the grass on the dry lawn?"

"Not at all," explained the Hatter, "there's all the difference in the world between a laundry and a dry lawn, for a laundry, dear Hare, is a damp room in the cellar where clothes are made sopping wet for purposes of a cleansing nature."

"Tut! tut! that's merely splitting hairs," cried the Hare in high disgust, "the point of the thing is that you should stable a horse in a damp cellar! I insist that while I'm your guest you must allow him to prance around the premises freely."

At this the Hatter actually snickered and said he couldn't imagine what the laundress would think of such inconvenient behavior when she needed the horse by her side every minute.

"Oh, I see, this laundress-person rides the horse, does she? I presume she just practices in the cellar until she gains confidence enough to ride forth in public."

The Hatter grew purple in the face trying not to roar at this picture of his particular portly washerwoman galavanting forth astride the—, well, what kind of a horse do you guess?

Blunder Number 3 the Hare found rather ridiculous than otherwise. For when the Hatter was changing his boots he said: "Would you be kind enough to hand me my horn from the bureau?"

"Horn?" repeated the Hare, delighted, and hunting high and low, "I did not know you were a musician or I would have asked you long ago to render a solo."

"I fear you have jumped to rash conclusions, sir, for that's the horn before you, and you can see that it's only for the ease of my own sole—Oh!"

"Ahem!" smiled the Hare, dryly, "now I know what horn it is that makes boots squeak!" Do you?

When they left the dressing room, the Hatter committed Blunder Number 4 by saying: "Well, now that we're through up—let's cut a caper or two down—"

"I have been taught," the Hare objected, scandalized, "never to fasten my gaze fixedly on anyone! It's a cruel way to cut people either above you or below you!"

"But you'll never get anywhere in this house unless you descend to such inclinations," snapped the Hatter, who knew what he was talking about; do you?

But the tragic Blunder (number 5) was about the pet that the whole family walked on in the most matter-of-fact way. Only once a year was this poor pet taken out for an airing, and then—oh! unbelievable news—the family actually hired a man to take it out in the back yard and beat it with sticks! This, said the petrified Hare, was a hundred times worse than what they did to the horse; for if this pet so much as curled up, they nailed it down where it belonged! And whenever such a pet lost its nap then they sold it to the ragman for a mere song! "How dare you sing about anything so sad?" sobbed the Sad Starch Hare, sympathetically, "you don't deserve any pet, especially one that sounds as if it belonged in your automobile instead of being imprisoned in the parlor." Can you guess its name?

Then there was Blunder Number 6 about the ten dogs that decorated the windows—"It would be all right if they just sat in the windows, but to hang them up as you do, oh! cruel! cruel! No wonder the window has so many pains—"

"P-a-n-e-s," corrected the Hatter, spelling being his strong point.

"Perhaps you're right to omit the 'i,' for no doubt it's losing its 'eye' that makes the window-blind."

"But the window wears glasses," explained the Hatter carefully, "so it can see more than you can, poor Hare. It can even see through those ten dogs!" Can you?

Blunder Number 7 was another name for glass, judging by which the ignorant Hare thought it perfectly proper to toss his on the floor after he had had a drink out of it. But crash! he found that far from being as acrobatic as it sounded, the last thing in the world to do with it was to let it drop. Of course you are wiser than that, aren't you?

"I challenge you to a Battle of Words," cried the Hatter's guest, much annoyed by so many blunders, "I will fight for my assertion that your language does not say what it means!" So he ran into the pianoforte and locked all the keys. . . .

"Do you consider that upright of him?" complained the trembling Hatter, "I didn't compose the words. . . ."

"Possibly not upright, but surely just grand!" chuckled little Alice, gleefully, "and I'm sure you'll both win before the month of Starch is over."

"But how can we both win?" asked the very puzzled Hatter, scratching his head.

"April Fool! ! !" cried Alice.

THE MASTER'S INVITATION
Luke 14:16-24; John 3:16

PREPARED BY REV. A. H. GAGE

Jesus taught through stories. One day he was eating at the home of one of the chief Pharisees. It was the Sabbath. The Pharisees were watching him critically. There was a certain sick man present and he healed him.

As he saw how the guests chose the best seats he used an illustration of a man who, sitting in a chief place, had to take a less conspicuous one when some one more honorable came in. He said, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

One of the men at the dinner said to Jesus, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God."

Then Jesus told a story of the man who had made a great dinner and invited a large number of guests. When the time came he sent his servants to announce to those who were bidden that the feast was ready. All began to make excuses. The man was stirred with anger and sent his servants into the streets of the city to bring in the crippled, the blind and the lame. But still there was room. So he said, "Go to the highroads and hedgerows and compel the people to come in so that my house may be full. For I say that none of those bidden shall taste of my supper."

The Master provides a great feast of good things. Some have the idea that to be a Christian is to narrow or limit one's life. Not so. Jesus said, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." To be a Christian is to enrich the entire life, mentally, physically, socially and religiously. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and that which is to come."

The Master invites to this feast. Jesus' plan is not one of coercion but rather of invitation. He invites. Man can accept or reject. Jesus does not come to force his will and his way unto people. He says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden." "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

"The Spirit and the Bride say come. And let him that heareth say come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

The Master will accept no excuse. There is no excuse that man can make that will be accepted by the Master. We may have excuses that seem perfectly good to us, but they will not stand the test. What excuses are you trying to put up to Jesus Christ?

The Master sends out helpers to extend the invitation. Jesus came to his own people as their Messiah. They refused to have him and they crucified him. They lost their chance. The entire Gentile world is now open to the gospel. Jesus invites all peoples, of all races, of all classes of society. Jesus wants every one of his helpers to extend the invitation far and wide to all peoples and every young person who is a Christian is commissioned to win others to Jesus Christ.

The Master's will must be done. Our excuses and our disobedience will not prevent Jesus Christ from becoming Lord of Lords and King of Kings. His purpose of world redemption goes on. Those who refuse to do his will cannot share in his triumph nor in his glory. If a young person will not accept Jesus as Saviour and Lord, Jesus will find some one else to do his work and to receive his blessing. He who refuses, loses his chance.

The Master is calling for young people. He wants young people to come to him for a blessing and he wants young people to go out for him to invite others to share his blessings.

Jefferson Avenue, Detroit, Wins

On March 6 a reception was given to Rev. Arthur V. Allen, the new pastor of Jefferson Avenue Church. As director of religious education for Detroit, Mr. Allen rendered a signal service to the young people. Of course, we regret to lose him from the fraternity, but congratulate Jefferson Avenue Church.

Now Is the Time for a Big Forward Movement of the B. Y. P. U. in Minnesota

By ARTHUR HANSEN, Director

Let us double the membership of our societies before June 1; register 3,000 Minnesota young people for St. Paul Convention; enroll 1,000 members in the Minnesota Baptist Tithers' League; seek to "Each One Win One" to Christ before Easter.

The Baptist young people of America have their eyes on Minnesota in general and St. Paul in particular. Let us show them that Minnesota is not a trailer but a leader, and we will meet them at the St. Paul Convention with heads up and colors flying.

The Group Plan Revised

Some of our societies in the state are putting across a fine program and showing us how to reach our goals. The plan of action is the old group plan with new features and plenty of friendly rivalry among the groups.

Divide into groups, four if possible otherwise three or two according to numbers. Each group selects its captain. Its name or other designation, and its motto preferably a Bible verse.

The devotional meeting is led by a group its captain or a member of the group. Each group strives to outdo its rivals in number participating in the meeting and in presenting an interesting and helpful program.

At the close of the meeting, while the president presides, each captain reports of the number of points scored by his group on the following basis: (Use blackboard)
1 point for each group member present;
2 points for each visitor brought (A visitor must be one who is eligible to associate or active membership);
5 points for each new member secured and duly elected to membership;
2 points for each group member who has observed Quiet Half Hour (or daily Bible reading) during the past week;
5 points for each mission study book read by a group member (study books on stewardship, evangelism, etc., may also be included);
10 points for each signature secured on the tithing pledge;
5 points for each registration secured for B. Y. P. U. of A. Convention.

(Other features, such as collection at number participating in devotional meeting may be taken account of if desired.)

NEBRASKA

A few months ago Prof. R. B. Steyer of the department of Bible and religious education at Grand Island College, Grand Island, Nebr., organized the college stuents who are interested in some form of Christian life service into a league which is called the Life Service League of Grand Island College.

The purpose of the league as set forth in the constitution and in the declaration of purpose which each member signs is: "(1) To study the various types of Christian life work and the training necessary for such work; (2) to consider the needs of the world in respect to the different forms of Christian service; (3) to broaden our conception of Christian life service and deepen our interest in it; (4) to make others familiar with the needs of the world and to enlist the services of their lives to meet those needs."

The league includes all those students who have declared their intention to enter some field of professional Christian service, those who purpose to do some sort of life work for the kingdom although they do not know just what it may be, and also those who are not yet sure just what they will do but who are interested in the needs of the world and their own personal responsibility, that is, those who have not yet committed themselves to any form of Christian service. The members number one-sixth of the enrollment of the college.

The organization meets every three weeks. The programs consist of reports on various fields and types of Christian service, missionary stereopticon lectures, addresses by Christian leaders located in the city or who may be stopping off there, discussions, and other topics of like nature. Occasionally there is an entertainment and social period. The meetings usually close with college and gospel songs.

One of the aims of the league is to have every member doing some regular Christian service all the time. To provide for this and to encourage it there is a special committee called the Christian work committee whose duty it is to see that members have something to do or to provide members to do Christian work which comes to the attention of the committee. This is for training but especially to keep in touch with actual Christian service.

The league seems to be filling a real need and accomplishing results. Professor Stevens acts as sponsor for the league and will be glad to correspond with others who may have a similar organization or who wish to know more about this one.

SPokane (WASH.) FEDERATION

My Michigan

Rev. Morgan Williams, the new director of religious education for Michigan, has advanced great plans and programs which, if carried out, will place Michigan in the front-line rank in young people's work.

MORGAN WILLIAMS

10. Wonderfully wise in decision to invest her all in Christian College.

11. Wonderful in range of activities and knowledge, being member of the boards of several institutions and organizations.

12. Wonderfully wise in continued labor when she could have "taken it easy."

13. Wonderfully wise in her devotion and loyalty to her Savior and Lord, Jesus Christ.

The enrolment for the banquet reached 300. A large cake was given to the society responding with the largest delegation. It was won by Grace Baptist Union. The Union announced that it would send the cake to Mrs. Linfield.

Are You Going to St. Paul June 28-July 2?

From time to time we have presented some very interesting facts about the city of St. Paul. Facts VI and VII are presented in this issue. Minneapolis, the big twin, enters with the next issue.

Fact VI.

Although the business upon which St. Paul depends for its prosperity is largely centered in the down-town district, yet there are other portions of the city which should be seen in order to obtain a proper conception of the city as a whole. St. Paul covers in all over fifty-five square miles of territory. Throughout the city are many parks, drives, and special points of interest which are more than worth the small effort required to visit them.

Starting almost from the down-town district and in fact from St. Paul's Cathedral, which, by the way, is one of the finest cathedrals on the continent, is Summit Avenue. Summit Avenue is the longest fine residence street in America and for almost four miles from the Cathedral on the east to the Mississippi River on the west, is one continuous line of fine St. Paul homes. Running both north and south from Summit Avenue along the edge of the bluffs overlooking the Mississippi River is the River Boulevard Drive. Few equally beautiful drives can be found anywhere. At the southern end of the River Boulevard is historic Fort Snelling, which is now headquarters for the Third Regiment of the Seventh Army Corps Area.

Fact VII.

In the northwest corner of the city is Como Park. With Lake Como, the fountains, gardens, conservatory and wild animal range, Como Park offers much of actual interest in addition to its beauty. Farther to the north and east is Phalen Park located upon the shores of Lake Phalen. Whatever lack of wild animals or conservatories there may be at Phalen is more than made up by a fine large bathing beach and an excellent eighteen-hole golf course. Just a short distance southeast of St. Paul's down-town districts, lies Indian Mound Park. Here at a high elevation overlooking both the city and the Mississippi Valley to the south, are numerous large Indian mounds constructed years ago, when the red men were still rulers of this region. Just below the brow of the hill at Indian Mounds Park are located the Minnesota state fish hatcheries, from which millions of small game fish are distributed to all sections of the state. There are numerous other parks and drives throughout the city which limited space forbids mentioning. During the summer months many of the parks have regular evening band concerts, as well as other special attractions and entertainments.

Religious Education

Summer Assemblies

By T. B. FRIZELLE

Thoughtful Christians are feeling a growing concern for the religious education of the children of our churches and our nation. The rapid development and improvement in state education, the provision being made for the training of efficient teachers and the fact that upon the church devolves the responsibility for religious education, has created a new and widespread sense of need for more thoroughgoing methods of training for the religious teachers and leaders of the church. Our standard Baptist summer assemblies are rendering a great service in supplying to a large degree this need.

Assemblies help center the attention of pastors, superintendents, Sunday-school workers, and leaders of young people upon one of the most fundamental tasks of the church—training leaders. Assemblies actually provide leaders. There is given to thousands during the summer period a new and enlarged appreciation for life service in and through the church. Seven thousand or more Baptist students were present in our assemblies for instruction last year, in Sunday-school pedagogy, psychology, evangelism, missions, social service and methods in Sunday-school and young people's organizations.

The work of these training schools represents, as far as possible, the best thought in religious education, and without doubt the denomination has no more worth-while agency for establishing newer and higher ideals and standards of work for religious teachers and workers than the assembly.

Pastors and workers, suggest now to your young people the wisdom of choosing the summer assembly for the vacation period this summer. Summer assemblies have school in the morning, recreation in the afternoon, and the finest Christian fellowship and inspiration all the time.

The following is a list of assemblies corrected to date. For further information apply to state directors of religious education or to Rev. T. B. Frizelle, 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Preparation for Church Membership

By H. G. WESTON SMITH

I have felt the need of something very short for use in taking our classes of younger and older people through instruction by way of preparation for church membership so that it is entered into intelligently. To this end I have prepared a folder which answers briefly the following questions:

What is the church? Why do we have the church? What is the Baptist church? What is the origin of the Baptist church? Why did the Ana-Baptists form a group by themselves? How did Baptists come to be in America? Who was Roger Williams? What is the comparative strength of the Baptist church today? Why should we have so many denominations? What has the church achieved? Can a person be a church member without being a Christian? What does it mean to be a Christian? How do we become a Christian? After we become a Christian and a church member is our path easy? How can we come to the fullest feeling of God's presence? What shall we do about our old associates? What shall we do about our amusements? How shall we regard the Sabbath? How does the church serve its members? What does the church expect of its members? What is the creed of the Baptist church? What is the purpose of a church covenant? (Here is inserted the printed church covenant.) What is the form of our church government? How is our local church business attended to?

While space does not permit answering all of the questions here, an example of the method used is given in the answer to "What does the church expect of its members?" "The church expects that its members shall be Christians; that they shall practise their professions; that they shall cooperate and show the spirit of cooperation by refraining from fault-finding, by loyal attendance and by loyal prayer; that they shall participate with energy in the activities of the church; that they shall regard the financial responsibilities of the church as their responsibilities and that they shall respond cheerfully in giving proportionately of their income, this being the standard set by Jesus himself (It is believed that the tenth is a fair proportion in most cases and that if one consistently practices tithing one does not lose by it nor later regret it); and they shall grow in their life and strength in the church."

International Uniform Lesson for April 9

THE LORD PRESERVES JOASH
2 Kings 11:1-4, 11-17. Golden Text: Psalm 145:20.

Setting

Jehoshaphat, son of Asa, succeeded his father to the reign of Judah and upon his death his son, Jehoram, became king. Jehoram's wife was Athaliah, daughter of Ahab and Jezebel. He was a wicked king and reaped the fruits of his wickedness. Ahaziah, his son followed him and he also "walked in the ways of the house of Ahab" under the counsel of Athaliah. He died from wounds in battle and Athaliah usurped the throne. The scene of this lesson is in Jerusalem.

Lesson

Woman against woman (Verses 1-3). Upon the death of Ahaziah a direct descendant should have taken the throne, but his mother, true daughter of Jezebel, supposedly put to death all the royal seed of the house of Judah and herself took the reign. She was outwitted, however, by another woman—Jehosheba, daughter of king Jehoram, half sister of Ahaziah, and the wife of Jehoiada, the priest. She hid the baby Joash, one of Ahaziah's sons, first, in a bedchamber, then in the temple for six years.

Crowning of Joash (Verses 4-12). When Joash was seven years old, Jehoiada, after securing a promise of loyalty and protection from the militia, revealed to them the young son of Ahaziah. There followed the coronation of Joash and the formalities which made him king of Judah.

Athaliah's Death (Verses 13-17). The queen knew nothing of her dethronement until the shouts of acclaim of the people as they welcomed their new ruler came to her. She hastened to the temple and saw the young king standing, "by the pillar, as the manner was." She rent her clothes, crying, "Treason!" But none of her erstwhile subjects rallied to her and Jehoiada ordered her taken from the temple and slain. Then he "made a covenant between the king and the people that they should be Jehovah's people; between the king also and the people."

Leading Thoughts

1. God's plans cannot be frustrated; evil will always be dethroned. 2. "The purposes of the Almighty are perfect and must prevail."—Abraham Lincoln. 3. "What are all our histories but God manifesting himself that he hath shaken and tumbled down and trampled upon everything that he had not planted?"—Oliver Cromwell.

Our Own Folks

Executive Committee of N. B. C. Meets

The executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention met in Chicago, Ill., March 9, 1922. There was a large attendance. All absentees sent regrets. Most of them were ill.

The executive committee voted to recommend to the convention to amend article III, section 1, by substituting the word "first" for the word "fourth," fixing the annual meeting of the convention to begin on the Wednesday before the first Sunday in June. It was also voted to recommend amendments to the by-laws, article IV, section 11, to provide that "The final report of the committee on resolutions shall be presented in printed form not later than at the morning session of the day prior to the last day on which the convention meets."

The committee on permanent meeting places for the convention was unable to make any definite recommendations because the question of biennial sessions has not yet been decided, and also because the date of the convention meetings has not been fixed, and also because cities are not clamoring for the convention meetings.

A sub-committee of the executive committee is conferring with a similar committee of the General Board of Promotion. These two committees are in continual conference, and have held a joint meeting, and probably something will be presented to the convention relating to this matter.

The treasurer of the convention reported all debts paid and a small balance in the treasury, but there are obligations which will more than exhaust this balance.

At the Indianapolis meeting, November 3, 1921, the executive committee voted to instruct the program committee for the coming meeting to make such a program as would render pre-convention conferences unnecessary. The program committee was unable to effect such arrangements with one group of those who hold pre-convention conferences, and therefore the idea has been abandoned.

Hotel Claypool has been selected as convention headquarters. All who desire accommodations should write directly to that hotel.

Arrangements were made for THE BAPTIST to issue a daily Convention paper as was done at Des Moines last year.

The President announced the appointment of Dr. Joseph E. Sagebeer, of Philadelphia, and Hon. Charles R. Holden, of Chicago, as members of the law committee to fill vacancies caused by the deaths of Hon. E. L. Tustin and Hon. J. A. Baldwin.

The Federated Baptist Churches of Indianapolis, Ind., was recognized as a standard city mission organization of class B.

The executive committee voted that on the opening day of the convention, Wednesday, June 14, the convention should adjourn at twelve o'clock and meet at two o'clock, and that during this interval the state delegations should meet in places provided for their meetings and select their representatives on the four convention committees constituted in this way, and present their reports to the recording secretary immediately upon the assembling of the convention at two o'clock. This new plan was adopted to prevent the great confusion always caused by these elections when held in the convention hall on the afternoon of the first day's session.

The brethren of Indianapolis have organized a Committee of Arrangements and are busily engaged in caring for the interests of the convention. The secretary of that committee is Rev. F. A. Hayward, 729 Occidental Building, Indianapolis, Ind. This local committee of arrangements will soon issue printed information concerning hotel accommodations and transportation.

Unusual Baptist Doings

The outstanding events now are denominational. Every Baptist assembly takes color from what is uppermost in the Baptist mind; and that is the question whether financially we are going to sink or swim. All the efforts now being put forth are to continue the swimming. In the special emergency meeting of our state convention just held in Tremont Temple the expectation that the whole situation would be widely opened up, drew an impressively large and representative attendance from every part of the state. They were solidly in their seats all through the sessions, and closely intent upon every developing feature of denominational management since the World Movement was set in motion.

Dr. Aitchison

Of course the head of our Board of Promotion, Dr. Aitchison, was the one most in evidence, and certainly was challenged to prove his mastery of all the materials of the great Baptist movement. In clarity, open candor, Christian earnestness, and firm grasp upon every phase of the situation, he left nothing to be desired. He invited every conceivable question or complaint; his invitation was accepted, so that all queries that had been stored away in the back of the head came out. Even the brother with his special grouse "got in his." The open and convincing earnestness of Dr. Aitchison, backed as it was with abundant authority and good nature, swept all before it.

Other leaders were there on call, and shed light where there had been uncertainty or bewilderment. Dr. C. L. White was particularly effective, so was Dr. James F. Franklin, Treasurer Huntington, Mr. Albert L. Scott, and Dr. Hugh A. Heath. By the way, Dr. Heath was at home among us, and we took the opportunity of electing him overwhelmingly to the secretaryship of our state convention. The work wants him, he is a veteran at it, and we are anticipating the re-establishment of what was a most happy and prosperous relation in our state work.

What of It!

Very few are prophesying what the outcome will be of all this earnest and open discussion of Baptist matters. The seriousness of our situation, sufficiently felt already, was naturally the more emphasized by all the questioning and the frank discussion of it. The time to the closing of our financial year is short. This is well in view of the suspense which the crisis brings—we shall soon know either the best or the worst. Anyhow, God reigns and the Baptist denomination still lives!

Some Interesting Happenings

Naturally Baptists are interested to know what our brethren of other faiths think of us. Some of their journals are saying things about us that are wise, and otherwise. Evidently we have not been altogether perfect in their eyes—neither have their eyes been altogether clear of moths and beams. But faithful criticism is good, and some of it hits our weak spots. The truth is that the doctrinal issues among us have been grotesquely exaggerated. In a denomination that emphasizes freedom of soul and of speech, there will be license both in literalism and in latitude, that is certain. But in time they correct themselves if not taken too seriously. The "escape valve" is merely open. Probably the most severe and drastic of our critics knows us and our conditions the least. One editor here in Boston is having the time of his life with the Baptists. He is mopping up the floor with some of us—or thinks he is. But if he will be patient and learn more about us, his "liberalism" will be more impressive.

Tremont Temple

At last the Temple Church has called a pastor. And the prospect is that he will accept. In a way, Dr. J. C. Massee will carry on the later traditions of that pulpit. The greater part of the present membership of the church was received by Dr. Cortland Myers, and bears the stamp of his type of conservatism. Wisely that was kept in mind in seeking his successor. While the new pastor will be himself as the former pastor was himself, the change will be in his varying presentation of the conservative message. Dr. Massee comes to a loyal church, with strong supporters, an atmosphere vibrant with the evangelistic purpose and expectation, and continuous in its response to faithful gospel preaching. As a wide door of opportunity we have nothing to compare with it. Every church and minister in our wide fraternity hopes for the largest and highest success from this promising relation of church and minister.

Two Allens

We have two Allens in Boston, both of whom are in position to do service to the people. One of them is attorney general, the other is bank commissioner. One has completely unhorsed two corrupt district attorneys and now is getting after blackmailing lawyers; and the other has punched the shell of several rotten trust companies, and now follows up by "recovering" from every particeps criminis.

It was befitting that J. Weston Allen, the attorney general, should be the chief guest of the Social Union at the March meeting. He had a tremendous welcome.

It is just the place for a brave and incorruptible official to get reassurance and confidence by facing 400 responsive laymen who are with him to a man. And it does the 400 good when they can be sure that they face a man devotedly faithful and absolutely unafraid.

Undiscriminating Robbers

That was one who stole the mail bag of THE BAPTIST not long ago. Your Boston Correspondent perhaps leads the procession of those who ultimately will know what was in that bag. There was a Boston Letter in it, in which recent Boston matters were visualized. Eloquent men had spoken, good men had died, a minister or two had shifted, the Irish had taken both Cork and Boston. Even the writer himself is unable to recall all of its beauty and mischief. But alas—wasted sweetness! The robber was not a Baptist.

Items

Rev. and Mrs. Carey W. Chamberlin of Beverly have before them an experience of delightful interest. In an early trip to the Far East they will visit many of our mission stations in China and Japan, and attend important conferences of our eastern missionaries. Dr. Chamberlin is one of the board of managers of our Foreign Mission Society, and head of the special committee on Eastern Asiatic missions. There is peculiar pleasure to his many friends that such a well-deserved and congenial trip is before him. Modest worth, and constant, quiet efficiency and faithfulness, is a true description of Pastor Chamberlin. That estimate of him was emphasized in generous substantial expressions by his devoted people in their hearty farewell and godspeed.

relation that has been tested and enriched by years of service together.

The passing of Deacon O. M. Wentworth, long time tower of strength at Tremont Temple, will be tenderly felt by many of the older Baptists who knew him in his active and energetic days. He has for some time felt the weight of years and infirmities and has been missed at the Temple and in our assemblies. He recalls to us the old sturdy type of lay leader that blessed our churches in the seventies and eighties. They were diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; and they gave noble backing to the strong ministers of that period. Do such laymen help to make strong ministers? An interesting query. Deacon Wentworth was in his ninetieth year. Until recently he was vigorous, and in vital touch with Christian enterprises.

In the passing of Emery B. Gibbs, of the Brookline Church, we lost as vigorous a deacon, but with the asset of scholarly training and professional weight and experience. He was eminent in our Baptist councils, educational, philanthropic and evangelical; a graduate and trustee of Colby College, trustee of Newton, of the Baptist Hospital, and the Social Union; and in the Brookline Church was a power everywhere. At his funeral the large attendance of prominent men was marked. Also at the memorial service in the church on the afternoon of March 12 a large gathering paid tribute to his Christian eminence, and heard appreciations nobly expressed by President Roberts of Colby, and Professor Woodman Bradbury of of Newton. Mr. Gibbs was only in his sixtieth year, but had a full, strong career.

Dr. A. C. Dixon, the lion from Baltimore, preached two Sundays at Tremont Temple, and addressed the Evangelical Alliance at Park Street Church, March 13.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

Dr. Villers had no sooner announced his going to Portland, Ore., than another strong man in our Detroit ministry, Rev. C. A. Daniel, who has served the First German-American Baptist church for over eight years, confessed that Chicago had won his acceptance to a large and difficult task in the Second City. We are very sorry to lose our brother. He has not only been the leader in his own nationalistic group but he has ever been a willing and capable worker in all our larger denominational activities. The Detroit Union will greatly miss him as first vice-president and chairman of the missionary department. We sincerely congratulate Chicago upon his acquisition which will occur about May 1.

Rev. Peter MacKay, for six years the efficient pastor of Birmingham church, now in the Detroit metropolitan area, has resigned to accept the pastorate of Trinity Church, Cleveland. Detroit and Michigan are sorry to lose this splendid brother. He has grown to full maturity in Christian service in Michigan and has long been a wise and capable leader.

Judge Freeman spent a full day with Detroit and Michigan Baptists on Friday, March 3. First there was a luncheon with prominent Baptist laymen at the Detroit Athletic Club. At four o'clock at the Woodward Avenue church, Director Grant M. Hudson had called a conference of Michigan laymen outside of Detroit and at eight o'clock at the same place, a mass meeting of representatives from the Detroit churches was held. Judge Freeman was at his best, although his strenuous campaign is very wearing. He was most cordially received and his earnest heart-to-heart messages made telling effect. Notwithstanding the great building campaign Detroit has been, is and must continue in, on her own account, the Detroit churches will faithfully endeavor to make good on past pledges and new endeavors, especially on the woman's campaign. Our faithful women are earnestly at work on their big objective for Kalamazoo College.

Jefferson Avenue Church had a glad night Tuesday, March 7, when its new pastor, Rev. A. V. Allen was installed with appropriate ceremony. His father, Rev. E. R. Allen, of Bay City, preached the sermon for this, his fourth and youngest preacher son. Dr. H. C. Gleiss, with whom the new pastor had worked so faithfully and happily for two years as director of religious education for the Detroit Baptist Union, offered the installation prayer. Rev. C. A. Daniel gave the charge to the new pastor and Dr. J. W. Hoag gave the charge to the church. Felicitations were offered by neighboring pastors and refreshments were served to a happy audience of more than 400. The new pastorate opens most auspiciously.

Sunday afternoon, March 5, Rev. J. S. Fazekas, of New Brunswick, N. J., was installed as pastor of the First (Delray) Hungarian Baptist church. The auditorium of the church was filled with members and friends and visiting friends from other churches and groups. Mr. D. Fanchall presided. Rev. G. L. Wittet told of beginnings. A. H. Finn spoke for the Detroit Union and Dr. Gleiss gave the charge to the pastor and the church. It proved a very happy occasion.

At this same service the semi-annual report of the church treasurer was gratifying, due in large measure to a Storehouse Tithers' League which had been functioning for five months. On this day the Sunday school broke all previous records for attendance. The average attendance for the last six months has been about 50 per cent larger than in previous years.

A Significant Opportunity Passing

By DR. WILLIAM J. SLY

It is gratifying to learn that over 250 young people of foreign parentage in our Baptist foreign-language Bible schools throughout the land have already registered in the young people's essay contest which closes May 1. The first essay to arrive is from a Russian girl, 16 years old, who has been in this country only seven years and in school only three years. The second is from an Italian girl aged fourteen years, in Camden, N. J.

Fourteen nationalities are already represented. The contest awards $100, $50, and $25 for the three best essays of 1,500 words on the subject, "The Value of a Higher Christian Education to Young People of Foreign Parentage in the United States." It is open to all young people of foreign parentage between fourteen and twenty-one years of age, members of a Baptist Bible school. Essays must be sent by May 1. Award will be made June 1. Pastors, knowing of promising foreign-language young people, can render no finer service for them than to secure their interest in this contest. Six weeks remain, giving ample time, if leaders act quickly. Further information or enrolment slips may be obtained of William J. Sly, director of religious education for New Americans, American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

REV. L. C. MOREHOUSE

Lewis Cass Morehouse was born in Portland, Mich., Feb. 2, 1845. After his sixteenth birthday he was baptized in Looking Glass river uniting with the church of which his father was deacon. He was educated for the law, taking his degree at Ann Arbor in 1867, but after practicing his profession at Urbana, Ill., for a year or two, he decided to devote himself to the Christian ministry. He entered the University of Chicago from which he was graduated in April, 1878. During his student years he organized the Baptist Church at Farmer City, Ill., and served as supply at Mahomet. Oct. 17, 1878, he was married to Miss Katie H. Wardall of Tolono, Ill., and to this union six children were born, all of whom with the widow and three grandsons survive him. Mr. Morehouse held pastorates at Richmond, Ind., and in Illinois at El Paso, Delavan, Winchester and Bradford.

Henderson, conducted the services.

JOHN WILLIAM LYLELL

The death of John William Lyell, D. D., for thirty-two years pastor of First Church of Camden, N. J., is a loss to the denomination and especially to New Jersey and the East. Y., where he served four years. The First Church of

A Cruise to the Orient

By REV. ANDREW W. ARCHIBALD, D. D.
Author of The Bible Verified
The Easter Hope, Etc.

Four maps and 64 illustrations, including the Stadium at Athens, Jaffa Harbor, the Bosphorus, etc. An introduction on the Dramatic Ending of the World War, and chapters on the great world cities of Rome, Athens, Cairo, Karnak or Old Thebes, Constantinople and Jerusalem. Specially suitable for Easter.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton, O.: But few have written as charmingly and profitably of what they saw as this author. The book contains an immense fund of classical, archeological and Biblical lore, made vital by the easy, dramatic style of the author.

The Presbyterian of The South, Richmond, Va.: It gives a brief but very clear summary of the history of the late World War. We have seen nothing on this subject that puts as much that is important in so small a space. The author is gifted in picturing in a few words the objects he describes.

Rev. Paul L. Reynolds in Reporter, Walton, N. Y.:

The clearest exposition of the Treaty of Versailles which the present writer remembers reading. The book is worth possessing for the introduction alone. It is a book for the high school student and college man. It is a book for the public or private library shelf.

Daily Globe, Boston, Mass.: A beautifully written travel book. It not only contains vivid descriptions of the places visited, but much of historical and artistic interest.

Daily Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S. D.: Descriptions of travel to the Orient are as numerous as the proverbial leaves in Vallombrosa. Yet this is a book of Oriental travel that is different. Dr. Archibald is a keen observer and an interesting writer. He can describe vividly the places he visited and make you almost see them.

Deagan
Tubular Tower Chimes
Electrically Operated

I have heard overt
Down the lanes of memory,
Heard them calling,
In the days that used to be,
But the sweetest, purest,
Clearest,
Bringing angel faces
nearest,
Making life divinest,
Dearest,
Are the Old Church
Chimes to me.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

Henry Hallam Sanderson
25 Beacon St., Boston 9, Mass.

Camden called him to succeed Dr. Winn. Long years of service won him a high place in the city's life where he served on hospital, library and other boards of public institutions. He was a member of the Board of Managers of the New Jersey Convention for nearly the whole time of his residence in the state and later a member of the executive committee of the Publication Society. He was Secretary of the American Baptist Historical Society for many years and by a wise administration helped to preserve this collection of Baptist historical material. In 1911 Bucknell University conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He made two trips to Europe and 1907 was a member of the Deputation to the Foreign Missionary Society to the Morrison Centenary in Shanghai, China. On January 31 while on a subway train in Philadelphia came an unexpected and immediate summons to eternal life. The funeral services were held in the place where he had ministered so long on February 3, and the historic First Church was crowded out to the street, a sorrowing multitude. Dr. Frank A. Smith of Elizabeth, N. J., presided at the services. Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, of the Publication Society, read the Scriptures. President Milton G. Evans of Crozer Seminary spoke words of appreciation and Rev. Benjamin P. Hope of Media, Pa., and a seminary classmate offered prayer. He is survived by Mrs. Lyell, and four children, Mrs. William Gross, Helen, John, Jr., and Howard.

Our Book Shelf

Spiritism in Antiquity, by Lewis Bayles Paton. New York: The Macmillan Company. $3.50.

Prof. Paton of Hartford Seminary covers a wide field of investigation. He shows that all manifestations known to psychical research, hypnotism, somnambulism, dream, visions, second sight, mind reading, telepathy and the like, were well known to the Hebrews, Indo Europeans, Chinese, Egyptians, Babylonians and Assyrians. With a wealth of quotation and illustration belief in spirits is traced through the various traditions. The story of the Hebrew people is studied to see what were the earliest beliefs about the dead and the steps of progress in the Old Testament. It is shown that in the time of Jesus four theories of the future life prevailed; that of the Sadducees, the Pharisees, the Hellenists, which divided into two schools. Fresh light must be thrown on the problem, "that light came in Him through whose life and teaching and rising from the dead, life and immortality have been brought to light." Then follows a reverent study of the teachings of Jesus regarding immortality. The book is a fresh confirmation that man has an unquenchable instinct for immortality; that even in the most primitive breasts stir faint hopes and expectations too strong to be denied.

Concerning the Soul, by James Alex. Robertson. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $2.25.

A study of the soul, of absorbing interest, marked by spiritual insight and understanding. Of the utmost value to preachers and teachers. Various books on the soul have been issued in recent years, but this measures up well with any of them. Some of the chapter headings follow: Is There a Soul? What Is It? Whence Comes It? Whither Does It Go?

The Over-soul. The Soul's Work Hereafter. Lost Souls. Do the Souls of the Dead ever Return?

See Europe, Palestine, Passion Play

NATURALNESS

IN coining a term for one of the most essential things for a successful singer I am going to use the word—naturalness. In this word lies the great secret for many would-be singers who are struggling to achieve some measure of success but are hindered by something which they, or their teachers, are at a loss to diagnose. Some persons learning to drive an automobile grip the steering wheel with both hands as if life or death depended on the amount of grip. Their hands become strained and cramped, their muscles are tightened and are prevented from working freely, whereas the muscles should be relaxed and the hands and arms free from strain to secure the best results with least fatigue. In so many kinds of work this happens.

So, with a great many singers, the moment they begin to sing, the muscles of the throat and mouth automatically tighten and hinder the effective working of the organs, the free and natural play of which is the chief requisite in successful and satisfactory singing.

Just as the driver of the automobile puts a hindering strain on the muscles of the hands and arms, so the unnatural singer hinders the work of the singing muscles by putting a strain on them, and hereby hindering them from working naturally.

Some teachers are to blame to a certain degree when they fill the mind of the pupil beginner with awe-inspiring scientific terms, telling of glottis, larynx, diaphragm, in this manner filling the pupil's head with thoughts of something fearful and unnatural. Consequently, the moment he pupil begins to make a musical sound, these terms dash to his mind and subconsciously his muscles tighten unnaturally, due to the association with his idea of these terms. Better results would probably be obtained by getting the pupil to feel effects from his own tone, using natural everyday phrases in getting him to place his tone. Let him sing several tones and when he produces a good tone, make him realize that all his tones must be like that one, forward on his teeth or upward towards the roof of his mouth. Much of the unnatural muscle straining would by this means be gotten rid of and the results quicker and more satisfactory. Scientific terms do not make for pure singing. It is all well and good for a thorough teacher to now all about these, but why fill a pupil's head with dread of all these horrible words when, after all, the only thing is to be natural?—ERNEST H. SHEPPARD in The Musical Observer.

EASY ORGAN COLLECTIONS

Several requests have come in from readers of this page for aid in locating books of music for organ, devotional in nature, not cheap or banal in tone, but of a grade of difficulty that would not embarrass the organist who cannot give the time necessary for virtuoso achievement; what was wanted was good music, pleasing to the congregation and grateful to the player. To all desiring such material I am glad to recommend a series of our books of fine organ music published by the White-Smith Music Co., Boston, Mass.: "The Church Festival Organist," compiled by Hartz (2.00); "Works of the Russian Masters," arranged by Harvey B. Gaul ($1.00); "The Junior Church Organist," edited by Morse ($1.50); "The Progressive Organist," edited by la Villa ($1.50).

Additional titles will be printed in this corner in a week or so, as soon as I can verify some questions as to exact titles. From some letters which have come to me, there is apparent some little misunderstanding of the publisher's addresses printed in these columns. It is not essential that music be ordered from each separate individual address. Any dealer can and will get any or all the numbers specified here.

THE FUTURE OF THE

Foremost thinkers in the American Church will discuss

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY announces a thorough-going and unhampered discussion of fundamental questions dealing with the basic structure of the church, and leading up to no less searching an inquiry than this:

Is the Church as We Now Have It a Competent Organ of Religion as We Now Conceive It?

The discussion will start with a searching examination of the forces and tendencies in the larger units of organized Christianity—that is, the several denominations. ¶Are the denominations still characterized by their original genius and significance, or have their distinctive ideas and aims passed over into the common possession of Christendom? ¶How do the issues define themselves in the several denominations with respect to modern theology and the new social vision? At what peculiarly sensitive spots in each denomination does modernism clash with tradition? ¶Is the denominational apparatus equal to the great task of present day Christianity? ¶Are the present denominational groups moving toward a general coalescence, or toward further splits into still more denominations? Or is the entire denominational order moving toward collapse to make way for a distinctly different type of religious organization? The scope of the discussion is indicated by the following partial list of themes and writers:

The Future of the Methodists

Inside View, by DR. ERNEST F. TITTLE, minister of Methodism's cathedral church at Evanston, Chicago.

Outside View, by DR. WILLIAM E. BARTON, a Congregationalist, moderator of the Congregational National Council.

The Future of the Baptists

Inside View, by DR. W. H. P. FAUNCE, president of Brown University.

Outside View, by BISHOP FRANCIS J. MCCONNELL, a Methodist.

The Future of the Congregationalists

Inside View, by DR. ALBERT PARKER FITCH, professor of the History of Religion, Amherst College.

Outside View, by DR. LYNN HAROLD HOUGH, a Methodist, minister Central church, Detroit.

Other denominations—UNITARIAN, LUTHERAN, ROMAN CATHOLIC, FRIENDS, and still others—will be included in later announcements. The examination will be carried to the very foundations of the denominational system. Pro and con, the relation of denominationalism to Christianity will be considered, introduced by two articles:

“An Apologetic for the Denomination”

By BISHOP THOMAS NICHOLSON of the Methodist Church

“The Denomination as a Hindrance to Religion”

By DR. OZORA S. DAVIS, president Chicago Theological Seminary

THIS GREAT SERIES IS ABOUT TO BEGIN PUBLICATION!

The Future of the Episcopalians

The Future of the Presbyterians Outside View, by DR. ORVIS F. JORDAN, a Disciple, minister First church, Evanston.

The Future of the Disciples of Christ

Inside View, by DR. W. E. GARRISON, dean Disciples Divinity House, The University of Chicago.

DENOMINATIONS

is theme in The Christian Century during the year 1922

NEVER in the history of American religious journalism has there been so eager and widespread a response to a program of complete freedom in the discussion of Christian themes as that which The Christian Century is receiving. Thoughtful churchmen, both lay and clerical, in all communions are enthusiastic subscribers. They rejoice in a journal of religion which, without displacing denominational organs, undertakes squarely to face the problems of this new age without regard to denominational interests. The discovery—and it has been a discovery—that a periodical can be religious and at the same time free, positive and at the same time liberal in its hospitality to all enlightened points of view, has seemed to thousands of unsatisfied hearts like coming upon a refreshing spring of living water in a desert place. The influence of The Christian Century extends into all the communions of the American church. It is equally at home among the Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Disciples, Baptists, Episcopalians and other Christian groups. Its subscription list is an album of the signatures of the church leaders of the nation. Besides, it is gripping the minds of thinking men and women who have no church connection. They are astonished that from within the church which they supposed had become moribund and incurably denominationalized in its vision there should emerge a journal loyal to the church, devout and evangelical, and at the same time as free as a university class room. And they stand amazed to find themselves actually enjoying a religious paper! Churchmen and earnest minded non-churchmen are saying that The Christian Century is pointing the way toward a new day for Christian faith and practice.

If Any One Should Ask You, You Can Say

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

1. Reports that 24 states had from 25 to 100 per cent increase in the number of their converts during 1920-1921.
2. Is receiving good reports from its Latin American fields where Cuba alone reports 300 baptisms in 1920-1921.
3. With the Publication Society is sending missionaries on Chapel Cars into remote areas where the demand for this type of work was never greater.
4. Is affording educational advantages to men who wish to prepare for a ministry among their particular foreign-speaking groups, in the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, New Jersey.

The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society

1. Reports 2,665 baptisms on its fields during the course of the year.
2. Supported 472 missionaries, teachers and matrons on 196 fields during the last year.
3. Has enlisted 833 volunteers in 134 churches through its Christian Americanization Department to render service to the strangers within our gates.
4. Reports as a partial summary of the work 90,536 religious calls made; 11,375 industrial classes held; 2,809 daily vacation Bible school sessions taught; 9,732 Sunday school sessions assisted in; 2,133 Young People's meetings held; and 2,763 Women's meetings conducted.

Furthermore

The Two Societies Working in Cooperation

1. Have 26 men and women laboring among 14 Indian tribes. Twenty churches have been established, and schools are connected with practically all of the Indian missions.
2. Have made great strides in Negro work. Twenty-five new churches have been opened in Detroit in the past 2 years. In Chicago a great Hebrew Temple has been bought for Negroes, and Christian Centers for their use have been opened in Cleveland and Detroit. A Training School for leaders in Chicago was the last great step.
3. Have furnished for New Americans this past year a church for Serbians and Croats in Detroit; A Christian Center for the Poles of Chicago; three new workers for the Chinese mission in San Francisco; a new Christian Center for Hungarians and a mission for Spanish-speaking people in Brooklyn; and a fine church for Slovaks in Minneapolis.
4. Face opportunities on all their fields such as they have never known before. Closed doors are swinging open everywhere. But—many stations are still poorly equipped and undermanned, workers are struggling with burdens too heavy for them, and debts threaten to strangle the work. WILL YOU GET UNDER THE LOAD AND LIFT?

NEW BOOKS WORTH OWNING

Modern Money Methods for the Church

By FREDERICK A. AGAR

The object of the author is to suggest ways whereby the local church may be delivered from unwise financial methods, and to outline a plan adapted to provide adequate financial resources for both the local and the wider Christian enterprise. "Giving is not a matter of legislation, but of life"; "Living and giving in a spiritual sense are synonymous." These two quotations show the atmosphere of this eminently practical book.

By-Paths to Forgotten Folks

By COE HAYNE

Mr. Hayne has not taken cross-sections of fact, he has transplanted it alive. His stories of home mission work bring us into immediate contact with the living factors of human interest. It is as if we visited the homes of Indians, Alaskans, Nicaraguans, ranchmen, and foreign-speaking people, and made personal acquaintance with them and with the men and women who are the hand and the tongue of Christian concern for them.

The World Lighted

A Study of the Apocalypse
By CHARLES EDWARD SMITH, D.D.

A discussion characterized by great commonsense and striking insight. The interpretation is historical and yet it is broader than the historical. It is free from offensive literalism. The author steers remarkably clear of the absurd mixture of literalism and symbolism. Altogether it is the most rational interpretation that has yet appeared. In fact, it ought to be an epochal book in the study of the Apocalypse.

How to Conduct a Church Vacation School

By ALBERT H. GAGE

This is a timely treatment of a most important subject by an eminently well-qualified author. It is the result of actual experience in promoting, conducting, and supervising Church Vacation Schools. It is written for pastors, Sunday school workers, and young people who are interested in the conduct of a week-day school during the vacation period. This manual may be closely followed to great advantage at every point. Illustrated.

Makers of the Bible

By HERMON H. SEVERN

A manual of information about the processes through which the Bible came to be and was handed down.

The author's theme, the history of the Bible from the lost books that preceded it, through the story of its making, its early readers and translators, down to modern reconstruction of the best text from the manuscripts, necessarily occupies most of his attention. Scholarly in knowledge, clear in statement, he is also deeply reverent in spirit.

The Withered Fig Tree

Studies in Stewardship

By EDWIN M. POTEAT

The author's purpose is to make clear the fundamental principles underlying the Stewardship movement and to furnish a basis for the organization of local leagues or groups of Christian stewards. Authentic personal testimonies reinforce the argument. The book is arranged for the use of classes, questions that will stimulate discussion and afford themes for debate being attached to each chapter.

Constructive Evangelism

By INGRAM E. BILL

The writer's aim is to show the interrelations of evangelism with religious education and social service. His work combines a statement of the principles of the new evangelism with a practical manual of methods and a challenging appeal to service. A serviceable list of books on evangelism, religious education, story-telling, music, social service, and methods, is appended.

Real Gratitude

We have no greater joy, no greater reward than that which comes to us when our subscribers take time to write a word of encouragement and conclude with a message something like this: "Your paper has meant so much to me that I could not keep the good news all to myself. I found one of my brother church members who had in his home Judge, The Fireside and the Toledo Blade. I convinced him that he needed a journal not in this high-brow class and he sends by me $2.50 for a year's subscription to THE BAPTIST." It is by such expressions of gratitude that our list grows.

Killam's Kollum

Dr. White's Quartet

In the issue of THE BAPTIST bearing the date of March 18 you doubtless noticed on the young people's page a most fitting cut of a male quartet. We understand that this cut also appears on a promotion envelope for the St. Paul Convention. It is effective. We had one subscription stopped on its account. One person, who did not sign his name, writes: "Is there no salt left in the Baptist denomination? This is a suitable picture for a vaudeville show." Answer: We sometimes believe that there is more "salt" than sense left in the denomination. We would wager (if it were right for editors to bet) that the person who thus took offense was born full grown. He never had the pleasure of being a boy. He should be pitied not censured. As to the quartet we can lead any reader to Baptist churches where the quartet makes no better impression, in fact it is the naturalness of the thing which lends it interest. It is so human.

Beautiful Spring

Beautiful spring is here. We did not learn this from either the almanac or the thermometer, but from the mass of spring poetry coming to our desk. One contributor sent verses commemorating the death of a friend which nearly caused another fatality in this office. Brothers and sisters, we know how you feel at this season of the year but will you not be good enough to try out your verses on neighbors and friends before sending them to THE BAPTIST? Poets are so temperamental!

Here He Has His Hearing

Rev. B. J. Minort is pastor at Alliance, Neb. He writes a very encouraging letter. He says: "Every once in a great while you hit the nail instead of your thumb. I was astounded at your courageous onslaught on the denominational jumping jacks. I am happy to find that you were able in less than six years to learn this 'seventh' thing. I approve. But what about the denominational newspaper jumping jacks? Out of the million and a quarter of Baptists how many are ever heard from in the pages of 'our paper'? Even the Forum is a place to air the notions of these jumping jacks. They are always rising in defense of some 'time-honored' doctrine which is about to fall before the 'designing heretic' in denominational pulpit or press, or they find it necessary to correct the rest of us on doctrine or practice." My good brother, it is hard enough for most of our readers to practice what a few of us preach. After they have done the practicing about so long they lose their ambition to preach. Those of us who have so much to say find it easier to preach than to practice and you know how lazy is poor human nature.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. C. Wallace Petty, of New York City has been called to the First Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mrs. Sylvia Russell, at present head of a mountain school at St. Helens, Ky., has been called to the presidency of Onelda Institute and will take charge on April 15. She is a woman of remarkable administrative ability and large things are expected of her. Mr. T. L. Adams, who has been acting president the last four years, resigned early in the year and Mr. L. D. Sandlin has been in charge.

March 12-19 was observed as dedication week at the First Church, Elgin, Ill., when the remodeled and completely equipped new edifice was dedicated to the worship of God. When the former building was badly damaged in the cyclone of two years ago, the church gave itself at once with all zeal to the question of a new and better church. Previous to the day of dedication there had been raised the sum of approximately $91,000, and on that day there was raised in addition $41,004, or $6,000 more than was asked for. The new structure is one of which the entire community is proud and in which there is every facility for modern church work. Rev. A. D. McGlashan is pastor.

The nineteenth annual convention of the Religious Education Association is to be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, March 29-April 1. All meetings will be open to the public.

Dr. James H. Franklin, foreign secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, is making a hurried trip to China. Greatly as he disliked being out of the United States at this critical time in denominational history, his duty to the missionaries on the field at a time when China is seething with unrest, backed up by urgent calls from them and from Dr. Robbins, led him to his decision. The foreign secretary of our Southern Board has been in China for some time and Dr. Speer of the Presbyterian Board has recently hurried there.

The second annual Religious Book Week is being observed by publishers and others during April 2-8. The cut on the cover comes to us from the New York headquarters of this movement. We may all concede that not enough religious books find their way into our homes. One publisher is using the slogan, "Give your pastor a book." Why not resolve for yourself to purchase for your own home at least six significant religious books during the coming year?

On account of the increasing demand for lectures a new stereopticon depository has been opened in California in the office of the Northern California State Convention, and all people in that region wishing lectures should write to Rev. C. W. Brinstad, 408 Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco. Seven lectures are now available, namely: F5, The Gospel in Japan; F36, The Baptist World Challenge Abroad; F41, Of Such is the Kingdom; FH97, Hymn of the Continents; H101, The Baptist World Challenge at Home; H109, Immigrants All; H117, Baptist Schools and Colleges.

The date of the corner-stone laying for the National Baptist Memorial to Religious Liberty has been set for Saturday afternoon, April 22. Secretary of State Hughes is to make the address. Continuation services are planned for the next day. It is expected that a number of leading Baptists from North and South will be in attendance upon this ceremony. All Baptists planning to attend are requested to notify the executive secretary, Gove C. Johnson, 3131 13th St., Washington, D. C.

Dr. Eldon H. Lovett, pastor of the Lefferts Park Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., died suddenly on March 18 at the age of seventy. Funeral services were held on Tuesday evening, March 21, at the Lefferts Park Church and were conducted by Dr. John M. Moore. Burial was in Davenport, Iowa, where services were conducted in Calvary Church on March 22 by Rev. A. Frank Houser. Dr. Lovett was born in Lincoln, Me., and was a graduate of Shurtleff College and of the school which afterwards became Colgate Theological Seminary. He has been in Brooklyn eleven years. Some of the more notable of his earlier pastorates were at Calvary Church, Davenport, Iowa; the churches at Oswego and Walton, N. Y.; and the East Avenue Church in Long Island City. Dr. Lovett is survived by two sons, Rev. William P., executive secretary of the Detroit Citizens League, and A. H., of Davenport, Iowa; and by two daughters, Mrs. Rose E. Partridge, wife of Prof. E. A. Partridge of the East Rochester High School, and Mrs. Lena D. Barker, wife of Prof. F. D. Barker of the University of Nebraska. Mrs. Lovett died on Feb. 28.

The Bengal-Orissa Mission took an advanced step in the matter of Indian leadership by asking Mr. C. N. Mohapatra, a lawyer prominent in the Baptist church at Balasore, to take charge of the Santipore station, now without a missionary. This Indian gentleman, a college graduate and a man of large influence in the mission, accepted this call and began work at Santipore in February at a salary of 150 rupees a month. This is about one third his former income as a lawyer.

News comes of the safe arrival, after months of travel, of our missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. Dryden L. Phelps, at their field in Chengtu on the western frontier of China. Mr. Phelps is foreign pastor of the First Church of San Francisco.

Dr. William Axling sailed for his field in Japan from San Francisco, March 18. During his fourteen months in America he has spoken 253 times, had personal interviews aplenty, written articles for the press galore, written hundreds of letters, and traveled something over 32,000 miles. The trip from Tokyo to Nebraska and return adds another 15,000 miles. He writes on the day before sailing, "Thus have I rested. Yet it has been a time of great privileges and wonderful blessings for all of which I am profoundly grateful. But the best part of a furlough is the return to the field."

Rev. J. C. Dent, superintendent of the northern district of the Illinois state convention, is to hold special meetings in the First Church, Freeport, April 2-16, and in the First Church, Sterling, April 23-May 7.

THE BAPTIST has received an official communication, signed for the council of Danish Baptist churches of Iowa by L. Thompson, which reads: "A council was called by the Pine Creek Church, Iowa, March 9, to investigate certain charges of immorality against Rev. H. Tonder, who up to recently has been the pastor of said church. The council found the charges to be true and by unanimous vote revoked his rights and privileges as an ordained Baptist minister. Furthermore, said council recommended to the church to have Mr. Tonder expelled from its membership."

Rev. A. L. Story died on March 6 at Rio Piedras, Porto Rico. He had been in failing health for several months past, but only gave up work about two months ago. He had been in missionary work in South America and the West Indies for over thirty-five years, and at the time of his death was district missionary for the northern district of Porto Rico, under the American Baptist Home Mission Society. He was widely known for his perfect command of pure Spanish, and for his special knowledge of Sunday-school work. While in Cuba several years ago he was joint author of a teacher-training text-book in the Spanish language, which is extensively used in Latin-American mission fields. He leaves a widow and a grown son and daughter, the two last named being in Santiago de Cuba.

A luncheon was given March 15 at the Quadrangle Club of the University of Chicago by former graduates of Rochester Theological Seminary in honor of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour. Dr. Benjamin Otto presided. Dr. Shailer Mathews, dean of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, was an invited guest and spoke, followed by Dr. George W. Taft, president of the Northern Baptist Seminary. Dr. Barbour made the principal address, bringing encouraging news of the seminary and urging the continued thought and prayers of its graduates for that institution. A permanent organization of Rochester men living in Chicago was formed. Dr. Benjamin Otto, secretary of the Baptist Executive Council, was elected president and Rev. Eugene A. Lower, pastor of the Rogers Park Church, secretary. There are thirty-two Rochester men living in Chicago.

Dr. Loren A. Clevenger, evangelist, has held meetings all winter about Boston, Mass., at Woburn, Melrose Highlands, First Boston, Roslindale and now at North Cambridge. The next meeting will be at Trinity, Arlington. Churches desiring Dr. Clevenger's assistance in the early fall must make arrangements before the vacation period in order to be sure of a favorable date.

The Baptist

Wanted: A Revival of Religious Reading

THE call for the fourth annual convention of the Christian Fundamentals Association says: "Every national convention of 1922 will ring with debate about the authority of the Book, the deity of Christ, the effectiveness of the cross, and the purging of infidelity from professorships, pulpits and the printed page." The statement is probably correct. This is a time of theological turmoil. Disciples and Presbyterian and other churches have been affected as well as Baptists. Once again doctrinal discussions are heard on all sides and there are attempts, with varying success, at creedal statements.

The sources of this upheaval of thought are fairly clear. On the one hand, we note that war is always followed by reactionary periods; that certain powerful Bible Institutes, which impart to their graduates an ultra-conservative view of the Bible and the outlook which is connected with premillennialism, have succeeded in placing their men in thousands of our smaller churches and in some of the larger pulpits; that for many years now, beginning with twelve small volumes on "The Fundamentals," literature of a particular theological type has been diligently distributed all over the country; that there are groups of ultra-conservatives who are always present and always militant. Over against these has been a small amount of really radical teaching by men in positions of some importance.

On the other hand, there has been a decline of doctrinal preaching. The demand has been for "practical" sermons. And the voice of the people has been followed to such an extent that large numbers do not know just what they believe or why. Many wise pastors have preached doctrine without putting labels on it, but thousands have swung over to an easy-going, uninstructed evangelistic type of preaching. There has grown up, accordingly, a generation of theologically and denominationally ignorant church people.

The result, as always, is that powerful, popular leaders sway people to their will. In the Baptist churches the trouble is largely a preachers' fight. The laymen hardly understand what it is all about. But they do not want to be thought disloyal to the faith, they are disturbed by denunciations of "higher criticism," evolution," and the schools, and hasten to give their support to the party which seems safest.

Out of this there has come at the present time a new interest in doctrine. People are asking questions of their pastors. They are writing letters to the denominational papers. They are talking of confessions of faith. They are learning again to make distinctions in thought. Ultimately there will come to pass a better-informed Christian body, provided wise use is made of the present situation.

The practical question is as to what pastors and churches should do now. Pastors will, of course, take means to instruct their people both through sermons and classes. But they will also help stimulate the present interest in theological reading. The total number of new books published in the United States in 1921 was 8,329. Of these 595 dealt with religion and theology. Many of the best books of all time are religious books. The present generation cannot afford to neglect some of those which were dear to the fathers. But at the same time each generation thinks in its own terms and uses its own phraseology. Books like those of Harry Emerson Fosdick will do more for the average college man today than "Pilgrim's Progress." Swain's "What and Where is God?" will answer questions for the modern mind as some older theologies will not. Some pastors are finding it profitable to commend to their people worth-while books. Some churches are, through church libraries, promoting the circulation of religious books. Women's missionary societies, through their reading circles, are doing the same thing. All these books will be judged finally according to their religious values. Do they really accomplish things worth-while in the religious life?

No book, of course, can take the place of the Bible but many can interpret it. We must take care to test the book by the Bible and not the Bible by the book.

Baptists can never take pride in being an uneducated people. The same Lord who made the heart made the mind also. The great commandment calls for the love of both mind and heart. Understanding comes through sympathy. Happy married life depends on the possession by husband and wife of at least a few common interests. So our love for God will increase as we use our intellects in attaining greater knowledge of him and of his thoughts. We must pass from intellectual childhood to maturity if we are to know all there is to be known of God. The period of religious discussion among Baptists should be therefore a time of religious reading. Let there be debate, but let the debaters know something of the subjects on which they are talking and not merely be reworking, however skilfully, inherited phrases. The issue at stake is the future of our Baptist heritage.

Editorial Comment

SACRIFICIAL GIVING

"I have no fault to find with the one who made that 'one week's salary' proposition but I'm amazed at your printing it. . . . Imagine how it feels to people who are giving six months' salary at this juncture. Have you no waste basket? . . . I should imagine that the fact that our missionaries are giving one month's salary would have prevented such a 'ten-cent proposition.'" This is part of a letter from one whose love for and loyalty to Christ's kingdom is beyond any question. He sees so clearly the vast needs; he understands so thoroughly the crisis we face in our work; he knows so well that nothing short of real sacrificial giving will save the day that he fears any "ten-cent proposition."

The brother is right. Every Baptist who can by extreme sacrifice give six months' salary is warranted in doing so now. This amount in cash during April will mean more than the face value of the gift, for it will help to save us from a crushing debt and the depression of such an event. Some Baptists will be constrained in the light of world needs to give the income for the whole year and others will give from their principal as well. We have not overworked those in our constituency who can give in "six figures." We must put forth every effort to awaken and develop "giving until it hurts."

On the other hand we cannot afford to forget that the majority of Baptists are just folks. They find it necessary to practice a rigid economy to care for their families, educate their children and lay aside a very modest amount for old age. How many of our ministers have anything saved for the day of sickness or death? They are fortunate to have a few thousand dollars in life insurance. These men are usually in forefront in making their gifts to the work of the denomination. "My wife gave her boy to the missionary cause before his birth. (He is now in India.) I am making an extra gift of $50 to help lift the debt. She put the subscription in the N. W. M. higher than I thought I could afford. I, however, approved her standard, and I am sure that now from her place in glory she approves this 'supplement' to her gift." This is from one of many letters we have received recently. See also the letter in this issue which Judge Freeman calls the best letter since he took up the work. In a western state an old man and his wife faced the denominational situation. They were miles from a Baptist church. They decided to send their gift through THE BAPTIST. A week ago a money order for $50 came from this old woman. "Send it where it will help the most." She then told us that after deciding to make this gift her husband had suddenly died but that it was his gift as well as her own. It was the savings of an entire year.

We must have large gifts from all persons who can make them. We must pay up our pledges in full, even if we have to use our credit to do it. "What, you do not mean that a man should borrow money to pay his N. W. M. obligations?" Why not? We pay for our homes in this way and some folks pay for their furniture and automobiles on instalment plan. Practically all men in business use their credit. Why make an exception in the Lord's business?

The fact that puts heart into us is that the measure of success of the movement to date is largely due to the loyalty of the common Baptist folks. The measure of success in this crisis will depend in a large measure upon the sacrificial giving of these same faithful friends who thought they had done their best. We need "six figure" gifts. We should seek such gifts but we get comfort out of the thought that in that day which is after tomorrow some gifts which now seem great may shrivel and some which now seem so small may expand into "six figures" for all the gifts will be measured in the terms of sacrifice.

THE COMMON GARDEN VARIETY

At a recent Colby dinner in Boston, President Roberts, in his after-dinner speech which was full of happy references to what the college has done and is doing in the way of making the world a better place to live in, said, in speaking of various kinds of hyphenated Baptists, that Colby would continue to be a religious and Baptist institution, "of the common garden variety."

That was well said of a college which has done good service in the world. We raise the question whether the phrase may not also be used of the rank and file of Baptists in the North. We have various kinds of extremists, some of whom belong at one end and some at the other, but the great majority of us are of the "common garden variety." If only there may arise men and women of the degree of common sense needed to make this plain, we shall pass through and happily survive most of our difficulties.

AS TO PAPAL INNOVATIONS

In the March 16 issue of the Word and Way, THE BAPTIST is berated because of what it said on "Protestant Confessional." There is nothing surprising in such an attack. We are quite accustomed to that. But in this case, the quotations used are taken not direct from THE BAPTIST but from sentences which appeared in the Literary Digest. The entire editorial appeared in our issue of Feb. 4. The Word and Way has THE BAPTIST on exchange. If it had lost the copy we should have been glad to have sent another. What was urged in the editorial was that the pastor or some other official of the church should set aside a time on Sunday afternoon or on some other appropriate day when he could certainly be found in a definite place by men and women who had personal troubles or questions which they wished to lay before him for his advice and help. And this is called a "papal innovation," and we are told that "the church itself is the place where men and women can pour out their heart to the Saviour himself—without an intervening clergyman." What then is the purpose of the pastoral call? "It is shocking and disgusting," we are told, "to see our Baptist churches trying to adopt the forms and ceremonies of the ritualist." We suspect that our contemporary has been misled by a word. In any case we would suggest that if a Baptist periodical is to be attacked for its utterances, it is a good thing for the attacker to read the utterances in question. Otherwise people will suspect his motives or his knowledge.

A MATTER OF CREDIT

There came to the office of THE BAPTIST recently the story of a church which had decided deliberately to withdraw its pledges to the New World Movement. The matter was announced from the pulpit and every member told that he need consider himself under no further obligation. A banker heard of what had taken place and gave orders that if there came into the bank any person asking credit, he should be asked whether he were a member of this Baptist church. Should he answer in the affirmative credit was to be denied. This rule, moreover, would apply to the church itself and to all new members as well as to present members. The banker argued that if a Christian body deliberately renounced pledges which it had solemnly made, neither it nor its members were honest, and therefore could not be trusted.

We put the question up to you, Was this banker right? How would you like to be a member of that kind of a church?

SWEDEN'S GRAND OLD MAN

In another column will be found a short review of the life and work of Dr. Broady, news of whose death has recently arrived in this country. Dr. Broady has in reality been a citizen of two countries, although technically he has always retained his American citizenship. If in the United States he fought bravely during the Civil War, he has in his later years rendered no less valiant service in Sweden in the cause of evangelical Christianity. And he will be sincerely mourned in both countries by a host of men and women who love him not only for the work he has done but also for the splendid personal qualities which he possessed. A great leader has fallen but only after he has done a work which will bring forth fruit for generations to come.

MOVE DENOMINATIONAL HEADQUARTERS WESTWARD

Many motives conspired, when the New World Movement of Northern Baptists was inaugurated, in the fixing of headquarters in New York. Now it has come to pass that practically all our organizations have their headquarters in that city. The Foreign Mission Society broke all of its century-old traditions and moved from Boston. The Woman's Home Society moved from Chicago. The new officials were located there.

THE BAPTIST desires to raise the question whether this centralization of all denominational headquarters on the eastern seaboard has been justified by the results. Are our officers themselves satisfied?

The editors do not at this moment presume to answer these questions. But they do feel that there is truth in the charge that New York, in comparison with the country as a whole, is provincial; that it is very likely to be out of touch with the currents of thought and feeling which are moving in the country as a whole; that much added expense is incurred in locating officials who must be constantly on the move at one extremity of the country; and that there are good reasons for debating seriously the question whether the time has not come when denominational headquarters should be moved farther West.

The Methodists are gradually concentrating their offices in Chicago. Many believe that Baptists should do the same. If, as is claimed, the center of Baptist population is somewhere between Buffalo and Cleveland, should not the headquarters be at least as far West as Cleveland? If we wish to develop a constantly enlarging constituency in the West, should not headquarters be in Chicago? It will be answered, of course, that the headquarters of foreign mission work in all denominations is in New York. But does this really answer the question we have raised?

MRS. HAKES CELEBRATES 102d BIRTHDAY

On March 26, Mrs. Anna W. Hakes, mother of Mrs. M. C. Treat of California and of Mrs. Chas. W. Gale of Connecticut celebrated her 102d birthday. This fact is interesting in itself, but it is of the more concern to the denomination when it is remembered that it was in her honor that the Hakes Memorial Church, the first church to be erected on one of the islands of the Inland Sea in Japan, was given. We all join in doing honor to this beloved sister in Christ, whose good works have been in evidence for so many years and whose name will be known in Christian service half around the world for decades to come.

THE UNORTHODOX FUNDAMENTALISTS

Dr. L. R. Scarborough, president of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, has written recently in the Western Recorder on "The Weakness of the Fundamentalists." With their stand against radicalism and materialism he entirely agrees. But he observes with apprehension that they are starting operations in the South and so calls attention to what he regards as weaknesses in the movement. So long as the discussion was purely a northern affair he was interested but not greatly concerned; now that it is becoming a southern matter he is a little worried.

His first criticism is that the leaders in the movement are extreme premillennialists, that in their pastorates they build their whole program around this doctrine and in their conferences make much of it. An over-emphasis on this, he thinks, has crippled their contention for fundamentalism in theology.

"But," he goes on, "in the direction of ecclesiology lies the weakness, if not the heresy of the Fundamentalists. I believe that it is a heresy. Many of their leaders in the North... practice things in ecclesiology that are destructive to the fundamentals of the churches of Jesus Christ. They are alien-immersionists! they receive members from pedo-Baptists, sprinkling churches, without rebaptism. In the main, they are interdenominationals... This form of heresy poisons the very fountains of life in our churches and will eventually destroy the identity and integrity and doctrinal strength of Christ's churches... Loyal orthodox Baptists should be consistent in their whole contention. I claim many of these Fundamentalist leaders are not so."

What a peculiar thing orthodoxy among Baptists is! The ultra-conservative of the North are adjudged heretics in the South.

The Fifth Horseman of the Apocalypse

By H. E. MANSFIELD

I HAVE in my library a terrible book. It is a novel of the war, some say "the novel of the World War." It is written by a Spaniard who brings to his task pitiless logic, stunningly vivid narrative, intense characterization, adequate sources and a classic style. The sobs of a wrecked world lend him theme and matter. He writes with the passion of a devotee. All the elements of greatness are in it—yet it fails. Its title, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"; its author, V. Blasco Ibanez.

It is terrible, of course, for the tragedy it portrays. I know of nothing in literature more pitiful than its closing picture, of a half-demented old man and his stricken wife, dragging themselves, from cross to cross in the war cemeteries searching, searching for the grave of their son, the last of the line. Into the fate of that once proud family he has poured as into a bottle, a draught of bitterness from the lees of a world's despair.

It is more terrible for the matter-of-fact naivete with which he accepts for one cross-section of humanity a code so base, so sordid, so stupidly unclean as to justify, if indeed the code be typical, the war or any other cataclysm within reach of an outraged God wherewith to cleanse the innocent earth of a debauched and hopelessly sunken civilization.

The Missing Horseman

It is most terrible, however, because its brilliant author failed to find in the vision of the seer of Patmos, the Fifth Horseman of the Apocalypse. The four he sees quite clearly and interprets in the main correctly. He finds them in the pageant of the seals, Rev. 6:1-17.

1. The White Horse and his Rider, proud, haughty and admired of men, riding forth conquering and to conquer. Ambitious, he, with the crown of imperial majesty on his head. Sanguine, also, since he carries a bow instead of a sword. He expects to win his place in the sun at long range. He pledges that the turmoil of the battle shall come to his own gates, never. "Nach Paris" is his dream. Big Berthas, the "Gun of Mystery," the Zeppelins over London, the stealthy submarine on the broad seas, fogs of poison gas, these are the arrows, swift, silent, mysterious, wherewith he enlists that blanched-faced traitor, Fear, to undermine the

The sermon here printed was sent to THE BAPTIST by State Supt. LeGrand of Wisconsin in the hope that its social passion would inspire other men to do in rural fields the same kind of work the author is engaged in. Mr. Mansfield, pastor at Wild Rose and Saxeville, Wis., has recently been giving a series of Sunday evening addresses to farmers. These are sermons but of a new type, interpreting God in terms men understand and giving instruction on individual and community tasks. Speaking of his task he says in a personal letter to Mr. LeGrand: "This is a backward country. Culture is low, homes are of indifferent type and furnishings, little machinery is in use, stock is of low grade and poorly managed. How can a church with vision and modern adaptation to needs be built upon such a base? We have to show our folks how to make the most of themselves before they can help make much of the rest of the world. My own folks are bewildered with what has happened. From being scorned and looked down upon with ill-concealed contempt, they find themselves flung into the very center of community interest—their church crowded with people from remote districts, and their program under discussion seriously and respectfully wherever men get together. It is some flop in public sentiment. . . . A product worth noting is that on the intervening Sunday night we had at Wild Rose just double the yearly average attendance." courage of his victims. None were his foes till desperation made them so.

When a lust-drunk science had turned men's hearts to water, the conventional goose-stepping battalions could be trusted to seize the spoil, fasten the manacles, and lead a continent in chains to grace the triumph of "Kultur." But—

2. The Red Horse comes, red with the flames of burning villages, red with the blood of sodden battlefields. The sword is in the saddle after all. Inside the range of mysterious far-flung arrows is soft flesh waiting the thrust of bayonet. Back of the waves of phosgene is still the chance of hand to hand grapple where men in the image of God may kill each other. Over the edge of the verminous trenches, through the lacerating tangles of bloody wire, beyond the spray of death from machine-gun nests is still a man to stab. So, forward! while the Rider of the Red Horse licks his lips sweet with torture, odorous with the balms of mingled curse and prayer. The Rider of the Red Horse is a reactionary. He goes back to the primitive law of fang and claw. But, here is a new thing under the sun:

3. A man of war with a pair of scales in his hand, the Rider of the Black Horse. "Food will win the war," Ibanez calls him "Famine." Wrong, but no matter. Wheat and barley by measure, three to one. Prices fixed by fiat. "Spare the oil" (Save fats.) "Spare the wine" (war time prohibition.) A food dictatorship based on public consent, the "voice from the midst of the four living creatures!" Meatless, wheatless days! The war carried back to the non-combatants! School children signing food pledges! The babe in its mother's arms becomes a soldier on the firing line, and stomaching its unpalatable rye and barley bread, shares emergency rations with those about to die.

4. And then the Livid Horse. Famine, pestilence and plague, usual concomitants of general wars, in this instance reach so far that a fourth part of the earth lies gasping. With him Death and the Grave. No time nor energy to spend in the formal rites of mourning and interment. Let them be buried where they fall. And out of Russian and Chinese cities go creaking the carts, piled high with the dead, to be buried underground "sine patre, sine petitione" wanting priest and prayer.

Love's Wretched Embrace

So poor Ibanez makes an end. He sees nothing beyond. Nothing if we except that one gruesome touch where a war-scarred youth and maiden, in such a setting, in the face of such fathomless agony, wretchedly embrace each other and are left fighting with hideous memories to find standing room for the love that shall excuse the founding of another home in so desolate a world.

If, indeed, these four horsemen are to have the last word in human affairs, the pen of the writer might well palsy and his sick brain cease to function.

But Ibanez did not invent these horsemen. He found them. Where he found them, he might have found beside these and other symbols of warfare still others, the emancipation of woman, the reign of luxury, the genius of commerce, the rise of democracy, the struggle between labor and capital, a corrupt press, a degenerate literature and art, the emergence of an indigenous far eastern culture based on the Christian ethic—and the Fifth Horse and His Rider.

If exiled John of Patmos saw these others from afar, wrote them in a book for us to read and has been justified by the event, need we fear that in this new day but now escaping from the bloody mist, He that is Faithful and True shall fail us? The danger is that we shall fail to read the "Signs of the Times." They call to action not to contemplation, to service not to "watchful waiting," to conquest not to futile calculations of months and days and mystic numerals, for,

The Conquest of the Christ is Just Beginning

What John saw was not a refuge but a rendezvous; not a dress parade, safe and protected behind the battlements of heaven, a strutting display of pomp and power preceding a pitiless descent upon a world already staggering beneath its weight of self-inflicted woe. It would, indeed, be a hollow victory for our Christ to terrorize with angelic trumpets a world already shaking with dread. Before the war, when the world was proud and strong, it might have been another thing. But now, what anticlimax can be conceived more ridiculous than for Christ to appear to smite the earth and find his work more than half done for him by a mad monarch, a stupid jingoism, and a power-drunk handful of red communists.

No! His vesture is still dipped in blood. He comes in grace not wrath. What John saw as Mr. Wilson finely puts it in "The Vision we Forget" was a "Christ on Crusade." A militant Christ, truly, but one whose "sharp sword proceedeth out of his mouth," his name is still "The Word of God," and he has still something to say.

And in our disillusioned bewilderment, our graceless fear, amid the fragments of our shattered civilization, some one with a clear word to speak will be very welcome.

A Closing Phase

Through the centuries the mission of the church has been one of witness. Hampered and belittled by divisions, jealousies and conflicting theologies, the witness has somehow managed to get itself uttered in every generation. The torch has flickered, smoked and stank but it has not gone out. Here and there in the welter, men's hearts have glowed, men's faces shone, and startled souls have caught and obeyed the words of eternal life. It is not an inspiring picture, viewed in the large, but it is an amazing one. Amazing that by any means, across the sordid ages the Christ has lost no whiteness of his glory, has not been smothered in a vast sea of words.

But now the twin Olive trees of witness lie dead in the streets. Rev. 11:3-13. The Beast of commercialism, worldliness, greed and complacency has had his will of them. It is not permitted that they be buried. Taboo. But dead they are, unmistakably, ingloriously dead. Do you remember the horrified cry that went up from the world when the European cathedrals were shelled and destroyed? Why the horror? "Unreplaceable works of art," "the callous destruction of the triumphs of mediaeval genius!" Not a word that they were the shrines of God. Not a word that they were built from the sacrifices of the lowly to honor the Eternal. Not a word of sin relieved, sorrow comforted, life made holy within their walls. Not a word of prayers whispering through the arches or of sainted footsteps echoing among the pillars. Art works, nothing more. The life was out of them, had been for generations, but they must not be buried. So the Catholic witness.

Protestantism's Lacking Statesmanship

Protestantism has built no cathedrals. It has built little else. It has witnessed, yes, and its witness has been honored but we look in vain for one piece of constructive development in Protestantism that betokens statesmanship, a unified vision and concerted action. Like the Olive Tree it has branched, the branches have made luxuriant growth, the growth has even been upward if you choose to pursue the figure, but always at an angle from the sap flow, always by indirection. The war found us speechless, dumb, for the prophetic guiding word. The opportunities of peace find us wavering, discordant, futile.

Paul Hutchinson quotes from the Herald of Asia, the leading liberal weekly of Tokio, Japan, in which the editor summing up his impressions of the recent World's Sunday-School Convention in that city remarks, "The demoralization of religion is beyond description in America; but that is no reason why Japanese Christians should imitate American believers."

Set that puncturing judgment beside Rev. 16:12. Note how in the recent war the historic separation of West from East typified by the Euphrates is dried up, glance at the significant part in the disarmament conference, Chinese and Japanese leaders, Christian or Christian-trained men played and ask if the renaissance of the Christian ethic in power and influence may not be the contribution to the world of the "Kings of the East."

So Protestantism also, by its sister Olive Tree, lies prostrate in the dust. Frantic zealots, blustering up the wind, with vague and bizarre threats of imminent judgments against a "church" caught in the act of apostasizing may save their breath. As prophets they are late by some decades, a fatal disqualification. We face a fact accomplished. That headless, purposeless, "fortuitous concourse" of fragments of dissent called Protestantism is dead. Its failure to fuse under the tremendous heat and pressure of a world influx, its emergence from the ordeal that has welded continents with its elements still prime to each other, neither program, utterance nor vision in common, while the ghost of the murdered Interchurch still walks and mocks, these things spell out not impotence, not exhaustion, not error, not even sin, but death. Its form lingers. It is forbidden to bury it, you remember. Men dare not. It is still a fetish, a talisman, a good-luck swastika, though men laugh over it, exchange gifts around the body and congratulate themselves that the torment of a truly influential Christian prophecy is past. Their congratulations are as premature as the fulminations of the "prophets" are tardy.

But is there no vision in the "church?" you cry, "no hope?"

There are some "visionaries" in the churches and plenty of hope.

Prophets of Tomorrow

These visionaries are the prophets of tomorrow. During the days of a moribund ecclesiasticism they heard the voice from heaven calling, "Come up here." (Rev. 11:12.) And if you will look behind the Fifth Horseman you will see them, clothed in white, garbed with righteousness, enlisted for "duration" with the crusading Christ. They haven't died and gone to heaven. They are being prepared in the heavenly places for the new approach to the task of a new day. They have dared to discard the old shibboleths, the appeal to outworn theological sanctions for their militant message. They have forgotten how to shudder at the solemn averted faces of self-nominated custodians of "Truth." They yield their blood-bought freedom to no dead hands clutching from the past. "One is your master, even Christ" whose scarred palms instinct with prescience and with power still bleed for all men everywhere.

"But are you with the moderns?" I am asked. "What about the old-time religion? Are you recreant to that?"

If by the "old-time religion" is meant the redeeming and sanctifying grace of God, ministered by the blood of the cross, there can be no argument while the blood-dipped vesture of the Leader gleams scarlet in the van. But if you mean the old-time expression of religion and demand that my approach to my share of this crusade shall be along the well-grooved and carefully oiled track of the traditions, whereby it becomes sin to think and blasphemy to deviate, you may as well be looking for a stone to cast, it will doubtless be needed presently.

Win the Whole World

For I am convinced that this Fifth Horseman means none other than the advance on new lines of vision-welcoming minorities under a more poignant urge of personal consecration to win this world for Christ. Really to win it, mind you—individuals, institutions, the whole baffling complexity of it—to win it all for Him.

"Except ye become as little children ye shall not see the kingdom of God." Except ye become as what sort of little children? Some idealization of childhood, sheltered in a good home, carefully nurtured, never feeling the lash of bitter words, never cringing to a blow, never seeing naked vice, never suffering moral atrophy? Or as the little child of a squalid tenement, sweated for meager pennies over buttonholes or basting threads, vermin infested, filth encrusted, bombarded with moral nastiness from the day it opens its eyes on humanity; or, the little child of a cotton mill down south, tied to a machine, breathing lint, robbed of play, mulcted of opportunity, marked for shortened and pitiful life; or, the little child of a backward farm community, isolated and shy, with indifferent school advantages, barren of social contacts, habituated to drudgery, no dreams to ennoble, no taste to inspire, no future to achieve? What picture of childhood does that text call up to you? That's what the Leader with the bloody vesture and the flaming eye seeks to know, and until any child, anywhere, will answer for the Kingdom type, such forces and institutions as lurk behind the robbed and exploited childhood of the world wear the mark of the Beast and there the battle waits.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." The Y. W. C. A. attempts an examination and a fixing of responsibility for the condition of working girls who are their charge and are advised "No thoroughfare; keep off." When they persist, firmly but without malice or prepossession, the word goes out to withdraw support and in this awful winter of unemployment and distress the organization is hampered for lack of funds to extend relief. And the girls? Forget them if you can and you probably can. They haven't found the way to come to Him. Why? He wants to know. His blazing eye searches for the reason in the greed and lust of men. Whatever lies behind the inability of burdened men and women to get to the One who calls them to himself, hours, wages, surroundings, commercialized temptation, neighborhood standards, is fighting ground in this crusade.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." A great denomination, boastful of its democracy, proud of its inheritance of freedom, accepts the challenge and bends its energies to make a measurably visible response. Midway to the goal it falters, halts, creaks to a standstill. Sand in the bearings, heat, smoke and a very bad odor. Blood-brothers of the Christ clan hurl mud and maledictions. "Ye did run well, who hath hindered you?" Somebody wants to know. His eye hot with the passion of thwarted love looks to discover what some one has called the "hypocrisy of loyalty," where pious clamorings of loyalty to a form of words disguises the dull thud of the dynamite under the King's highway.

Rediscovering Sin

Let it not be imagined that we indulge a graceless tirade against the method and the message of another day. Where but under those Olive Trees of witness were recruited those battalions of the high heart who bear a new hope to the world?

Nor may it be justly charged that the vision of today contemplates a social program in which the individual becomes a mere impersonal element in a mechanical problem, a sort of x, y, z to be solved by a formula. What is sought is authority for the personal message. Hitherto we have borne our testimony by sufferance. Men could hear or they could forbear. But can a man forbear to hear who owes decent working conditions and a living wage to a Christianity which has made his fight its own. Or can a girl forbear who owes to a militant Christ her virtue and her home. Or may a youth forbear whose chance at life has been retrieved to him by the dauntless brotherhood that follows the Fifth Horseman.

The fact is, we are coming to a rediscovery of Sin and it is bigger than we thought. We see it institutionalized, embedded in hoary traditions, commercialized. We are seeing men as victims of exploitation, handicapped by a false set of standards, misled by lusts of whose possible control they have never learned. We are reacting to a godlike pity for the blind groping fingers, picking at the walls that hedge men in, who for all their groping and picking get only the sting of the darting scorpion, the hiss of the hidden serpent, the slime of the loathsome toad for their pains.

The Caged Children

I can take you to farms on my field, so spiritless, so squalid, so degenerate that the presence of a child upon them is an affront to God, but the children are there. They can't escape. Not even the dubious refuge of the street and alley is open to them. Their place is fixed immutably by the side of mired hogs and unkempt scrub cattle. And before any authoritative approach can be made to the individual here the whole communal institution must find higher ground.

Such then is the new crusade of the Christ. Says Wilson again, "He is Faithful and True, Faithful to comrades, True to the facts." Some will never know him as Faithful because they disdain the comradeship of a new approach to the tasks of the kingdom.

Some will never know him as True since they choose to blink the facts behind which lust and greed, hypocrisy and selfishness lie entrenched to batten on the bodies and souls of shepherdless, perishing men.

But for men and women who in the face of disillusionment and cynicism, in spite of scorn and ridicule over the uncovered bodies of the prostrate witnesses dare the venture of a hope in the Fifth Horseman, the word is "Come up here." The enlistment rolls are open. The white clad army is in array. The doors of heaven are "open wide" (Moffatt). The scarlet vesture of the Prince Apparent flames with mingled mercy and menace; mercy to the weak and wretched; menace to the powerful and pitiless, these shall bend to the "iron flail."

Here is no forlorn hope, no last minute rescue of a lost cause, no miraculous intervention to save the face of a host fleeing from a rout. This is not the end, but the beginning, thank God; the beginning of the conquest of the Christ, the Fifth Horseman of the Apocalypse.

What Is a Religious Book?

The test of the religious value of a book is what it awakens in us.

By JAMES M. STIFLER

WHEN this question was first proposed to me, I was at once reminded of a discussion that we had while serving in the religious work department of the army Y. M. C. A. in one of the larger camps in the Middle West. We had been asked to make regular reports of our activities, and one of the items was the number of "religious interviews" that we had with the enlisted men.

The questions are not unlike, and one may feel pretty certain that in any sizable group of religious people the answers would be of similar sort, which is natural because of the varieties of individuals who would classify themselves as religious people. What is a religious person?

In that discussion it appeared that at one extreme was the sincere man who, when he talked with a soldier about his family, etc., with the hope of making a friendly feeling through which later on he could present the claims of Christ, felt that that constituted a religious interview. And at the other extreme was the man who would classify nothing as a religious interview that did not directly bring Christ to the attention of the one addressed.

In the first case it is apparent that the only thing that warranted the term religious was the motive and the ultimate intent of the conversation; otherwise it differed in no way from any friendly exchange. In the latter case it was undoubtedly and unquestionably religious. Yet even there it was, actually, either more religious or less in accordance with the spiritual experience and sincerity of the man who was conducting the interview.

A book is nothing but an elaborated conversation through the mechanical medium of printed pages, and exactly the same sort of gradation will be found to exist in religious books that exists in religious interviews, and exactly the same interior defect may exist in the case of the book as in the conversation. For a man may write a book on a religious subject, but a stream cannot rise higher than its source, and he cannot convey any spiritual reality that has not been a reality to him.

Shy of Spiritual Conversation

It is the general experience, among those of us of Anglo-Saxon ancestry at least, that we instinctively shy off from really spiritual conversation. It lies deep and close and is very sacred. We substitute for that most real fact of our souls, experience of God, discussions somewhat removed. We discuss theoretical explanations of God, which is "theology," or we wax warm over the ways of serving God which is "methods," or we debate ways of doing good to our fellow men, which is social service.

Now every book of these three sorts can be honestly and genuinely called religious, but those book conversations that really do spring from a religious experience of God and are in the nature of narratives of one's voyage over the sea of the Love of God are admittedly of a higher value than theologies or methods or service, as much as these three are superior to books that have a faint tincture of religion, like some of those beautiful essays of charming vivacity and literary charm that also are called religious. This last group have the same relation to the first as the pale but colorful twilight or sunrise has to the brilliant sunshine that gives warmth and energy that makes things grow. For the characteristic of the first and highest type of religious book is that it awakens something in us, just as the hot vibrating rays of the sun cause expansion and growth in vegetation.

The best of all subjective tests of such reality of spiritual value in a book is what it awakens in us as we read it. The best objective test is how long it lasts and how many people read it.

I consider that these two are absolute.

The Bible is the religious book of the ages. There is no shy spiritual reticence about it. It is the real experience of real men with a real God. That is the reason that some pages that tell of the sins of men are terrible and why some pages that tell of God's supreme love are ineffable.

The same tests applied to later books are sure. "Pilgrim's Progress" awakens the soul and is read by every succeeding generation. Brother Lawrence is another book of equal power and vitality. Wesley's and John Woolman's journals have not quite the same universal accent; they are slightly sectarian. Madame Guyon and Thomas a Kempis represent only one type of soul, the mystical. There is a vast and priceless treasure of such literature. Robertson's Sermons, Butler's Analogies, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" and the glorious list of biographies of men and women of God that serve a splendid purpose for a generation or two and then fade more or less slowly out of the knowledge of all but the student and historian.

The general principles that I have outlined here I would apply to all books now coming from the religious press. If a reader's time is limited let him take only those books where the sunshine of God's real presence glows most brightly, and there will ensue a growth in his own soul.

In eternity one may have time to read a great deal of lesser books for in eternity one cannot waste time, but it's doubtful if most of these books will last that long. No doubt if we ask for one the celestial librarian will lean over the desk and ask us why we should waste our eternity in such reckless fashion.

Religious Book Week

By CHARLES L. MAJOR

RELIGIOUS book week like every other good thing cannot be put over in one week. The bookseller who forgets all about religious books fifty-one weeks in the year cannot hope to sell many religious books during religious book week. Likewise the pastor who neglects the great opportunity to get his people to read books of enduring value during the balance of the year cannot do very much by a spasmodic effort during religious book week. The pastor who really believes that he is serving the cause of Christ by getting his people to read can do wonders in recommending specific books that have helped him some time, in his sermons, in prayer meeting talks and in his private conversations.

I know preachers who never sell a book from one year's end to the other and I know preachers who rarely address an audience that they do not sell a book. By selling I mean creating in the hearers' minds a desire to read the book recommended to the extent that they will buy it. My pastor is continually recommending books and he often has me send him half a dozen copies of some books he is going to recommend. He takes these to church or prayer meeting and sells them. In this way he has greatly increased the reading of religious books in his congregation. I know many pastors who use this method with an ever increasing reading congregation. The Publication Society is ready at all times to cooperate with a pastor who wishes a consignment of a book sent to him that he wants to recommend.

I believe that pastors need not confine their recommendations strictly to what is known as religious books. Many books not classed as religious are deeply religious in their teaching and very helpful to the reader. I have in mind a volume I am reading now, "The Americanization of Edward Bok." It is a volume I should be glad to see in every American home and I would especially recommend it as an inspiring book for young men and women; yet it is not classed as religious in the catalogs or libraries.

This recommending of good books is a field that is cultivated but little by our ministry and leaders in church work and yet it has possibilities of great development and usefulness. Our religious press could do a great service by making book reviews more timely and worth while. Books are not usually reviewed in our papers until they are many months old and then, too, many of the books reviewed are not worth reviewing. Make the review column of your paper something your readers can depend on; do not recommend a volume unless it is worth while and do not mention half the worthless trash now often reviewed and many ministers would subscribe to your paper for this column alone.

Periodically run an article by some well-known pastor on books for the pastor and people and avoid being theological in all these things. Pastors' recommendations should always be specific and not general. Pastors could render great service by sending THE BAPTIST brief reviews of books that have been especially helpful to them and their people. The pastors in the smaller cities and towns have but few opportunities to see books and such reviews and articles would be a boon to them.

Every pastor and church worker should be glad to cooperate to the fullest extent in Religious Book Week. Every teacher should recommend some one book to his or her class. In this way thousands of helpful volumes would find their way into the homes and hearts of our people.

Religious Literature in the Home

The literary food of youth determines to no small extent the literary taste of maturity.

By G. C. CRIPPEN

IT has been remarked by many people that in the average Christian home one will find the daily newspapers, one or more of the current magazines, a few volumes of fiction, and possibly two or three serious books, but rarely, if ever, a religious book besides the Bible. From my observation I think this statement is approximately correct, and I wonder why it is so. Is it because the members of the family are not seriously interested in religion? Perhaps in many cases this is the explanation, but not always for it often appears that the same people who possess no religious books are deeply religious and regular in their church attendance. It seems to me that there are other explanations.

Some people are not blessed with an inquiring mind. The why and what of things does not seem to bother them in the least.

Another reason, it seems to me, why more religious books are not found in the average Christian home, is because so many people have not the love of reading serious literature. The daily newspapers and more or less current fiction constitute their literary diet. Their only desire for the printed page is as a medium of information on the topics of the day and as a not too strenuous form of mental recreation. For such folks even the reading of the Bible is a task and not a pleasure because it requires not a little mental exertion.

Introduction Needed

There are also Christian people who do not read religious books with any degree of devotion because they have never really been introduced to that kind of literature. It is as unknown to them as are the orange orchards of California to a Hottentot. They may know that there are such books available, but they have never made their acquaintance.

These same people may be consistent readers of books and periodicals related to their vocational interest. They may even have a speaking acquaintance with books on travel, history, biography, the arts, science, etc. In fact I have seen many well-stocked libraries in Christian homes which could not boast the possession of a half dozen substantial religious books, and this fact has often raised the question in my mind, how can these things be?

This lack of religious literature in many Christian homes is a serious matter, and one that deserves the consideration of all who are interested in the development of substantial Christian character, as that depends to no small degree upon instruction, inspiration, and the development of intelligence. Many people recognizing the situation have asked, What are we going to do about it?

The least we can do for the present generation is to introduce it to the surprisingly large field of religious literature. Pastors and other church officials should consider it a duty, not only to make known the existence of books dealing with religious subjects, but to make those books available to the people of their constituency. Possibilities of action along this line are almost without limit, and a little thought will reveal numberless ways in which the attention of Christian people can be focused upon books that are worth reading. Pastors, especially, have a wonderful opportunity to do this through the medium of the church calendar, the bulletin board, and by references in their mid-week and Sunday services. One layman whom I know has done splendid service in stimulating the reading of religious books by his constant quotations and references. He also had at one time a number of such volumes which he made a business of loaning to his friends.

In this connection it is worth remarking that the best way to develop interest in religious books is to recommend books that are interesting. There are some books on religious subjects (published in the last ten years, too) that are sure to discourage seekers after truth. They are as ancient and dry as the mummies of Egypt and as unrelated to the life and thought of our day and age. To put such a book in the hands of an intelligent man or woman is like giving a stone to him who asks for bread.

In respect to the rising generation there is more hope. We do not know to just what extent environment determines interest and habits, but of this we are certain that many of the characteristics of the mature life are traceable to early associations. We may not be able to remodel a mind into an inquiring one, but we can at least encourage a mind to develop the spirit of inquiry. The normal child's mind is full of questions, and as God has brought such minds into existence it is surely not the part of any one of us to discourage it in its search after truth. A little patience, a little sympathy and much wisdom will encourage the development in such a mind of a spirit of inquiry and truth seeking that will last down to old age. But some one will raise the question, Will not such a person inquire himself out of religion? To him I would reply in the words of Bacon, "It is true that a little philosophy inclineth man's mind to atheism, but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion." The danger of inquiry is by no means so great as the danger of indifference. Where one man has fallen away from religion through honest search after truth, thousands have lost the way through indifference to truth.

Influences of Early Reading

If it is possible in youth to develop a taste for good food why is it not possible to develop a taste for good reading? Both the body and mind have an appetite which may be satisfied by either the good or the bad, and which may become accustomed to either a wholesome or an unwholesome diet. Many people trace their love of good literature today back to the kind of books they found to read in their homes during the early years of life. There are exceptional cases, of course, but the rule holds good that the literary food of youth determines to no small extent the literary taste of maturity. This being the case, the parents of today have it in their hands to produce a religious book-reading generation of tomorrow. Let them provide for their children good literature with a liberal sprinkling of religious books, carefully chosen to meet the needs of the boys and girls at various ages, and they will produce men and women in which will be found the love of good books including those which deal with the serious problems of life as interpreted by religion. They will have given their children something that is invaluable—a love for the companionship of great spirits for "A good book is the precious life-blood of a master spirit embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life."

Sometime ago I ran across these lines by Edgar A. Guest, which I think have special significance in this connection:

I care not who the man may be,
Nor how his tasks may fret him;
Nor where he fares, nor how his cares
And troubles may beset him,
If books have won the love of him,
Whatever fortune hands him,
He'll always own, when he's alone,
A friend who understands him.

Devotional Reading

By RAYMOND CALKINS

A SERIOUS problem confronting the teaching ministry is how to furnish constructive religious information to one's congregation. It is without doubt true that the religious thinking of many people who go to church more or less regularly is uninformed, and lacking in foundation and consistency. This they freely admit. Their older views of Christian truth have gone, but new ones have not replaced them. They are not willing to dismiss the Christian teaching, indeed they continue to believe it. Yet they do not possess solid reasons for believing it which they are able to formulate for themselves, and much less for others. They are looking around for religious literature which shall aid them to do just this thing. A book to help them must be fairly brief; it must be readable; it must go to the point; it must be constructive and convincing. The hunger for such reading among the rank and file of people in the pews of our churches is considerable.

The publication boards should cooperate by preparing and mailing to parish ministers carefully prepared lists of such reading material. A recent search among bookstores revealed that even the best known book dealers had no such lists. They had the lists of different publishers, but no compendium of such literature. The average parish minister is too busy to prepare such a list for himself. Moreover, he lacks the necessary apparatus. The educational boards, however, could render this effective service. Only books that have been carefully tested and chosen would have a place, and these would be arranged topically so that the reader would be guided in his selection.

The printing of the titles of such books on church calendars and an indication of where they could be conveniently secured, would doubtless uncover a wide demand for them. The mention of such books in sermons rarely fails to bring a response or request for them. Public libraries will be glad to cooperate so long as the religious teaching is in no sense sectarian.

The Making of a Bible

In setting up of a Bible the compositors handle 3,566,480 letters; it is proof-read seven times. Presses print ceaselessly eight hours of every working day to supply increasing demand.

THE first method of binding books was probably that employed as early as the sixth century and known as the Byzantine style of binding which makes this a much older art than that of printing. The monks had carried the art of binding missals and many precious works written by hand and wonderfully ornamented to a very high plane. The written leaves were fastened together and inclosed in covers of wood which were often decorated with jewels and ornaments of gold and silver. Most of these books were destroyed by people seeking the gems that were supposed to be hidden in the thick wooden covers.

Between the tenth and the fourteenth centuries, the monks in England, having copied and improved the designs of books brought from the East, became the foremost binders of Europe. The introduction of the printing press gave a great impetus to the trade of bookbinding and as the number of books increased, the art of bookbinding steadily improved and progressed.

Best Example of Book Binding

The Bible, the greatest of all books, is probably the best example of book-binding, representing, as it does, all through the ages, the various methods, forms and artistic skill of the book-binder. From the crude materials of the early centuries, we now have the exquisitely ornamented bindings of the finest leathers, not to mention the thousands of binding styles for every day use. In Bible making not only does the binding present opportunities for showing the trained skill of the artisan, but all the other steps in the process of the making of a Bible present exacting requirements not met in ordinary book-making. A visit to a modern Bible manufacturing plant cannot fail to give one a new sense of appreciation for the beautiful editions of the world's best book now available to the twentieth century reader.

The first step in such a tour of inspection is naturally the composing room. It is here that the type is set up. One learns the astounding fact that in setting up a Bible it is necessary for the compositors to handle 3,566,480 letters, not to mention punctuation marks! Accuracy is secured by proof-reading the entire volume seven times. One of the large Bible publishing firms has a standing reward of $5 to be paid to the person who first reports a typographical error. This reward, it is said, is seldom earned as errors are remarkably rare.

Not only does the setting up of a Bible involve the handling of an exceptional amount of type matter, but in making the reference editions, the work becomes exceedingly complicated. These editions have a center column containing in the neighborhood of 50,000 references to other chapters and verses and it will readily be seen that this multitude of abbreviations and figures must be accurate. In addition, small letters must be carefully fitted to the words in the text matter which indicate the references to which they apply.

The type matter having been made up into pages, it is then sent to the foundry where each page is plated. These plates go to the press-room where rows of high-powered machines are ceaselessly printing, eight hours of every working day of the year, in the effort to keep up with the constantly increasing demand for the Bible.

The press-room has its own peculiar problems in Bible making. Chief among these being the selection of papers that are most suitable. The printer must find a paper that will result in a volume no bulkier than an ordinary book, and yet the one he is making contains about eight times the number of words in a novel of ordinary length. This problem has been partially solved in the use of thin, high-grade paper, which, while it is thin, is also opaque and strong. But even this high-grade paper used in the making of the ordinary editions of the Bible has not marked the ultimate improvement in the printing material. A further, and what has been called a revolutionary, step was taken in the use of that extremely thin paper known as described are now securely glued to the back of the binding. Securing the sheets to the back in this manner by means of a special glue, re-enforces the back with the strength of the leather and gives that flexibility so desirable in a Bible. A head band, cut to the exact size, is then inserted at the top and bottom of the back of the sheets, adding to the volume's strength and finish.

It is surprising how much of the work necessary in Bible binding must be done by hand. This is due to the shaping of the turned over edge, the great variety of sizes, and the extreme accuracy with which the sheets are fitted into the covers. It is because the covers are so carefully fitted that it is unwise to place papers or other materials in a Bible as this will result in a broken back.

Millions of copies of the Bible are being made in just this manner every year and are finding their way to all parts of the earth, to comfort and inspire the people of every race and clime.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Washington
February 27, 1922.

It is a pleasure to endorse the program of your organization for the wider circulation of books of a religious character.

I strongly feel that every good parent cares for his child's body, that the child may have a normal and healthy life and growth; cares for his child's mind, that the child may take his proper place in a world of thinking people; and such a parent must also train his child's character religiously, that the world may become morally fit. Unless this is done, trained bodies and trained minds may simply add to the destructive forces of the world.

Very sincerely,

Warren G. Harding.

Oxford India paper. This paper was first made in India, being introduced to the western world in 1848. It is so thin that 1,300 sheets measure only one inch in thickness. It is remarkable to observe that the print on one side does not show through to the other even though the paper is so thin.

The flat, printed sheets are then taken to the bindery. Here they are folded and collated, that is, arranged so that they will follow in order. The next step is the sewing, which is done with a fine quality of Sea Island cotton. The higher priced editions are sewed with silk. The edges are now trimmed and rounded, colored red and the gold leaf applied, which, when dried, is burnished. The sheets are now ready to be cased in, that is, covered with whatever material is to be used.

The hides of thousands of animals are used each year in Bible binding. Cattle, sheep, goats, pigs and seals are used, only the better portions of each skin being suitable for this purpose. The making of a divinity circuit (overlapping) cover requires great skill and accuracy. The cover is cut to the precise size from a part of the skin which is without blemish and the edge all around is carefully pared so that it may be neatly turned over the lining which may be of paper, linen or leather.

Making a Church Library

By MRS. C. E. MENDENHALL

I WAS much interested in the Editorial Comment, entitled "Has Your Church a Church Library?" For the past few months most of my church activity has been put into the renovation of our old Sunday school library and the reconstruction of it into a church library.

About twenty-five years ago a group of energetic young college graduates saw to it that some really good literature was put into our Sunday-school library. Afterward, with the opening of a branch of the public library in the neighborhood of the church, the lending of books from the Sunday-school library was discontinued. Last fall, the chairman of our church missionary committee suggested the establishment of a church missionary library. Weeding out the "Pious Willie" type of book and using the best of the old books as a basis, ways and means were found to add a missionary department and we have been calling it the church library, having it open during the Bible-school hour and at prayer meeting and other week meetings.

On account of the national reading contest of the woman's society, our missionary shelf is always empty and we shall not be able to find out what is the real voluntary interest in our missionary books until our woman's literature secretary has ceased to urge on the contestants.

It is a source of constant wonder to me why people who are missionary in spirit, giving themselves and their money to missionary activity, can spurn some of the thrilling tales of missionaries and their work and the well-written fiction which is based upon facts of the mission stations.

I have tried to get it to the men's classes and to the teacher training class that we should appreciate their support in suggesting books which they should care to read and which would be helpful to them in their particular lines of work. I am sure that there is a field for this sort of church work and if the adults are slow to grasp the idea, we can begin with the children.

All Aboard for Indianapolis

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

ARE you going to Indianapolis? I hope so. There is to be a wonderful program and in the present disturbed state of the denomination it is most important that there be a large and representative convention. If every church should make up its mind that it was necessary to send at least its pastor, we should get such an impetus in our great denominational task as would carry us over the top in triumph.

For the first time we are going to have the entire first day of the convention given, not to business, but to the facing of our spiritual aims and the girding of ourselves for our tasks, by prayer. The keynote of the convention is to be the uplifted Christ, and its motto, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

We are planning, too, to have mission study presented before the whole convention. A period every day will be devoted to the consideration of either the foreign or the home mission book. Besides these periods before the convention, there will be classes conducted on the children's, young women's and the junior study books, at the noon hour. Then there will be a study of a book of the New Testament during the devotional period each day, conducted by a master expositor.

You cannot afford to miss the stirring music, the great addresses, the missionary speakers, the interesting questions of the business sessions, the big tide of Christian fellowship that surcharges the meetings. The denomination needs you. You need the denomination. Let's go!

"Fight?" We are not going to fight. The Holy Spirit is the president of us all, and he is the spirit of wisdom and of a sound mind and of concord. We are going to take our differences into his presence, and he will guide us and make his will known. We must not think fight, or talk fight: All we be brethren. We must love one another and learn to work together in spite of differing opinions. Our greatest need is a multitude of delegates who will come from their closets, eager to receive the leadership of the Spirit; anxious to forget party cries in the overmastering sense of God's presence, resolved that at all cost they will be sons of peace.

Send your delegates, then, but send them as free men. Do not send them pledged to any party. That is not the method of the Body of Christ. To send pledged delegates is to pre-judge issues on which quite possibly you have not been fully informed.

For the great mass of Christians who will be present at Indianapolis only in the presence of their representatives, there remains the greatest service of all to perform. Let them engage in intercessory prayer throughout the entire sessions of the convention. Follow each topic and each speaker in prayer. Let little groups gather daily for prayer. Let there be much prayer in secret. If we can do this, the Indianapolis Convention shall see a greater release of power than we have ever known before. We have a great need, but we have a great God to whom nothing is impossible.

Meanwhile, let us hold to our poise and our faith. Let us abstain from controversy and wait for God to make his will known. And remember that it is not by controversy that the truth is made clear, but by faith and character. Do you recall Paul's wonderful words to Timothy?—

"Shut your mind against foolish, popular controversy; be sure that it breeds only strife and the Lord's servant must not be a man of strife; he must be kind to everybody, a skilled teacher, a man who will not resent injuries; he must be gentle in his admonitions." II Timothy, 23-25 (Weymouth). Not resentful, gentle in admonition.

If we come to the convention with the resolve that first we will manifest Jesus Christ in all his beauty and winsomeness, we shall go away with a great blessing.

Partners with Christ

A MESSAGE TO BAPTIST LAYMEN

This is written to you as one of the partners in the oldest established business in the world—the most widely distributed business in the world—reaching: "From Greenland's icy mountains, from India's coral strand, Where Africa's sunny fountains roll down their golden sand, From many an ancient river, from many a palmy plain—" —and the business whose returns for the time, thought and money the partners invest outlast those of any other business, in fact are eternal. Those whom you have employed to conduct this business have accepted employment, not primarily for wages, as is the case of every other business you are connected with, but because of the character and purpose of this particular partnership. So devoted are they to the furthering of that purpose that many of them, if not all, in order to have a part in it have risked if not actually sacrificed health, home and financial gain.

The upheaval the war brought about spread into the remotest corners of family, business and religious life, and this business of which I now speak to you as a partner and which comprises the denominational organizations our forefathers established and supported at great sacrifice, is facing the crisis that has had to be faced by many of the great business organizations of the country.

The cost of everything has been higher and some of our partners have not paid the proportion due to date of the actual pledge they joined with others in making and on which our other partners and employees justifiably counted to meet the regular running expenses that an organization must have. Some, who bear the name of partners, have contributed nothing; other partners have contributed something but there is good reason to think they have not done their share; others, and grateful recognition should be accorded them, have done their full share; and a few, the highest praise to them, have done more than their share. We cannot make an assessment as in business. We must leave it to each partner to decide the measure of his obligation.

In whatever detail you may think some feature of this business of ours has been expensively, unwisely, or uselessly conducted, should we not recognize that this is true of every business with which we are connected and none of us would admit it to be equally true as to some of the details of our private affairs. If there is anything to criticize, is it not that as partners we have not given the time and thought which we should have given to the actual work of our organizations, and that we have ignored the innumerable invitations—in fact calls—that have come repeatedly to us to act on committees, etc.? Have we not frequently evaded invitations to give an hour or so to a meeting at which one of our other partners or some of our employees were contributing overtime?

Money is the immediate need from the partners if the equivalent of bankruptcy is not to be faced. Money has had to be borrowed in order to keep the organizations running. If the pro rata due on every outstanding pledge were paid into the treasury of the Board of Promotion, borrowed money could be paid off and the added burden of interest on these loans avoided. Every three months of delay in payment of a pledge of $100 depreciates it through its charge for interest to $98.50, and a year's delay reduces it to $94.

"for this is expedient for you, who were the first to make a beginning a year ago, not only to do but also to will. But now complete the doing also; that as there was the readiness to will, so there may be the completion also out of your ability." (2 Cor. 8. 10).

Greater even than the need of money is that from now on every partner shall pledge himself to give a proper proportion of time and thought first to his own church and then to the denominational organizations in which he is a partner, and which are representing him in fulfilling the purposes to which he has, in accepting church membership, solemnly dedicated himself. Let us be certain that we each give in proportion to that which has been entrusted to us, whether one talent, two talents, or five talents.

A "Best" Letter and Its Answer

Dear Sir:

I am enclosing a $2.00 bill to just help a little on the effort to get the sum that we need.

I wish I could do more but am not able to, as I am only a shoe worker and I am on short time, so this is the very best I can do. But I am praying for those who have more will help too.

God bless and help the brethren to help on this.

Yours,

MELVIN HOLLIS.

P. S.—Our church is now making an effort to help.

Dear Mr. Hollis:

I wish to thank you for your letter of March 13th. I believe it is the best letter that has come to me since I took up the work of the Laymen's Council, and I shall use it for inspirational effect elsewhere.

Since I am not handling any funds, I am forwarding your remittance of $2.00 to the General Board of Promotion in New York, with request that they issue receipt direct to you.

Sincerely yours,

FRED W. FREEMAN.

Among the New Books

Take these as samples of the books which now crowd the shelves.

It Is to Laugh, by Edna Geister. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.25.

There is nobody just like Edna Geister so far as the preparing of recreational stunts is concerned. And this new volume from her pen will be a life-saver to many a person who wants to get up a successful party and does not know just what to do. The book was written primarily for the recreation of adults, although all the games can be used for children. The games are social rather than of the athletic type and can be used either in the home or large hall. There are games for large groups and small; games for the family; for dinner parties; for church socials; for community affairs; there are even picnic programs. For the people who want this kind of material, this is just the book they want.

A Student's Philosophy of Religion, by William Kelly Wright. New York: The Macmillan Co. $3.75.

This is one of the most readable books on the subject treated which has come under our hands. The author is assistant professor of philosophy at Dartmouth College, although this particular volume grew out of lectures delivered at Cornell. The purpose is to furnish college undergraduates and general readers with the necessary data—facts and arguments—on which they will be able to work out their own philosophy of religion. The amount of data assembled is very large. No person will, of course take up such a volume expecting to find it entirely in accord with his personal theological views. But few people will read it without finding something which is suggestive and which possibly they can use. We do not all interpret facts alike. It would be easy to criticize by picking out particular paragraphs or sections; it is fairer to suggest that discriminating readers judge for themselves. Of course, we would not recommend that any parent or pastor put a book on this subject into the hands of the young until he has first read it himself with some care and has a fair mastery of the subject of which it treats.

The Persistent Word of God, by John A. Hutton. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $2.

In this book are studies of Jonah and of the Prodigal Son, each being dealt with in a series of chapters. The first is fascinating and well brings out the revelation of the heart of God which lies at the center of the story. The second is a powerful, moving, original exposition of a much-treated subject. Hutton has an interesting way of showing how in every generation the old meaning of Scripture breaks out anew. "The final insight of the Old Testament and of the New," he says, "is not far from this—that if races and peoples cannot under God reach and maintain an 'entente cordiale,' acknowledging one final law, accepting one canon of behavior, 'the day of the Lord' cannot but be 'a day of darkness and not light, yea, very dark and no light in it.'" Those who believe in the friendliness of God are called to action.

Brotherhood and Civilization, by Rolvix Harlan. New York: Hodder and Stoughton.

This review copy comes with the compliments of the Home Mission Society, under whose auspices the book is published. Does the brotherhood movement promise anything in the way of actual brotherhood in practical social terms? That question has been a vital one, and Dr. Harlan replies affirmatively. He has condensed into 150 pages the essential message of the prophets of a socially realizable religion through the ages: of Amos, Micah, Isaiah, Jesus, Rauschenbusch, Benjamin Kidd, Harry Ward, Batten; of primitive Christianity, the labor movement and the Federal Council of Churches; of the Roman Catholic plea for industrial democracy. Readers who are not acquainted with Osborn Ward's account of "The Ancient Lowly" will be surprised to find herein how far early Christianity was identified with the labor movement in the Roman Empire. The present meaning of

The Psalms as Liturgies, by John P. Peters. New York: The Macmillan Co. $4.00.

The psalms are here treated as liturgies prepared for and primarily used in the sacrificial services of the Jewish temple. The author's translation is side by side with the authorized version of each psalm. Such treatment throws interesting light on the meaning of many psalms. The book will be of value to students. General readers will not be greatly concerned.

The Fundamentals of Christianity, by Henry C. Vedder. New York: The Macmillan Co. $2.00.

The author frankly states his conviction that none of his colleagues at Crozer will approve all the contents of this book which is a new and original and fearless study of the teaching of Jesus and Paul. The book will be disturbing to some, especially to those who find their gospel in a traditional Paulinism. Dr. Vedder goes back to the authority of Jesus, and presents a book which is always readable, stimulating and morally earnest. Ministers and others who have passed beyond the milk diet stage will find it suggestive. The reader will need a discriminating mind.

Jesus and Life, by Joseph F. McFayden. New York: George H. Doran Co. $2.00 net.

Good and true all the way through, and commonplace.

Conference on Social Work, Milwaukee, 1921. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. $3.00 postpaid.

The Conference on Social Work has taken the place of the old National Conference of Charities and Correction. This volume contains the proceedings of the forty-eighth annual meeting. It contains full reports of all addresses and business transacted at the general sessions, as well as at ten divisional meetings for the consideration of children, delinquents and correction, health, public agencies and institutions, the family, industrial and economic problems, the local community, mental hygiene, organization of social forces, and the uniting of native and foreign-born in America. It is an annual edition of an encyclopedia of social science, giving point generally to the saying quoted in it from a London dock laborer: "If 'arf of us wuz dogs 'twould be a better than 'tis now, cuz dogs is true and men eyent." It relieves that picture, however, by showing what men are trying to do for one another.

Social Case Work, by Mary E. Richmond. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.

It is a story of doing things for folks by one who has had large experience in that sort of thing. She indicates the need for such work in both individual cases and institutional relations, the sort of training that the case worker ought to have, and what benefits to human life, individual and collective are possible of achievement through an adequate corps of properly qualified experts who devote their lives to such service.

Creative Christianity, by George Cross. New York: The Macmillan Co. $1.50.

The well-known author is a member of the faculty of Rochester Theological Seminary. He seldom writes a dull paragraph, and often invites dissent from his unconventional views. He has given here a fresh, clear and strong reinterpretation of the brotherhood movement as Dr. Harlan discovers it is this: "The time for the truly Gentle State has come."

The Progress of Church Federation to 1922, by Charles L. McFarland. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00.

The Protestant denominations have been definitely "edging" towards one another for fifty years; and for seventeen of those years, they have been definitely cooperating through the Federal Council of Churches. Dr. McFarland, the general secretary of the organization, is qualified to tell the story of cooperative Protestantism; and the reader can hardly finish a careful survey of the story without having born within him the conviction that the era of interdenominational church cooperation has passed from the stage of experiment to that of achievement.

Christianity from the point of view of the liberal theology. The genius of the Christian faith is to be discovered not so much in the documents and traditions of its past as in its unfolding process. "Christianity is ceaselessly creative." It has moved creatively in three significant directions: in the progressive discovery of perfect personality, in bringing into being the better world, and in interpreting the cosmos and "moulding the universe as an intellectual, aesthetic and volitional unity into the likeness of the spirit that dominates the lives of Christian people." The book is a strong piece of modern reinterpretation of Christianity for the benefit of those who face the problems that arise out of modern education. It will be interesting and profitable to readers who think, and to nobody else.

Peking: A Social Survey, by Sidney D. Gamble, and others. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $5.00 net.

We have here the first social survey, conducted on lines familiar in western civilization, of a typically oriental city. The work, conducted under the auspices of the Princeton University Center in China and the Peking Y. M. C. A., is decidedly well done. As one studies the chapters, he has an entirely new realization of the character of these eastern cities and the problems they present to missionary work. There are chapters here on history, geography, government, population, health, education, commercial life, recreation, the social evil, poverty and philanthropies, prisons, churches, religious work, etc. We take it for granted that people interested in social work and in the underlying problems of missions will wish to familiarize themselves with the general facts here set forth.

How to Conduct a Church Vacation School, by Albert H. Gage. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. $1.50.

The author is director of religious education for the Chicago Baptist Executive Council and the Publication Society. He has done a remarkable piece of work in the Chicago area in Sunday-school work and in the development of vacation Bible schools. On the subject of this volume he is an expert. Any person who will study these chapters, telling what such a school should really be, how it can be promoted, how workers can be trained, and giving in detail methods and programs, will be perfectly fitted, provided he loves children, to organize his own school. There are here suggestions also as to the larger outlook such schools should have and their significance for the church and the kingdom of God. We cannot too highly commend this book. It is the best thing we have seen of a practical kind on a subject which is becoming increasingly important. Some of the chapters have been written by experts on the particular subjects treated, as, for instance, the chapter on story-telling and dramatization.

The Creative Christ, by Edward S. Drown. New York: The Macmillan Co. $1.25.

A study of the incarnation in terms of modern thought by a professor in the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass., who believes that each age must have a Christology contemporaneous with its own needs and who has attempted to provide this for our day. Any sincere effort to make Christ real is worth considering and this book is to be numbered among such.

Jesus and What He Said, by Arthur S. Burrows. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $2.00 postpaid.

This is a Bible analysis of a unique character. The pages of the book are divided into three columns. In the middle column are contained the words of Jesus on some one of 100 vital topics; on the left is an Old Testament illustration; and on the right is an apostolic interpretation. Thus one looks both backward and forward from the teaching of the Master. There is also a doctrinal and general index, covering 2,000 topics. Such a little work (it only has ninety-two pages), interpreting the Bible by the Bible should be very helpful to every student who wishes to know what the Book really teaches and who does not insist on his own pre-conceived ideas. The volume is condensed yet comprehensive. It should be stimulating to every teacher and preacher.

The Eagle Life, by J. H. Jowett. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

A subtitle of this volume is "New Studies in the Old Testament." The contents are forty-eight addresses of about 350 words, each based on some striking passage or verse. Dr. Jowett has a microscopic eye and the genius of intuition to discover texts in the Bible which to the average reader are but the dry husk of a local fact or an incident connected with some obscure, casual event of no apparent significance. But touched by his almost inspired pen the text or event becomes radiant with interest and the reader cannot imagine why he had not discovered the richness. This feature marks all these essayettes. The treatment of the passages is not marked by abnormal comments or expository contortions. On the contrary, the exposition is always fresh, suggestive and spiritual.

The New World of Islam, by Lothrop Stoddard. New York: Charles Scribners Sons.

Among a large number of books and magazine articles on the subject of this volume this book has attained an unusual popularity among reviewers and book buyers, and deservedly so. Complaints and criticisms are often made against Great Britain because it does not "drive the Turk out of Europe," wrench Constantinople from his cruel grasp, forbid him to enter Armenia and take Palestine from his savage clutch. Other reforms in the same direction would be hailed with a stormy welcome by the occidental world. Reading this volume would greatly modify the enforcement of those demands of zeal. The author has read widely on his subject and is exceptionally conversant with it in its many bearings. He discusses the present day revival of Mohammedan interest in what had been for ages a dormant Islam. The influence of occident civilization has greatly affected Moslems, producing industrial and social progress and introducing new methods of business and government; but it has also stirred a "welter of unrest," a burning jealousy of and bitter hatred against everything savoring of Christianity and especially the results of the war in lessening the political power of the Sultan and indirectly of Islam. Groups of warring Moslems have been united, various schools of Islam theology have silenced their controversies so as to oppose a common enemy. There are over 100,000,000 Moslems over whom the flag of Great Britain is unfurled, and with the Far East fermenting with rebellion, the old quarrels of Islam and Hinduism have stopped and their believers are cynically and unitedly watching the attitude of Europe toward Islam since the war and preparing for a war of liberation from a hated Christian hegemony. Such a state of oriental attitude makes for conservatism in the statesmanship of the great European powers. Those are the conditions Great Britain is now facing. Her Irish troubles are a teapot tempest compared with the stirrings of the Islam world and the commotions in India. The volume discusses the new nationalism of Islam and of India, their mutual reconciliation, and the revolutionary leaves that is transforming the oriental systems of faith and government with the one object—freedom from the yoke of western intrusion. The book is well presented in matter and manner, informing as well as entertaining, and the contents are of far more than passing value; they are a prophecy, a warning, a guidance. Not an intra-continent, but an intercontinent's clash of religions and civilizations rumbles in a not distant future from Egypt to Eastern India—even to China.

In His Image, by William Jennings Bryan. New York: F. H. Revell Co. $1.75 net.

Mr. Bryan's doings always interest. Just now he is the arch antagonist of evolution, not seriously considered by scholars but of real significance because he is taken seriously by so many people. One cannot help being interested in his way of putting things even when he radically disagrees with conclusions. With some of these lectures, delivered originally in Virginia, evangelical Christians will all find themselves in hearty accord. What a pity that Mr. Bryan cannot hold himself to emphasis upon the facts of the religious life instead of getting diverted to questions of theology and science in which he is not always at home.

Jesus an Economic Mediator (God's Remedy for Industrial and International Ills), by James E. Danby, D.D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company.

This volume is one of the thousand current appeals that the spirit, morals and laws of Jesus should enter into and rule in politics, statesmanship, business and social economy. The author maintains that the whole mission of Jesus Christ from his birth to his ascension was mediatorial, not alone as between God and man, but also between nations, between classes, labor and capital and the conflicting interests of men and society. The mediatorialship of Jesus is the only key, the only solution of the warring problems of the world. The author has selected a point of view that greatly freshens and expands the conception of the average reader on timely problems. Aside from that the style of presentation of views, facts and propositions makes the volume a most delightful study.

Through Three Centuries, by Jesse L. Rosenberger. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. $2.50 net. $2.65 postpaid.

This volume is a series of connected life stories, tracing through successive generations of the same family developments from early Puritan days to the present time. In it are contained many interesting facts relating to Baptists and their educational institutions. The people treated are Rev. Nathaniel Colver, with a little something about his father and grandfather, Rev. Chas. Kendrick Colver, Susan Esther Colver and Jesse Leonard Rosenberg. The story moves from Puritan New England through the Middle West and parts of the South. It is certain to be of interest to those who are interested in Baptist events and to that other large group who find in biography the most fascinating account of the development of the United States. Nathaniel Colver was one of the outstanding Baptist preachers of his day, a man of great intellectual power who loved pioneering.

The Open Forum

READY-MADE PROGRAMS

I have read with some interest the articles in the March 4 issue of THE BAPTIST, and I cannot refrain from asking some questions. I have always held Dr. Agar in high esteem and have told my people that he was the greatest man in our own denomination and perhaps in the entire Western Hemisphere on the question of church finance.

Now I want to ask in all candor, how much do the secretaries of our denomination know about the local church? And just how are the criticisms of the association going to help the local church? We have been kind enough to give most of the time in our associational meetings to the secretaries of the different denominational interests. I have been in Illinois for sixteen years and I declare to you that in the associations where I have been we have given most of the time to the representatives of our denominational agencies. Always we have tried to have some of the national leaders represent some of the denominational agencies. I am in hearty sympathy with the entire program of the denomination but I do not believe that our good brethren have touched the real cause for the lagging interest.

Most of our secretaries have a fine theory for doing things but when they come out from the big cities and tell us about local conditions our good people smile and confidentially tell their pastor that these good brethren do not know what they are talking about. Now honestly I have come to believe the common people know more than we give them credit for, and some of Dr. Agar's statements have roused some of my good people to actually ask me "Well who is this Dr. Agar anyhow, how does he know about our church? He has never been here."

There has grown and is growing a misunderstanding between our churches and our leaders. I have been asked "Who gave the Northern Baptist Convention leaders the right to tell to each of the churches what they should raise in the New World Movement?" We will admit the need is greater than ever before but men in the big city cannot go out to some local meeting and then say the denomination must do so and so. The local church is the power behind the throne and the local church must be reckoned with in the making up of plans.

The Baptists have been held up to ridicule because they disagree and they have been reported as planning a split on doctrinal points. I think that this has done more harm than all the weakness of our local associations and the poor preaching thrown in. I have never been on a field where I could not work out the kingdom plans better than any outside man.

I do not mean to boast, but I know that I am true in my statement.

Tell us what you think we ought to do and we will try to do our best. If you doubt my statement come and visit with me and I will be pleased to have my people shown, and I think they will be pleased to be shown.

If the associational activity and the programs are not what they should be please do not infer that the pastors of local churches and the churches themselves are to blame for we have our programs made up and sent to us in the main by the secretaries and leaders. We have tried to follow their lead. I think that some great sermons at some of our meetings would do inestimable good. I think that the heavy work of an office drives some of our leaders to such a pace that they feel the laymen should keep up with them. Criticism will not help us, scolding will not make people all we want them to be. But a real message fresh from the heart and throbbing with the Christ will help amazingly. I think that if we had planned a denominational evangelistic campaign and gone out preaching Christ and presented his call perhaps our present job would not look so impossible to our churches.

CALL THE GAME AND HAVE IT OVER

This suspense is awful. Let's go to it and be done. Here's a way: Let the men who know where the heresy stills are and who the heresy bootleggers are, prefer definite charges with citations from books, etc. and lay them honorably before our trustees or boards. Then let the accusers and accused appear before such bodies, and let them plead one another face to face. "Doth our law judge any man before it hear him?" We might better have a few burnings at the stake as the dear Puritans did the witches and then quit, than to have this perpetual guerilla warfare on one side and declared bootlegging of illicit teaching on the other. Is this a case of "let George do it?"

These trustees are not voluntarily going to turn head-hunters, call down suspicion of their schools, etc. The sport is too uncertain. Who of "the constituency" is going to prefer the charges and press them? Guess again. This writer is informed that one of those most loudly calling for action is and for years has been a trustee of one of the institutions where most serious charges have been made. Funny, isn't it that with a "chance" like that somebody does not bring in the game? A recent lengthy communication lays specific charges against a number of men and their books. Four of those so indicted are dead. That is a perfectly safe thing to do. They'll not come back to retaliate.

But all joking aside, brethren, has not the time come to call the game and play it or call it off? Probably 80, perhaps 90 per cent of us are loyal to every real, basic truth of our Holy Faith, and some of us are getting tired of having the traffic blocked when we want to do business for the King and his kingdom.

This writer has never been questioned that he knows of, as to his loyalty. But he is sick and weary of this process of insinuation and suggestion that hurts but accomplishes nothing concrete. Brethren, dearly beloved, get out into the open and settle it, and do it quickly. We'll bury the remains, decently and in order. Come on.

Red Bank, N. J. WM. E. BRAISTED.

HOW IT IS DONE

Some time ago there appeared in THE BAPTIST a request from someone, that in reporting church successes the writer tell how it was done. No Baptist church in Indianapolis is growing faster than the Emerson Avenue Church. Some things have recently come to light that may be helpful to other churches.

The pastor requested each organization to bring in, at the monthly business meeting of the church, a report of progress. These reports have been a revelation. Last month the pastor found that the women of the ladies' Bible class and of the Women's Circle had made 203 calls. The men of the Loyal Men's Bible class have just launched a campaign and they will average at least fifty calls per month. The pastor also found that these groups had sent out over thirty bouquets of flowers to sick people.

During the same month of February the pastor made sixty calls. This is not a large number, but the significant fact is this that each of the sixty calls means that the pastor has taken time to visit with the family and has read some portion of God's Word and had prayer with the family. This custom of pastoral ministration in the home has brought most gratifying spiritual returns. Never yet has there been an instance where the people resented having the Scriptures read. In practically every case the family thanks the minister and urges him to call again.

STILL STRESSING STEWARDSHIP

This is a familiar title. It has been pointed out that business ability may be used for God as truly as a natural aptitude for the ministry or missions. Note Luke 12:16-21 where Christ condemns a man, not for accumulating wealth but for going out of business. When he was rich for himself he quit, not seeking to be "rich towards God." Is not this the plain teaching of verse 21?

The Chimney Corner

Where Angels Fear to Tread

(But a little April Fool breaks in.)

THERE were all the obvious things you could do to your already-suspicious family on the first of the month: that mouse that was forever lurking in the corner—but never bringing forth a single squeal from any one; those sooty smudges to be noted on the family noses—only nobody ever threatened to rub them off; those lovely bits of cork secreted in the pudding—but instantly detected. "I guess there've been too many April-first's before we came along," Jane Cooper sighed dolorously. But the beautiful plan was born right then: which is what comes of being a Baptist "Crusader" and acting in pageants at church and neglecting to return the borrowed plumage the next day. "Penelope," said Jane with nine-year-old enticingness, "wouldn't you like to be a really-true April Fool?"

"Yeth!" Penelope agreed promptly. (Theirs not to reason why, when they are four-going-on-five.)

"Then listen! You know, mother hasn't returned our Japanese costumes to Mrs. Trotter yet. Well, let's dress up in them, you and I, and let's be Japanese! Let's go out on the street and see if we can't April Fool somebody. Wouldn't you just love it?"

"Yeth!" agreed Penelope. (Theirs but to do and die, in the pleasant land of make-believe.)

So they dressed in the complete outfits supplied by Mrs. Trotter from her trip around the world; there were the gay kimonos, the glittering obis tied around their waists, the curious socks like mittens divided with a special space for the big toe, and the "geta"—upraised wooden clogs that clattered noisily along the pavements. A parasol for Jane, and in Penelope's long fluttering pocket-sleeve a fan and a small idol. This much had come around the world to play its part as April Fool. But straight bobbed hair as black as ink and little olive faces, ah! surely these the Lord himself provided for a purpose; and it is not to be wondered at that after much tutoring on Jane's part the little Japanese went faring forth to break in where angels feared to tread.

With Jane's adventures we have no interest. She was probably too sophisticated, too obviously parading for effect to have rare encounters; but her parting words to Penelope had sunk deep in fertile soil: "Remember, Penny dear, you're the little heathen in that pageant, and not Penelope Cooper at all. O Ume San is your name and your father is a ricksha coolie come to America to get rich, and all the other things you had to say in the play just say to any one you meet. Won't it be loads and loads of fun?"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Penelope nodded, spellbound, hypnotized by the curiosity of her dual personality.

"And after you've played April Fool on some one then hurry home to tell me, then we can start all over again."

So, as in the days of Abraham and Lot, they divided the land between them, Jane choosing the rich city quarters to the left, while Penny wandered westward.

And it was a desert. Nothing happened! She clattered along on her amusing "geta" making a prodigious racket; but nothing happened. Nobody came along. Nobody rushed to the front windows. No autos whizzed past. It was too disappointing! Like some overgrown pink butterfly she fluttered from street to street: all empty. And in the course of adventure-seeking she completely lost her bearings. "I'm really-true lythted!" she chuckled to herself, ecstatically, gazing round and round in gleeful bewilderment. For this was as it should be when you went a-wandering. As if his cue had been given him, onto this scene came the Man-Who-Had-Never-Given-A-Cent-To-Missions, strolling down the street absorbed in all the things you are absorbed in when you leave your office for the day.

"Bone buttons!" he ejaculated when he first beheld this lost-strayed-or-stolen child. For, kimonos being feminine apparel, it did not dawn on him but that, en negligee, she had eluded a nurse; until, coming nearer, he beheld the amazing child flop on her knees and bump her little head three times politely before something on the sidewalk.

He peered a little closer. "Good gracious!" he gasped, "an idol!" And hurried nearer.

"Look here," he cried, "what do you think you're doing?"

Scrambling to her feet and grabbing the idol, she deposited it once more inside her sleeve; then bowing at an angle of 45 degrees she got off the much-rehearsed sentence: "I ith lytht, Mr. Honorable Man," she lisped, round-eyed.

The Angel of a Man

GOD'S angels, dear, have six great wings Of silver and of gold:

Two round their heads and two round their hearts

And two round their feet they fold.

The angel of a man I know

Has just two hands—so small—

Yet they're more strong than six great wings

To keep him from a fall!

WILLIAM CANTON.

"I'm a bit hard of hearing," he explained, leaning down: "What did you say?"

"Lotht!" she shouted—then because this unknown ear was so unexpectedly near and strange, and she so truly lost, a sudden pucker trembled on her lips while two sad salt tears trickled from her quaint black eyes.

"There! there!" he soothed, "don't you cry. We'll just go in my house and you shall tell me all about it!" So into his house he had led her, and called for his housekeeper. But this unaccommodating lady was evidently having an afternoon off since neither from front stairs nor back stairs came a sign of life. The Man-Who-Never-Gave-A-Cent-To-Missions returned in some consternation to his library to find the child on her knees once more before the absurd brass idol. He felt a shock of startled repulsion: "Don't do that!" he cried, "not in my house! It's nothing more than a doll, you little heathen. Get up!"

He picked her up bodily and settled her in a big chair opposite his own, where he regarded her helplessly. Pointing at her idol he began thundering in bluff reiteration: "Look—brass; brass eyes, brass ears, brass mouth, brass hands, brass feet, brass heart. Can't hear you! Can't see you! Can't walk! Can't talk! While there's a God in heaven (and he surprised himself by looking up) I can't have you praying to a useless lump of metal while you're with me. It gives me a cold chill. Understand my English?"

"Yeth!" lisped the solemn-eyed youngster, enchanted by this loud-voiced disapproval of her wickedness, and in her turn looking up at the ceiling earnestly as she asked: "Ith there another God up-thairth?"

With great embarrassment but with commendable clumsiness, he hemmed and hawed a hasty explanation of the Christian's God—didn't she know this? Nor that? The fascinated Penelope drank it all in, nodding at the proper places, repeating after him the things he wished. It seemed like Sunday school, somehow! Then he descended to more mundane matters,—her home address for instance....

It was a full hour later that he led her up her front steps and rang a door-bell. Mrs. Cooper gasped with relief: "Oh, Penny dear! Mother's been so worried, dear; where have you been?"

The Man-Who-Never-Gave-A-Cent-To-Missions felt a sudden weakening in his knees: why, this woman was not Japanese—she was Jasper Cooper's wife! He'd seen them in church together a dozen times. Was he dreaming the last hour? But the child had bottled up her thrills too long already—

"Oh moth-er," she cried triumphantly, hopping up and down, "I April-fooled thith really-true man! He wanted to tellyphone the policemen all about me, moth-er! And we've had the nicetht, nicetht time together, haven't we?" She squinted up at her rescuer in frank delight.

"Penny, run and take off the kimono; and Mr. Overdale, do come in and let me thank you properly."

He cleared his throat: "She got me to taking it pretty much in earnest. I—I—well, to tell the truth, Mrs. Cooper, when I saw that adorable child wasting prayers on a heathen idol something snapped inside me. I did unbelievable things, like explaining about God, and," he looked at her with awkward appeal that she would not laugh, "I even tried to teach her a Christian prayer. One my mother used to teach me when I was a boy. I haven't thought of that prayer in over sixty years—not since boyhood."

"I am so glad you taught it to her," she said, simply, "she will never forget it. Penelope's like that."

"I will never forget it, myself," he said huskily. "I never had an experience like this in my whole life. I'm a bachelor, you see; I don't know a thing about children. And I've never believed in missions, never given a red cent for 'em, warned every minister not to come pestering me with appeals for money, even got the committees trained so they won't come begging for this or that; always said missions are fool enterprises—why go to the ends of the earth to take idols away from a lot of perfectly satisfied heathen? And now this one little stray child—"

Mrs. Cooper nodded, pityingly: "There are so many Christians like that! Can't believe till they see with their own eyes what a horror it is to have pure childhood kneel in blindness. Don't you wish God could send a whole procession of little heathen into indifferent homes to arouse them, just as he sent Penelope to you?"

"See here," said Mr. Overdale, "you aren't going so far as to say that God had a hand in all this?"

("He shan't frighten me!" she warned herself.) "Don't you remember how the boy Jesus said, 'Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?' Well, I'm wondering if that isn't the errand that Penny was on this afternoon—her Father's business?"

The Man-Who-Never-Gave-A-Cent-To-Missions fumbled for his hat: "I've had the wind taken out of my sails," he admitted, with a chuckle. "Just give my respects to that blessed little April Fool that broke in where angels fear to tread. I'll come over again, soon, Mrs. Cooper, believe me."

A First-of-April Birthday

By PEGGY

THERE is no time in the whole year when we have more fun than on Bill's birthday which comes the first of April; and last year we had the jolliest time of all because the week before a burglar got into our house through Bill's window, but was frightened away without stealing anything except Bill's clothes! So Bill was very certain that his presents would probably replace the things he had lost, which made the April Fool part of it great fun.

Uncletim was to come over for supper, so Bill heroically said he wouldn't have a speck of a birthday until he arrived, although there were parts of the day that seemed simply endless to both of us. But about five o'clock Uncletim arrived with a box which his chauffeur took to the kitchen; by the time Uncletim reached the front hall Timothy was prancing all around Bill crying: "Happy birthday!" and handing him his present. We had decided that each of us must write a verse to paste on top of our boxes, and if ever boxes were unmistakably boxes for clothing! But you should have seen Bill's face as he opened them.

Little Timothy's poem said:

"When April showers wet the street You'll need some rubbers for your feet."
"Hurrah for you, Tim!" cried Bill, "I guess mother told you I was all out of rubbers, but how'd you ever guess the proper size?"

In our town rubbers are sold in orange-colored boxes, so off came the lid of Bill's as he discovered inside the cunningest little pair of rubber bands! Across the bottom of the box was printed: "Guaranteed to give a perfect fit (of laughter) to any size of boy."

You should have seen Bill laugh! I thought he'd never be able to open my box which read:

"Dear Bill, I knew of nothing better
To work for you than this new sweater."

"You're the finest sister in the world!" he shouted enthusiastically, for the burglar had stolen his sweaters; but when he opened the box he found a glass fruit jar partly filled with boiling water, which made the rest of it full of steamy bubbles all over the sides which our black cook always calls "perspiring."

"You and mother will keep me warm, anyhow," sighed Bill, as he next picked up mother's which read:

Little Jack Frost went up the hill
Watching the stars and moon so still,
Watching the stars and moon so bright

And laughing aloud with all his might.

Little Jack Frost ran down the hill,
Late in the night when the winds were still,

Late in the Fall when the leaves fell down,
Red and yellow and faded brown.

Little Jack Frost walked through the trees,

"Oh," sighed the flowers, "we freeze, we freeze!"

"Oh," sighed the grasses, "we die, we die!"

Said little Jack Frost "Goodbye!
Goodbye!"

Little Jack Frost tripped round and round

Spreading white snow on the frozen ground,

Nipping the breezes, icing the streams,

Chilling the warmth of the sun's bright beams.

But when Dame Nature brought back the Spring,

Brought back the birds to chirp and sing,

Melted the snow and warmed the sky,

Little Jack Frost went pouting by.
The flowers opened their eyes of blue,

Green buds peeped out and grasses grew,

It was so warm and scorched him so
That little Jack Frost was glad to go.

"Here is a jacket to keep warm
Your muscular athletic form."

But alas! alas it was a tiny little "yellow jacket," one of Bill's own specimen insects mounted on cork last summer. Then came Agony with a square box, saying:

"Arctics as a general rule
Are needed for days both icy and cool."

It was a lump of ice!

Father's box read:

"If any stocking should not fit,
Just turn the hose and sprinkle it!"

This, of course, was a little hose so naturally Bill was expecting a joke from Uncletim, too, when his poem read:

"I've just been waiting for the chance To oc-cur to present you with these pants."

As Bill opened the box he was laughing: "This is going to be the biggest April fool of all!" Sure enough, the only thing in the box was a slip of paper saying: "Please run up to the attic as fast as you can, then run down again faster yet."

Off Bill dashed, and when he next appeared he was so breathless he could hardly talk: "I know!" he nodded, "the p-pants are t-t-the w-way I b-breathe!"

"I wouldn't play such a trick on you, my boy," cried Uncletim, "for you're outgrowing those pants every minute! Agony, bring in the ones I asked you to press for me, please."

Agony went out beaming and came back with a box she could hardly hold, for the lid kept rising up! Just as she set it down a series of curious bow-wows came from inside it until poor Bill was almost afraid to open it. But he didn't have to, for it opened itself, and out jumped the friskiest puppy, the liveliest, most surprised and excited puppy you ever saw.

"Does it fit?" Uncletim asked, smiling.

"I should say so!" shouted Bill. And that's why we call our darling dog "Pantaloons." Don't you think it's a perfect name for such an April Fool puppy? Also, you'll be glad to know that up on Bill's bed he found every present we had pretended to give him: actual rubbers, a true sweater, a real jacket, wonderful socks and even the arctics. But the puppy was the best present of all—do you wonder?

CITIZENS OF TWO WORLDS

Romans 12:1, Phil. 3:13-14, 20, I Peter 1:3-5

PREPARED BY C. T. HOLMAN

While a divided allegiance between nations is reprehensible, no such conflict of interests exists between the state and the nation in the American commonwealth. That American is the best citizen of his state who is the most loyal citizen of his country. And that man is the best citizen of earth whose citizenship also is in heaven. The fulfillment of the Master's prayer that God's will be done on earth as in heaven will require that men of heavenly citizenship make the principles of the heavenly kingdom dominate upon the earth. The true Christian is a citizen of two worlds.

Our heavenly citizenship:

1. Gives assurance of a life beyond. And amid the discords, sorrows, and unfulfilled purposes of this world we need that assurance. A writer in a religious journal recently said, "The other day I met a stranger at a hotel in a small Ohio town. He wore a Brotherhood button and I addressed him. He had been summoned from his distant home to the bedside of a student son who was seriously ill. The boy had looked on death calmly, and the father's face shone as he told me how the sick young man has said: 'Father, I have two homes, one here and one yonder, and I shall be happy to go to either.' With glistening eyes the man went on to say to me: 'I tell you, friend, it's a great thing to know when you're down in the Valley of the Shadow, that he is with you.' That father knew. He had tested and proved the truth that Christ conquers even the fear of death. The Lord's friends share his victory over the grave."

2. Gives Christian quality to life in this world. They who live for eternity should live as immortals. The prince may not demean himself as does the beggar. "Noblesse oblige." A heavenly crown calls for heavenly conduct. The glory of the life eternal and supernal should be brought down to irradiate earth by all who possess it as an inheritance. This will require that in small things as in great we shall be found faithful.

*In life's small things be resolute and great
To keep thy muscles trained; knowest thou when Fate*

Thy measure takes, or when she'll say to thee,

"I find thee worthy; do this deed for me?"

3. Is attained through a heavenly fellowship. "For our conversation is in heaven," says the Apostle after describing his struggle for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Christians are bound up with Christ in a kind of inward, organic unity. "For them to live is Christ." Our spiritual life is not original but derived; not self-sustained but dependent. Because Christ lives we live also. Because he is risen we have "risen with him." And the message comes to us, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." Those whose personalities have become identified with that of their Lord have experienced the elevating impulse of the Divine Spirit.

4. Is achieved through the working of the same power of God as that shown in the resurrection of Jesus. Those who are living the life of heavenly citizenship have manifested in them "the exceeding greatness of his power to us who believe, according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead." The same power of God which raised Christ is available for the simple task of everyday Christian living. The writer ran across the following illustration recently: "Niagara's great power is now employed to run the street railways and to propel the machinery of scores of cities and towns throughout Canada and the states. That same power, however, is also employed to light the smallest cottages and to run the poor toiler's sewing machine. It is not too great for small tasks. Similarly, the exhaustless power of God's helping Spirit is sufficient for small achievements as well as for great. It enables one Christian to control his temper and another to die a martyr's death at the stake. As Paul points out, it is good to help a man to be temperate and also help him achieve a transformed character."

A New Venture in Student Fellowship

Report of the Student Conference at the University of Illinois
February 17-19, 1922

By JESSIE DODGE WHITE

From Campus to Conference

During the last few years students have associated themselves together on local campuses because of interest in a common cause, namely, that of making America Christian. Some of these groups have united locally with student volunteers for the purpose of close fellowship in Christian life service. There has been a growing consciousness among many of these students, quite pronounced within the recent months, for the need of some affiliation to bind together in fellowship all students who conscientiously determine to meet the challenge of serving Christ in America. After receiving many requests from the scattered groups to meet for round-table discussion the committee on recruiting of the Home Mission Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions extended an invitation to a special conference at the University of Illinois from February 17 to 19.

Personnel

When the conference was finally assembled, registration showed fifty-four student representatives (twenty-six men and twenty-eight women) from thirty-three colleges and universities in thirteen different states from Kansas to Massachusetts. Messages from California, Washington, Oregon, Texas, Tennessee, Florida, Maryland and other states conveyed to those present the fact that many life-service groups were following the conference with prayerful interest and waiting to receive the findings. The student volunteer movement for foreign missions, the international committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, the student committee and the Personnel Division National Board Young Women's Christian Association, the Home Missions Council and Council of Women for Home Missions and boards of seven denominations were represented by national secretaries (called by the students "adult advisors"), who made invaluable contributions to the conference. Dr. John R. Mott, in his greeting said, "I am deeply interested in the conference to be held at the University of Illinois this month and wish to convey to the delegates the assurance of my cooperation in prayer."

The Set-Up

Realizing the various types of groups represented and wishing to make it essentially a conference "of, by and for students" no program was outlined until the conference assembled and chose a chairman, secretary and three standing committees on program, findings and resolutions.

"The World Reach of Home Missions"

The crying need for men and women to champion the cause of Christ in the most remote parts of America was presented in a forceful way by Dr. Charles A. Brooks of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, in an address on the "World Reach of Home Missions." Several students told of their interesting experiences in working among the neglected people in the mountain regions, with the Indians, with the migrant groups in the summer service carried on by the Council of Women for Home Missions among the migrant groups and with the industrial masses in our cities.

Reports and Round Table Discussion

The actual work of the conference began with reports from many of the colleges. Varying types of groups seemed to be represented, such as the homeland associates, a home service band, fellowships for American service, ministerial clubs, world fellowship clubs, life-service groups. While these varied considerably in their plans of organization, in every case the motive for association was a desire for fellowship.

The findings committee in interpreting these reports presented the following two main questions:

1. Can any present national organization answer the apparent need for affiliation of all students in local campus groups interested in Christian life-service in America?

2. If not, what shall be the nature of any new movement, if one is necessary?

After Mr. St. John had explained why the student volunteer movement could extend its fellowship only to those students purposing to go to the foreign field, and after Mr. Bell, representing the National Council of Christian Associations, had told of the forward looking plans for recruiting of the student department committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, the assembly was divided into seven discussion groups to consider these two questions.

World or American Fellowship?

From the intensive and free discussion in these groups as well as from the floor of the convention the findings committee endeavored to interpret the consensus of opinion thus expressed and reported to the conference that there seemed to be a united sentiment favoring some kind of a student fellowship movement for life service but while some felt there should be a fellowship of students for world service, others held that there should be a fellowship of students for American service. After a spirited discussion following the report of the committee, an informal vote indicated that a large majority of students were in favor of the American service idea. It was voted that a committee be appointed to draw up a statement of purpose instead of a constitution and that a committee nominate members for an executive committee.

The Purpose

The purpose committee prepared the following which was unanimously adopted:

1. Our ultimate purpose is a fellowship of all students dedicated to Christian life service.

2. Since there is a fellowship of students dedicated to Christian life service abroad it seems expedient that we devote our attention to unite students dedicated to Christian life service in America until our ultimate purpose can be realized.

3. Our present purpose is to unite the prayers, study and vigorous effort of those interested in the task of making America Christian for the friendly service of the world.

4. Furthermore, we shall purpose to enlist the aid of and to cooperate in every way with existing agencies sharing our purpose to Christianize the world.

The Executive Committee

The conference elected the following delegates as members of the executive committee: N. U. McConaughy, Princeton Seminary, Princeton, N. J., chairman; M. Glenn Harding, University of Chicago, '21; Mary A. Hart, Baker University, '21; Walter A. Mueller, University of Illinois, '23; Vera Rice, Denison University, '23; Henry C. Rogers, McCormick Seminary, '23; T. Thomas Wylie, Ohio State University, '23. (Two members, one from the South and the other from the Coast, are still to be chosen.)

This executive committee of nine is responsible for carrying out the provisions in the purpose, for formulating a definite policy as to membership and as to relationships with cooperating organizations, for issuing and disseminating reports from time to time, and for outlining a program of extension. The conference expressed a desire that the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions lend its support to the new movement and the executive committee asked for fellowship, this new student fellowship strikes a bold, broad challenge that shall ring forth like a clarion call throughout the colleges of this land where there are students ready and willing to rally to the standard of Christ with life-service in order to make America Christian for the friendly service of the world.

Minnesota's Invitation and Minnesota's Opportunity

The opportunity of a lifetime has come to the Baptists of Minnesota—and the Northwest. We are to be the hosts to the great international convention of Baptist young people. The Twin Cities are, perhaps, more responsible than the rest for the plans for entertainment, but we all want the state and Northwest to share in the blessing of helping to make this an epoch-making event in the life of our denomination. We are asking for no financial support outside of the Twin Cities—aside from the one dollar registration fee which is paid by all delegates—but we want your prayers, your cooperation, and best of all, your presence.

Yes, the Twin Cities are awake to the spiritual opportunities of the convention. Not in the memory of any of us has there been any event that has so aroused the enthusiasm of our young people and the churches. For, while this is to be a young people's convention, the older members of the church, especially members of official boards, will derive great benefit from attendance.

Under the efficient leadership of a strong Twin City Baptist committee consisting of Dr. George Earl, A. F. Holmer, Harry W. White, Henry Marks, Miss Fannie Brant, and Rev. E. A. Valiant, a wonderful organization has been perfected. An advisory committee of state workers is cooperating. The following committees have been appointed and are actively planning for the great convention: publicity, registration, transportation, ushers, music, pulpit supply, side trips, finance, halls and decorations, programs and badges, entertainment, information, exhibits, and reception.

As we go to press we are in the midst of a campaign registering the delegates in the Twin City churches. At first our aim was to register 3,000. This has gone to 4,000 and the committee dares not suggest the possibilities beyond this. With so large a registration of the Twin City churches and with the enthusiasm that is already manifest in the state and Northwest, and with encouraging reports coming from all sections of the United States and Canada, we have every reason to believe this will be the greatest religious gathering of young people in recent years.

The program committee is alive to the opportunity furnished by so great a convention and will bring together the strongest group of speakers and conference leaders ever assembled for a similar occasion.

The entertainment committee is putting forth every effort to secure the best possible hotel accommodations at a minimum rate in order to make it possible for more

The Student Fellowship for Christian Life-Service

Not forgetful of the present purpose of the movement to unite in fellowship all students dedicated to Christian life service in America, because of the ultimate purpose as stated the conference adopted the following name: "Student Fellowship for Christian Life Service. It was voted that the members of the conference be the nucleus of the student fellowship. Immediately following this action Mr. Burton St. John, the candidate secretary of the student volunteer movement, stated that for the past month the secretaries at the national headquarters of the movement had been praying daily for this conference and that he felt that this might mark as memorable a day in the history of the Christian church as the Northfield Conference.

Conceived in a great and pressing need, born in prayer and consecration, and inspired throughout with a burning desire

International Uniform Lesson for April 16

EASTER LESSON

John 20:19-31. Golden Text: Luke 24:34.

Introduction

Aside from Matthew the gospel recorders begin with the resurrection at the point where the stone was rolled away. Matthew goes into no detail, speaking vaguely of the event. During the forty days intervening between the resurrection and the ascension there are recorded eleven appearances of Jesus, always in a mysterious and unexpected way. The places of meeting in today's lesson are in some houses in Jerusalem.

Lesson

The evening of the resurrection day, the disciples were gathered in a room in Jerusalem, the doors shut out of fear of the Jews, when suddenly Jesus stood in their midst saying, "Peace be unto you." And then—oh, divine understanding of weak human nature—unasked he showed them his wounded hands and his pierced side. Reassuringly he repeated "Peace be unto you!" The commission followed: "As the Father has sent me, even so send I you," and "he breathed on them," saying, "Receive ye the Holy Spirit. Whose soever sins ye forgive, they are forgiven unto them: whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained unto them."

But Thomas, called Didymus, was not with the disciples at this time. When they reported the occurrence he refused to accept it. Only if he could put his own human finger into the print left by the nails and his hand into the wounded side would he believe in a risen Lord.

Eight days passed and the disciples were again assembled, Thomas with them, the doors closed as on the previous occasion, when Jesus again stood in their midst and said "Peace be unto you!" And then to the doubting Thomas, with that infinite love and understanding that comprehends every dark experience of the honest doubter, calling him by name, "Thomas, reach hither thy finger and see my hands; and reach hither thy hand and put it into my side: and be not faithless but believing." Who could longer doubt such a Lord? But to the one who must be convinced by visible evidence comes not the greatest blessing, for "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed."

Leading Thoughts

1. Through death of the body the soul passes into a freer, larger life. 2. It is the resurrection that gives significance to the crucifixion—merely a crucified Christ would not have given mortals hope of immortality—it takes a crucified and risen Lord. 3. "The great Easter truth is not that we are to live newly after death.... but that we are to be new here and now by the power of the resurrection; not so much that we are to live forever as that we are to live nobly now because we are to live forever."—Phillips Brooks.

New Easter Service

The department of missionary education announces the new Easter service for Baptist Bible schools. It is entitled "The Dawning Light," and is now ready for distribution on receipt of order cards or request. The service is in two parts, one for the use of the congregation and one for the use of those directing the exercises. The service is built upon the theme: "The Kingdom and the Nations." It has the missionary flavor and is a fitting conclusion for the graded foreign mission story period in the Sunday school. This new service has a choice selection of poems for recitations and other speaking parts. The music portions of the service include some of the strongest hymns of the Christian church.

The service has been supplied to all Sunday schools ordering it in connection with the graded foreign mission stories. Churches and schools wishing to use the new service may secure copies from the department of missionary education, or the literature department of the General Board of Promotion, or from state convention headquarters.

Church School of Missions

Church schools of missions now being promoted by the department of missionary education, are being multiplied all over the country. The church school of missions is the new idea of great promise in mission study. It is the whole church membership organized into graded classes, studying simultaneously for a period of from six to ten weeks, the whole world field.

It is not a theory. It is a clearly conceived and successfully operated plan of missionary education which seeks to include the entire church in its classes. It has passed beyond the experimental stage, and is being commended on every hand. It has been tried by many churches large and small, city, suburban and rural, in our own and other denominations throughout the United States, and all are enthusiastic about it. It is adaptable to local conditions. It works.

Multigraph Records

So many requests are being received for special information about church schools of missions, that the department of missionary education is preparing a multigraph record of successful church schools of missions and sample programs and schedules. These will be mailed out on request from pastors and churches.

Finding Time to Do It

By SELDON L. ROBERTS.

One of the most common reasons given for doing nothing definite in a given church towards preparing people for leadership and for teaching is: "We do not have time when regular attention can be given to this work." It would seem that most of our people believe training to be necessary but that opportunity is lacking.

Some of our more enterprising pastors to whom this problem of time is just as pressing as it can be to any other, but in whose heart the determination to get the important work done was more urgent have found the time. I pass on one of their methods for the encouragement and guidance of others. The following is a somewhat composite picture, but each statement has had the successful experience of a determined pastor or teacher as its basis.

One week is selected a month or six weeks in advance to be cleared of other engagements and held sacred to the purpose of attending an intensive training class.

Text books are secured and placed in the hands of each member of the class at least four weeks before class work begins and reference books are made available. Thus a good amount of careful study is secured before class work begins. The people who enter these classes are usually a select group who wish to prepare for definite and serious service.

Class sessions are held each evening for five or six evenings for one and one-half or two hours, during which time by discussion, questions, prepared papers, recitation and drill the material of the text book is mastered, and its application to church work thought through. One evening some days later is taken for review and the regular examination taken or in some cases the examination is taken on the last night of the series.

The results secured as witnessed by pastors well acquainted with training work and as shown by the quality of examination papers submitted by classes following this plan, are rather better than that from the average class in similar churches working one session each week. There is something about the sharp, determined drive, which in the hands of serious-minded people, yields splendid results. The course of study used has been the "New Standard," Keystone Education, first and second years for foundation material; and the special studies prepared for the third year of this course for special training and skill in a particular field of work. The fact that this course of study is divided into ten-lesson units makes it quite usable in this intensive study and long-lesson-period plan. This plan has worked well under varied conditions.

Our Own Folks

Dr. Broady

AN APPRECIATION BY FRANK PETERSON, D.D.

With the passing of Knut Oscar Broady, March 13, 1922, the Baptists of Sweden have lost a leader whom they enjoyed to follow. Though of a military bearing, he was a man of a simple childlike faith in God. His character, governed by the highest ideals, his magnetic personality, his eloquence and convincing power as a public speaker, with his spiritual force that swept away opposition like chaff before the wind, made him a leader whom the people felt was safe to follow.

He was born in Stockholm, ninety years ago, the city in which most of the work of his long and busy life was carried out. At the age of twenty-two he came to America and upon his arrival he became acquainted with Rev. Gustof Palmquist, who was then a missionary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society and who organized the first Swedish Baptist church in America. The coming in touch with this man of God led to his conversion and baptism. Almost immediately he felt the calling of the Holy Spirit to the Christian ministry. In obedience to this call he determined to give himself the best preparation possible for this work. Six years were spent at Madison University, New York. This brought him up to the time of the outbreak of the Civil War. His revolt against slavery induced him to take up arms against a system which would tolerate human enslavement.

In the army his career was a brilliant one. By his fine military bearing, his courage and tact, he soon distinguished himself and was soon made colonel of his regiment. He partook in thirty different engagements, and as a token of this conflict he bore the scar of a wound in his left shoulder until the day of his death.

On his return from the war he fell in with another messenger of God, Andreas Wiberg, who was then in the employ of the Publication Society. This meeting led to his decision to go back to his fatherland and cast in his lot with the Baptists of Sweden. He was sent there by the American Foreign Mission Society in 1866. It is a most interesting coincidence that all three of our national societies should have a part in shaping this man's course for his life work. Palmquist of the Home Mission Society became instrumental to his conversion; Wiberg, of the Publication Society, to his call to Sweden; and the Foreign Mission Society to his support during fifty-six years in which he did his great life work.

Through his leadership the Bethel Theological Seminary of Stockholm was made a going concern. Immediately this school began to exist—a powerful influence—and has been the most potent factor in the development of the Baptist cause in Sweden.

There are now in Sweden 451 ordained pastors caring for 675 churches with an aggregate membership of about 65,000. Such a standing could never have been attained had it not been for the educational work of which Dr. Broady was long at the head.

Had Dr. Broady limited his activities to the class room alone he would have achieved great service and yet may have been comparatively unknown. It was as a preacher and a public speaker that he was carried by an admiring public. His audiences were not made up of the Baptists alone. All classes of people thronged to hear him. Even the king, Carl XV, was attracted to his meeting if he might hear for himself whether the reports he had heard of this militant speaker were true. Evidently he was impressed for on passing out he remarked to his chancellor: "That man's preaching will beat the devil."

His personal influence upon his students won their admiration until, almost, it bordered upon the danger line. Some of them would imitate his voice and mannerism until they were in danger of losing their own individuality. Sweden, America and many mission lands have great occasion for thanksgiving for this man's life.

Through 120 Years

The one hundred and twentieth anniversary of the First Church, Washington, D. C., was celebrated March 5-9. The pastor, Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, preached the historical sermon the morning of March 5, President and Mrs. Harding being present, also Secretary of Labor Davis, who is a regular attendant. In the evening Hon. William J. Bryan delivered an address. March 7, the actual birthday of the mother church of all the churches of the District of Columbia, a tableau was given representing the most important and outstanding events in the history of the church. March 8 Col. John Temple Graves gave an address on "Armageddon," the final, fateful battle of good and evil in the world. On the evening of March 9 those connected with the church gathered for devotional service and reunion of former acquaintances with refreshments.

Dr. Tupper in his sermon stated that this church was organized March 7, 1802, with the following members: Charles P. Polk, Cephas Fox, Charles Rogers, John Buchan, Jos. Burrows and Sarah Burrows. At that time congress was in session for the second time in Washington. The city contained less than 4,000 inhabitants. Pennsylvania Avenue was then an unimproved road. The first preaching was supplied and the ordinances administered for the church by Rev. William Parkinson, then chaplain to congress. In January, 1807, an invitation to the pastoral charge was given to Rev. Obadiah B. Brown of New Jersey, who entered upon his duties February 21. This pastoral connection continued forty-three years. In 1814 Oliver Comstock, a member of congress from New York, was baptized and received as a member of the church and was licensed to preach the gospel. In 1819 he was ordained to the ministry by this church, and relinquished political life for the office of an evangelist of Christ. The Bible school was organized in 1819.

Rev. Brown served the church for forty-three years and was succeeded by Rev. Stephen P. Hill in October, 1850, who was succeeded by Rev. Dr. Samson, President of Columbia College, now George Washington University, who served for three years without pay, and was succeeded by Dr. A. D. Gillette in 1863 who filled the office until failing health caused him to resign.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Cuthbert served the church for eighteen years and was succeeded by Rev. Dr. Stakely in 1888. During the pastorate of Dr. Stakely the present splendid edifice was erected. Rev. E. B. Pollard served as acting pastor from 1900 to 1902, and was followed by Rev. Charles F. Winbigler who was pastor of the church until January, 1909. Rev. W. W. McMaster entered upon his pastorate in January, 1910, and served until September, 1918.

Under the energetic leadership of Dr. Tupper, who entered upon his ministry on Dec. 25, 1918, the church has regained its youth, moving forward to the extent that its membership and contributions have doubled.
